These gambling transactions amount to over $30,000,000,000—four times the value of the products of all the farms of the United States, half the value of all the land and buildings, one third the census valuation of all the wealth of every kind in the country.

Last year there were sold on the stock exchange 43,399,710 shares of Reading, fifteen times the total amount of Reading stock in existence. Of the Union Pacific, Harriman's road, there were sold 36,751,600 shares, twenty times as much as existed.

Ninety-one and one-half per cent of these transactions, according to Thomas W. Lawson, are nothing except bets that the price goes up or down. They are as much gambling as betting on a horse race or on the card that comes out of the faro box, or on the odd-or-even fall of the dice.

Mr. Speaker, this is gambling on a colossal scale. Carried on as it is, it takes the money of the country out of legitimate channels of trade, where interest rates are largely controlled by the sober business judgment of business men who do a fair business for a fair profit. They can not compete in the payment of interest rates with reckless gamblers, and banks that wince under the criticism that they are not conservative and careful with the money of their depositors take their chances with these gamblers too often, to the injury of their depositors and the country.

The panic of 1907, I say again, was largely due to the banks that cater to the stock gamblers, absorbing a large portion of the money of the country to be used by men engaged in reckless gambling. They were willing to pay any rate of interest that was necessary to obtain the money.

In no other country than the United States are incorporated banks permitted to be a part of the machinery of stock gambling. In no other country are the methods of stock gamblers such as to require the constant use for that sole purpose of hundreds of millions of dollars of other people's money. In London, Paris, Berlin, Frankfort, and Amsterdam gamblers in stock must use their own money and their own credit as if they were playing at Monte Carlo instead of on a stock exchange.

This difference in stock gambling accounts for the great fluctuations in the rates of interest in New York as compared with the stability of European financial centers. In New York call money may be 3 per cent one day and 50 per cent the next day, which is unknown in Europe.

By bidding up the rate of interest higher than legitimate business can pay, stock gamblers are able to draw from productive industry its means for supplying pay rolls, for carrying on manufacturing, for distributing goods, and for moving crops.

This drains the reserve money of the United States to Wall street. A commercial bank, charging merchants and manufacturers 6 per cent interest, can not afford to pay interest on deposits in competition with the Wall street banks, which can frequently get 20 to 50 per cent on the stock exchange for the use of their deposits. Thus this reserve money gravitates to the banks that can afford to pay high interest.

Wall street in this way became a great funnel into which the savings of the people, instead of being available to the local manufacturer or the local storekeeper, were driven by higher rates of interest to the stock exchanges.

Without the banks' assistance this whole system would be destroyed and the stock gamblers in New York would have to gamble as do the stock gamblers in London, Paris, Frankfort, and other European bourses where the form of actual delivery in speculative transactions is not gone through with. Such a thing as a London stockbroker having the Bank of England or a Paris broker the Bank of France certify his check in advance and thus furnish the funds for him to gamble with is unheard of. The European stockbrokers gamble as do the London race-track bookmakers, who have their regular settlement day at Tattersalls.

The forms which the New York and Chicago stock exchanges go through to evade the gambling laws are in vogue nowhere else.

The French and German Governments treat stock gambling somewhat as race-track gambling is now treated in this country. But these continental governments go further. They even decide in what stocks and bonds they will allow gambling, many of them forbidding gambling in the price of farm products.

If it is important to stop betting on cards, roulette, and horse racing—and it is—how much more important that we should rid legitimate business of the contaminating evil of Wall street and board of trade gambling.

This bill will stop betting on the price of other people's property here. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he will not accept an amendment in the nature of an additional section to read something like this:

SEC. 869e. That the court having jurisdiction shall charge the grand jury each term to investigate violations of this act.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I should have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. I want to say that we have a provision of that sort in the law in Illinois, and if it has any tendency at all it is to make of it a farce, because to charge a grand jury—with us every month—with the same thing where there is no offense committed, and no consideration given to the subject in the end, tends to make a laughing matter of it; and for years that was the result. We enforce the law now, but not on account of that provision.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not think it will do any harm.

Mr. MANN. It has done harm with us, and I am sure no one would be in favor of putting it in the law again.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This House has heretofore adopted similar measures. The gentleman says: "What is the use of charging the grand jury when there are no bucket shops and no violations of the law?" Then the grand jury would be very brief in their investigation and thus deter their coming. But the gentleman from Kansas says that there are a number of bucket shops all over the District of Columbia. Now, if there are five or six dozen—some on top of the ground and some under the ground, some in the garrets of the hotels and some in the cellar—the grand jury would be very apt, if they were charged every term to investigate the violations, in the course of twelve months to get all of these broken up, and thus the grand jury could attend to this matter in a few months. I think it will do no harm to adopt the amendment, and I hope the gentleman from Kansas will accept it. This amendment will show the court that Congress deems the evil very dangerous and should be wiped out.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I shall offer no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee to offer the amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 869e. Courts having jurisdiction shall charge the grand jury each term to investigate violations of this act.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The amendment will be considered as pending. I had just started, Mr. Speaker, to say that the District of Columbia Commissioners are anxious that this shall become a law. They had to resort to prosecutions for bucketing and bucket-shop keeping under the general gaming laws last winter. They want a law that is specific on the subject, and are anxious that this bill as reported by the committee shall become a law. Now, if there is nothing further to be said on the subject, I ask for a vote.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does it relate to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GILLETT. No; it is a separate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 869f. Any person who, with intent to conduct, promote, or carry on in any manner whatever any "bucket shop," or who, with intent to aid, assist, or abet in the conducting, promoting, or carrying on of any such "bucket shop," shall deposit with, send, or transmit by any telegraph company or telephone company, or by any wire owned or controlled or leased by any such corporation, any dispatch, message, or market quotation from one State or Territory into another State or Territory, or from or into the District of Columbia, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished for the first offense by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, and for the second and each other offense punished by imprisonment for not more than five years.

SEC. 869g. No common carrier, or corporation, or employee thereof, shall receive for transmission, or transmit, or send from one State or Territory into another State or Territory, or from or into the District of Columbia, any dispatch, message, or market quotation prohibited by section 869f of this act; and every person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to the same penalties as provided in section 869f.

SEC. 869h. No common carrier, corporation, or person engaged in the business of conveying for hire messages, news, or information from one State to another by telegraph or telephone shall purchase or receive the market quotations of any exchange or board of trade in one State and transmit or deliver or sell them to any person, association, copartnership, or corporation, who or which, in his, its, or their own behalf, or as agent, is engaged in another State in the business of conducting a "bucket shop;" and no such common carrier, corporation, or person, shall permit any telegraph or telephone wire owned, controlled, or leased by it or him, to any other person, to be used to convey or transmit such market quotations from one State to any person, association, copartnership, or corporation, who or which, in his, or its own behalf, or as agent, is engaged in the business of conducting in another State such "bucket shop;" and every such common carrier, corporation, or person, and every officer and agent thereof who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to the same penalties and punishment as provided in section 869f hereof.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill. This is a bill to prohibit the maintenance and establishment of bucket shops in the District of Columbia. It has been carefully considered by the committee, and I understand there is no objection to it. This proposed amendment attempts to regulate the business of the telegraph and telephone companies and other common carriers in their transactions through the various States. Unless the matter is very carefully considered by some committee, I do not propose, if I can prevent it, to have the matter disposed of in this way.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, this undoubtedly does refer to others besides the District, but it also applies and directly carries out the objects of this bill, which are to prevent bucket shopping here. Now, one of the best ways to prevent that is to prevent the bucket shops here from getting the information upon which their existence depends, and therefore so far my amendment explicitly carries out the purposes of the act. It does also go farther. It also forbids any common carriers in the United States assisting bucket shops anywhere in the United States, and I am sorry that my friend objects to so worthy a proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that it is a worthy proposition. That is the difficulty. The gentleman offers an amendment and it is impossible to tell either what its effect will be or what it means, and under the methods in which the business of this House is done I propose to have such amendment properly considered and properly framed before I shall give my consent to it.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Why he considers that it is impossible to understand it. It seems to me that it is very lucid.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I suppose it is because of my lack of comprehension and not because of the lack of ability on the part of the gentleman to properly frame it, and upon that ground alone I am satisfied to insist on my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. This is a bill "to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, relative to gambling, bucket shops, and bucketing.'" The amendment applies not only to the District of Columbia, but journeys elsewhere. The scope of the amendment applies to the various States and Territories and to commerce among the States. It seems to the Chair it is not germane, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SALE OF GAS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 18513) to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act relative to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia," approved June 6, 1896, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia," approved June 6, 1896, and all remedies therein provided, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and all pending proceedings thereunder shall be vacated, and no judgment, decree, finding, permit, or valuation of any kind mentioned or intended to be mentioned in said section shall be made or ascertained.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask that the report accompanying this bill be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the report accompanying this bill be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. O Mr. Speaker, let us know what it is.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is there to be no explanation of this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there any objection to the report being read?

Mr. MANN. That has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has been given that the report shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I intended to ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires in his own time or the time of any other gentleman who takes the floor, that may be done.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his request to have the report printed in the RECORD, I will ask unanimous consent to have it read in my time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well. That is perfectly immaterial to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the privilege to print the report in the RECORD, which was granted by unanimous consent, be canceled.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that reading a report from the Clerk's desk is of very little practical value in the explanation of a bill, and certainly the committee owes it to the House that some one make an oral statement of the real facts in the case.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, that will be done.

Mr. MANN. Let the report be printed in the RECORD. I therefore object to the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18513) "to repeal section 5 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia,' approved June 6, 1896," report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Two gas companies supply gas in the District of Columbia. The larger of the two companies is the Washington Gaslight Company, which was incorporated by act of Congress passed July 8, 1848 (9 Stat. L., 702), with a capital stock of $50,000, and it supplies the territory east of Rock Creek. The smaller company is the Georgetown Gaslight Company, which supplies the territory west of Rock Creek. It was incorporated July 20, 1854 (10 Stat. L., 786), with a capital stock not to exceed $150,000. This sum represents its present capital stock.

The capital stock of the Washington Gaslight Company has been increased from time to time, and at present its authorized capital stock is $2,600,000.

Capital stock of the Washington Gaslight Company.

July 8, 1848 (9 Stat. L., 702), charter	$50,000
August 2, 1852 (10 Stat. L., 734), increase of	300,000
January 3, 1855 (10 Stat. L., 835), increase of	150,000
May 24, 1866 (14 Stat. L., 53), increase of	500,000
May 29, 1872 (17 Stat. L., 192), increase of	200,000
NOTE.—With the privilege of increasing the capital stock $1,000,000 (the said increase not to be made from undivided profits accrued or thereafter to accrue)—
between 1873 and 1876 there was paid in	300,000
and between 1876 and 1882	500,000
was issued to stockholders share for share. (See statement of the Washington Gaslight Company, p. 6, report of Senate committee to accompany S. 2918, dated July 7, 1886.)
June 6, 1896, section 5 (29 Stat. L., 251), increase of	600,000
Total amount of authorized capital stock	2,600,000
Certificates of indebtedness outstanding bearing 6 per cent interest per annum	2,600,000

Five hundred thousand dollars of capital stock of the Washington Gaslight Company has been distributed as stock dividends and, $2,600,000 of stock dividends in form of certificates of indebtedness has been issued, making in the aggregate $3,100,000 extra stock dividends.

The object of the present bill is to repeal section 5 of the act of June 6, 1896. That section reads as follows:

"That neither the Washington Gaslight Company nor the Georgetown Gaslight Company shall hereafter issue any greater number of shares of stock than shall be equal to the actual cash value of said plants and necessary cost of the construction of future extensions or future enlargement of plants, which cash value and cost of extensions shall first be ascertained and authorized upon petition therefor to the supreme court of the District of Columbia under such regulations as the chief justice and the justices thereof shall prescribe; also, if either of the said corporations shall desire hereafter to issue bonds upon their property, secured by mortgage or otherwise, upon petition therefor to said court, setting forth the necessity thereof and the amount of stock issued and outstanding, it may be and shall be lawful for said court, or the chief justice and justices thereof, as the case may be, or one of them, upon public notice, to be prescribed by the rules of said court, to permit the issuance of such bonds and mortgage as desired: Provided, That the amount of stock and bonds issued shall not exceed the actual cash value of said plants and the cost of such extensions or enlargement of plants: And provided further, That the Washington Gaslight Company is hereby authorized to issue such additional amount of capital stock as will provide for the conversion into such stock of its outstanding certificates of indebtedness, which conversion of said certificates is hereby authorized to an amount not exceeding $600,000."

In June, 1907, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in general term, passed a rule for procedure under said section.

No action was taken under section 5 of this act by either of the gas companies until the month of June, 1907, when the Georgetown Gaslight Company filed its ex parte petition in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, setting forth that its stock had been fully paid; that it had issued no bonds; that its entire floating debt did not exceed $60,000, and that it desired to issue additional stock to equal the total cash value of its plant and the extensions and enlargements thereof, as provided in said section 5 of the act of June 6, 1896. A copy of this petition, with rule to show cause, was served on the Attorney-General of the United States, who appeared in the case by the United States attorney, and on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The cause was referred to the auditor of that court (whose office is that of a master in chancery) to take testimony on the actual cash value of the plant. Testimony was taken before him, and he has filed his report, but it has not been confirmed because of legal proceedings in the case of the Washington Gaslight Company. A summary of the auditor's report shows:

Valuation of Georgetown Gaslight Company property.

Land	$42,823.90
Buildings	42,705.30
Apparatus	59,108.50
Gas holders	36,300.00
Street mains	167,030.60
595 street-lamp services	5,950.00
225 lampposts	1,575.00
Consumers' meters and connections	18,623.00
Working capital	30,000.00
Value of franchise, rights, and good will	66,661.00
Total actual cash value	470,777.30

In his valuation of the company's "plant" the auditor included the value of its land, buildings and machinery, apparatus, personal property, street mains, gas holders, consumers' meters, working capital ($30,000), value of franchise, rights, and good will ($66,661), but did not allow the gas company for 2,025 consumers' service pipes leading from the main to the house meter paid for by the consumer, although the company claimed that these services should be valued at $16 each. Exceptions have been filed to this report by the corporation counsel on behalf of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, particularly in reference to the valuation as part of the "plant," of franchise, rights, and good will, and working capital. These exceptions are pending and have not been heard because the Washington Gaslight Company on November 5, 1907, filed its petition in the same court for the ascertainment of the actual cash value of its "plant" and the cost of future extensions or enlargement of the same. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia appeared, by the corporation counsel, and presented a motion to dismiss the petition on the ground that section 5 of the act of June 6, 1896, was unconstitutional in that, among other reasons, the power given the court was not a judicial power. The court overruled the motion. An application was made to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia for a writ of prohibition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which writ was awarded on the grounds mentioned, and all proceedings under section 5 have been stayed until the Supreme Court of the United States shall determine whether that section is constitutional and valid. The opinion of said court of appeals is reported in volume 36, No. 8, of the Washington Law Reporter, at page 114.

Aside from the fact that section 5 as it now stands has been declared unconstitutional by the court of appeals (whose decision is presumably correct) and should therefore be removed from the statute books, its practical effect is to deny adequate protection to the consumer and the public, because proceedings thereunder are ex parte, and the valuation to be made depends solely on witnesses furnished by the gas companies, and there are no funds which are available to the District of Columbia to employ experts to value the gas plants on the part of the public, and therefore no fair valuation can be had under the present law.

The corporation counsel was obliged to submit the case on the facts solely on cross-examination of the witnesses produced by the Georgetown Gaslight Company.

When the Georgetown Gaslight Company's case first came before the court, the presiding justice stated:

"The simple question here is to ascertain the cash value of the plant. The court has nothing to do with the subsequent action of the gas company in issuing new stock. It may not issue it, for all the court knows or cares. It simply ascertains the cash value of the plant, and presents that fact to the gas company for such action as it may deem proper to take in the premises. It occurs to the court that the most the representatives of the United States and the District of Columbia would be expected to do would be to see that the testimony presented was fair and subjected to the usual cross-examination for the purpose of testing its accuracy. That, however, is a matter for the representatives of the United States and the District."

There is, too, a serious ambiguity in the act in that the court is to ascertain the actual cash value of the "plant," which the auditor holds to mean franchises, rights, good will, and working capital, although the charters do not grant a perpetual franchise. The auditor has arrived at this conclusion on the ground that Congress intended to protect those who dealt in gas stocks. If this construction be sustained and the ex parte character of the judicial inquiry is to be maintained, these companies will be allowed to capitalize their profits furnished by the consumers of gas on the testimony of their own witnesses, and thereby secure a valuation which will, if it becomes vested by judicial decision, require reasonable profit thereon, and thus forever prevent a reduction of the price of gas below a fair profit on the accumulated profits of the gas companies, plus tangible property. The valuation of the plant of the gas compaies and the price of gas can not be separated. Under the law the courts will not allow the question of the price of gas to be examined, but will capitalize earnings or dividends, thus authorizing the companies to charge a price for gas which will afford a fair return on such increased capital, although gas may be furnished at a less price for a fair profit without such increase of capital stock.

The repeal of the act will take nothing away from the companies or their stockholders, because they can still distribute their surplus earnings as dividends. Section 5 can be now repealed without injury to anyone, because no right has become vested by any judgment or decree.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Can not we have the report read; is there anything in it we should not hear?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have just asked for that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, if gentlemen desire the report read, I withdraw my objection, but I had rather have the gentleman from Kansas explain it. I dare say the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not listen to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas can have the report read in his own time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to repeal section 5 of the gas act passed in 1896. Section 5 of that act gives the supreme court of the District of Columbia authority to find the value of the gas properties here in the District. The section proposed to be repealed, I am informed, was agreed to in conference twelve years ago when a gas bill was before Congress, and that section did not have consideration in either the House or Senate at that time. Last year the Washington Gaslight Company filed a petition in the supreme court of the District petitioning the court to ascertain the value of its properties. The auditor for the District is ex officio or was made a master in chancery to take evidence as to the value of the gas plant and its property. The first objection to the section was made by the commissioners and by the corporation counsel when the method of ascertaining this value was under consideration by the court.

The court prescribed the rules under which evidence should be taken and the value of the property ascertained. These rules limited the investigation to the evidence offered by the petitioner, the gas company, and all the United States district attorney or the corporation counsel were permitted to do under the rules prescribed by the court was merely to cross-examine the witnesses offered by the gas company touching the several questions affecting the value of its property. Indeed, the question occurred to the commissioners for the first time, that they in any event had no appropriation out of which they could secure experts to make an investigation of the value of the property and offer evidence in the case. The commissioners before the committee insisted that under the procedure in the court they had no adequate opportunity of showing whether or not the value fixed by the gas company's officers and experts was a fair value or not. They were merely permitted to cross-examine the witnesses. It is contended by the corporation counsel that the value of the franchise, for example, was taken into consideration by the auditor in fixing the value of the company's property and that upon every ground they objected to that element in the value of the company's property.

The franchise cost the company nothing and it may be terminated by Congress at any time, yet it appeared in the evidence that the franchise and good will were estimated at $66,661. The commissioners directed the corporation counsel to take every step that was open to him for the protection of the District and the consumers of the gas here from an unreasonable increase in the capital stock of the gas company. The corporation counsel, upon the instructions of the commissioners, went into court and filed every pleading that was available. The result of the efforts of the corporation counsel is, or was up to the time this report was made, the court of appeals of the District of Columbia had decided that section 5, under which the value of the gas property was ascertained, was unconstitutional, and the case has been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and, I think, is pending there now. The question raised by the commissioners before the committee, and the appeal to it which led to a favorable report on the bill and its being here to-day, was upon this proposition: Under the interpretation of the court only the gas company may offer evidence in the hearing of the character provided for showing the value of the properties sought to be ascertained.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is a court of appeals that would have jurisdiction over the further progress of this case, is there not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the objection to pursuing the ordinary course and taking an appeal to determine this question of law? Is that not the proper course, rather than coming in here and asking for a law to be repealed? Is not this a question that ought to be determined—this matter of franchise—and whether or not that is a legitimate part of the plant, and ought not the Supreme Court to pass upon the question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The case has gone to the Supreme Court of the United States upon that question. The case went to the Supreme Court upon the constitutionality of section 5 of the act.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not a wise thing to have the opinion of the Supreme Court upon this vexed question, as to whether or not a franchise is a part of the plant of a corporation?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That was not the question that was raised.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood the gentleman to say that question was involved here and that the court had intimated——

Mr. CAMPBELL. That was a question of fact that was found by the auditor, he finding that the franchise was of value.

Mr. HEPBURN. But that question is in the case, is it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The question went to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States, on the constitutionality of the question as to whether or not the court had authority at all to merely find the value of a public-service corporation in the District of Columbia on an ex parte proceeding.

Mr. HEPBURN. But under the law as it now exists this other question might be determined by the Supreme Court?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. And if you repeal this statute that question can not be determined, can it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not under this section, of course.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask what the present price is.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The present price of gas in the District of Columbia is $1 per thousand net.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How long since it has been reduced before?

Mr. CAMPBELL. On June 6, 1896.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What was it then?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Prior to that time $1.25.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wish to ask another question: Whether or not the Washington Gas Company and the Georgetown Gas Company are now consolidated?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They have not been consolidated; no.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They have not been consolidated legally, but have they been consolidated in doing business?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is contended they are under the same general management.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I know that some years ago an effort was made to consolidate the companies here and get Congress to permit an increase of stock. Has there been any increase of stock on the part of those companies in the last two years?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There has been an increase of stock in the Washington Gaslight Company since its incorporation in 1848. It was first chartered with a capital stock of $50,000. In 1852 that stock was increased $300,000. Then, on January 3, 1855, it was increased $150,000; May 24, 1876, it was increased $500,000; May 29, 1872, it was increased $200,000; between 1873 and 1876 there was paid in $300,000, and between 1876 and 1882, $500,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What do you mean by "paid in?"

Mr. CAMPBELL. The capital stock paid in.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not a fact that practically all those increases were procured by earnings of the company?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the contention of those who are opposed to further inflation of the stock of these companies.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not a fact, as developed by your investigations?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, we had hearings upon the subject, and there was very strong testimony tending to show that fact.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, on this examination for the purpose of determining the price of gas at 90 cents, what percentage does the committee allow of the stock as it is now—on the amount of stock which is now issued?

Mr. CAMPBELL. This not being a bill to fix the price of gas, we did not go into that question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What does this bill do?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It simply repeals section 5 of the present act that authorizes the gas company to go into the courts here and have the courts find the value of their property with the view of issuing stock upon the value as found by the courts.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You have a bill here to-day fixing the price of gas, have you not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not sure whether that bill is on the Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; it is on the Calendar.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And it is to be called up within a few minutes, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We expect it will be.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I might as well ask now, then.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not prepared to answer on that. Wait until that bill comes up.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] tell us if they want to repeal that law so as to wipe a lawsuit out of court?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is a lawsuit here, but it is thought that this law is unjust to the District of Columbia and to the people here, in that it only permits evidence by the petitioner to show what the elements of value are that enter in the make-up of the stock of the company.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman explain how we will find the valuation in case section 5 is repealed?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There would have to be some other method of ascertaining. My own opinion is that there should be a well-considered law to provide for ascertaining the value, and that that law should provide for the commissioners giving expert and other testimony as to the value of the property as well as the testimony that is given by the gas company.

Mr. MURDOCK. Just one more question: As section 5 stands, is the district government hurt in any way for the present?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; the fear of those who have petitioned for the passage of this bill is, if this act stands and the Supreme Court of the United States should say that the act providing for the method of ascertaining the value of the property was constitutional, then, without a proper hearing from the District side, the capital stock of this company might be very largely increased and the price of gas retained at a high figure on the claim that it was necessary to keep it up at that figure in order to pay dividends.

Mr. MILLER. Suppose this section 5 should be repealed, what law is there for the determination of the amount of stock that may be issued by these gas companies?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If it is repealed, there would be none.

Mr. MILLER. And they might issue any amount of stock without regard to the value.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They can not issue stock without authority of Congress.

Mr. BURLESON. It is the purpose of these proceedings now to prevent them from watering their stock.

Mr. MANN. No; it is not the purpose of the repeal of this act.

Mr. BURLESON. It is the purpose of the proceeding—that this section of the act is to enable them to water their stock, and the purpose of repealing the section of that act is to prevent them watering their stock.

Mr. ADAIR. Well, if this section is repealed, what effect would it have on the lawsuit?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would leave the pending lawsuit suspended.

Mr. ADAIR. In other words, the purpose of this is to defeat the pending lawsuit.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; that is not the purpose. That would be one of the effects. The purpose was to prevent an increase in the capital stock of these companies without a fair hearing from the commissioners' side of the case.

Mr. ADAIR. It would wipe out the lawsuit now pending.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would wipe out the lawsuit in the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Suppose this bill is not acted on and the law stands as it is, in your judgment would the company have power to issue stock without coming to Congress?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The only thing that they could do——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman misunderstands your question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If this bill is not repealed, they have the authority?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the court sustains the act, then they would have the authority to go ahead and increase their capital stock.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Without regard to the act of 1896, this company, as I understand, either can not issue additional stock or else issue additional stock for cash capital paid in?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But under section 5 in the act of 1896 there is a provision for the issuance of stock up to the cash value of the plant. The company claims that the cash value of the plant includes the value of the franchise?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the statute provides that if the court shall hold that their franchise is included in the value of the plant, then the court shall permit them to issue bonds and stocks up to the cash value of the plant without paying in another dollar of capital?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And this bill we now have is designed to prevent the issuance of any more stock or bonds without paying in more capital?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does it do that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It certainly does.

Mr. MANN. Because, under the existing law, they can not issue capital without cash and without authority of Congress.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain the bill, because I have been asked to make a statement. I am sorry I have not the briefs on the part of the commissioners and also the briefs of the attorneys of the gas company, in order that the position of the two sides may be understood. I will explain it, so that we may fairly understand the purpose of the committee in this report, and it is a unanimous report, so that the House will understand what will be the effect of the passage of this bill and possibly what would be the effect if it is not passed.

In the first place there are two gas companies. One is the Georgetown Gas Company, the other is the Washington Gaslight Company. I have been told that the same people own the stock in both companies, but I do not know how that is.

In 1896, before I had the honor to be a Member of this House, a bill passed the House reducing the price of gas in the District of Columbia. That bill went to the Senate, where an amendment was offered in substance providing that stock might be issued for further or future extensions, and when the bill finally went into conference the conferees brought out a section changing the proposition which had passed the Senate. It is that section that this bill now seeks to repeal. I hope I may have your attention while I read the section that we are trying to repeal. The House will understand how the section got into the bill. The object of that bill was not capitalization, but to reduce the price of gas.

The House passed the bill simply as a gas-reduction proposition, but when it got to the Senate these other amendments were offered, and it was stated on the floor of the House by one of the House conferees that it was impossible to pass the bill and get a reduction in the price of gas unless this section was accepted by the House. Upon that state of facts, as the debates show, it was accepted. The amendment was foreign to the object of the bill and had nothing to do with the proposition to reduce the price of gas. The section that we now seek to repeal is a limitation in negative form, not an enabling act, so to speak, but providing by implication the method by which future shares of stock might be issued. The section which we seek to repeal is as follows:

That neither the Washington Gaslight Company nor the Georgetown Gaslight Company shall hereafter issue any greater number of shares of stock than shall be equal to the actual cash value of said plants and necessary cost of the construction of future extensions or future enlargement of plants, which cash value and cost of extensions shall first be ascertained and authorized upon petition therefor to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, under such regulations as the chief justice and the justices thereof shall prescribe; also, if either of the said corporations shall desire hereafter to issue bonds upon their property, secured by mortgage or otherwise upon petition therefor to said court, setting forth the necessity thereof and the amount of stock issued and outstanding, it may be and shall be lawful for said court or the chief justice and justices thereof, as the case may be, or one of them, upon public notice, to be prescribed by the rules of said court, to permit the issuance of such bonds and mortgage as desired: Provided, That the amount of stock and bonds issued shall not exceed the actual cash value of said plants and the cost of such extensions or enlargement of plants: And provided further, That the Washington Gaslight Company is hereby authorized to issue such additional amount of capital stock as will provide for the conversion into such stock of its outstanding certificates of indebtedness, which conversion of said certificates is hereby authorized to an amount not exceeding $600,000.

The attack upon this section is made upon the ground that it undertakes to and does confer upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia, as a court, powers not judicial but legislative, powers which do not belong to it under the Constitution. If I had the brief of the corporation counsel I could give you the details of the suit instituted, if you can call it a suit. One of the contentions is that it is not a suit; that it is not a case in court; and the court by its action sustained that proposition to the extent of not hearing anything from the commissioners, but held that its only function under this act was to ascertain the cash value of the plant, which it is insisted by the corporation counsel and the District Commissioners is not a judicial function or power. They insist that the act is void in conferring any such power upon the court. It is a close question. It might be possible that making the members of the court a commission or naming them as individuals to do a ministerial act might not invalidate the law; but the commissioners contend that the conferring upon a court of legislative or ministerial power, work of this kind which is, as they contend, in no sense judicial, is void.

But the Supreme Court entertained a petition as to the Georgetown Gaslight Company, and fixed the value, and in the elements of value it included "franchise rights and good will." There was no franchise here in the sense of a definite period of time, but like all our corporations in the District of Columbia the right to alter or repeal at any time was retained in Congress.

Mr. McGAVIN. If this case is decided along about next September or October, and section 5 is declared invalid, may not both of these companies issue an abundance of stock and bonds before Congress will have an opportunity to prevent their issuance?

Mr. SIMS. I am coming to that in the order of my statement, but I want to make my statement in order so you can understand it. The Washington Gaslight Company filed a petition in the court to have the actual value of their plant ascertained under this act. Pending that the commissioners, through the corporation counsel, made application in the court of appeals of the District of Columbia for a writ of prohibition upon the District supreme court on the ground that the act was void. That case was tried by the court of appeals and that court held that this act was void as conferring power that was not judicial.

In other words, the only function of the court was not judicial; the only thing it had to do was to fix the value of the plant. This section does not determine whether the stocks shall be issued nor how much, but simply fixes the value—a mere report of a referee—and the court of appeals held that the act was void.

That case has been appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and is now pending before that court. The commissioners had a bill introduced—I say they had a bill introduced, I am speaking from information—to indefinitely suspend this section 5 of the act of 1896. Afterwards a bill was introduced to repeal it outright and prevent any further procedure under the section, because if it ought to be suspended it ought to be repealed, as the effect was intended to be the same in both cases.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I understood him to say that the court had nothing to do with the matter of issuing stock and bonds.

Mr. SIMS. The lower court so held

Mr. MANN. But the statute says:

And shall be lawful for the said court, the chief justice and the associate justices thereof, as the case may be, or one of them, by public notice as described by the rules of said court to permit the issue of bonds and mortgages as desired.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; that is as to bonds and mortgages.

Mr. MANN. It covers the jurisdiction conferred in this case.

Mr. SIMS. Not having the ruling of the supreme court before me and stating from recollection—and I would be glad if any member of the committee would correct me if I am wrong—the supreme court held in the Georgetown proceeding that they had nothing to do under that provision but find the value of the plant. Then the company issued the stock or not in full volume of value found or less, just as the company might see proper under section 5 of the act of 1896.

Now, it is held by the corporation counsel that if a judicial finding of the actual cash value authorized by Congress is had, and stock issued to that amount, then the price of gas could never be reduced below the reasonable earnings upon that stock issue; not because this stock is outstanding, but because it is equivalent to and represents the actual value of the plant judicially determined.

The object of the commissioners in this bill is to have section 5 repealed and prevent further proceedings under it before the court acts, because they have no power to properly present to the court the interests of the consumer; that it is virtually in effect an ex parte proceeding as to the valuation of the property and the elements of value making it up, and that the consumer ought to have an opportunity through them to present their side of the case, which they claim under the holding of the Supreme Court, they were not permitted to do, and could not do.

Now, I want to say that I do not claim, under my investigation, that the capital stock of $2,600,000 is not less than the actual value of the plant. I believe it is much less. I think that the gas company, or the gas companies, in the District of Columbia are the only public-service corporations here that are not overcapitalized, and grossly overcapitalized.

Now, it is the fear of the commissioners that through the process of this computation and finding of the value by the court, which the court has itemized, including the value of the franchise and good will, the franchise being given by act of Congress for no value received, repealable at any time, that stock should not be issued by judicial authorization upon the value of a franchise given by the people and have to pay earnings upon the stock based upon the value of that franchise. If something was paid for the franchise, or it had a definite time to run, they would have a right to issue stock to that extent as well as upon any other article of property.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. As near as I can understand, and I have been trying to understand the purpose of the committee in seeking the repeal of this law, the auditor has placed the valuation upon the franchise, rights, and good will of the corporation?

Mr. SIMS. That is right.

Mr. BUTLER. And the gentleman contends that it was not intended by the court to include in the value the franchise, rights, and good will. Therefore, if the auditor had not valued the franchise, rights, and good will, the repeal of this section might not be asked for.

Mr. SIMS. It might be asked for just the same.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree to that, but this is the reason why it is asked for at this time?

Mr. SIMS. Well, that is one of the reasons, and a very strong reason. A precedent should not be established in this District of valuing a franchise that is given to a public-service corporation, and stock issued upon it, if it is only $25, should not be permitted by law, for every future corporation that seeks the same could get it, because we should have to put them all on the same basis and treat them all alike: Another thing: We all know that a franchise will increase in value with the increase of population in a city, with the increase of demand for gas and the use of the franchise. In the case of the Georgetown company, a very small company, it is valued at $66,661. Evidently, upon the same basis, the franchise in the Washington Gaslight Company would be of very large value.

Suppose you go along and permit stock to be issued upon the value of the franchise, in a few years—five years or ten years—the franchise is worth much more than it was when the stock was issued upon it, and you can repeat under this section, as I understand it, as the committee understands it, indefinitely. You can petition the court to fix a value, and continue to petition it and continue to add stock to the company to cover the value of a franchise that increases without a dollar of outlay by the company or any risk whatever—nothing except the natural unearned increment, as I am pleased to call it. Therefore the committee thinks that such a law should not be permitted to remain. If the Supreme Court sustains the court of appeals, of course the matter is ended; but it is a very close question, and the Supreme Court may hold that the act is valid. Then immediately the Washington Gas Company's case proceeds, as well as that of the Georgetown company. As soon as the value is fixed—I mean the cash value, including the franchise—they at once issue the stocks based on the finding of the court, and it becomes an issue based upon a judicial finding of value authorized and directed by Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand the gentleman to base his argument in favor of the repeal of this statute upon the fact that in his judgment this is a very close question, and that, being a close question, therefore he proposes to take away from one of the parties whatever right he may have in it to an adjudication. Now, if it was not so close a question, if it was one in which there was no doubt at all, there would be, then, according to his argument, no argument in favor of the repeal of this statute. Is not that the position the gentleman puts himself in?

Mr. SIMS. No; Mr. Speaker, I will explain to the gentleman so I think he will understand it. Before action is taken under the act there are no vested rights, but as soon as the companies comply with the act and issue stock it becomes a vested right, and if we were absolutely sure the Supreme Court would hold the act valid, that would of itself be one of the strongest reasons why it should be repealed. In other words, the act ought never to have been passed.

Mr. HEPBURN. That may be, but as I understand it, there can be no issue of stock until the highest court in the United States declares that rightfully the stock may issue.

Mr. SIMS. No; that is not the question for the court to decide under this act.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is precisely the question, provided the act is constitutional.

Mr. SIMS. Congress provides in this act as a limitation that it shall not issue an amount of stock in value to exceed the value placed upon it by the court, but the court does not authorize the stock issued under this act. The court simply performs a ministerial legislative function, to investigate and find out what the value is. Then the law applies and the company shall not issue stock exceeding that, but it takes no authorization of the court to issue it. There is no mandate to issue it, and the company need not issue any, but if issued, then it becomes a vested right. Before it is a vested right we have a right to repeal the law.

Mr. MURDOCK. May I ask the gentleman a question? If the Supreme Court sustains the opinion of the court of appeals——

Mr. SIMS. That ends it.

Mr. MURDOCK. That ends the proposition?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. If we repeal this section——

Mr. BURLESON. That ends it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will it redound to the good of the gas company or to the District? Is it an advantage to the District government to have this section repealed, or, on the other hand, will it do the gas company any harm?

Mr. SIMS. I will try and answer that as I see it—that is all I can do.

It may do the consumer a great deal of harm, providing the stock issue as a result of the proceedings should be so large that we can not reduce the price of gas and leave reasonable earnings to the stockholders in this new inflated or increased issue.

Therefore, the consumer, and I am presuming the commissioners represent the consumer when the commissioners, speaking in their representative capacity, ask that this bill be passed now. There is another bill here to reduce the price of gas, and if this section is repealed Congress can deal with the question of the reduction of gas unhampered by the possibilities of a stock issue that might render void or invalid any price we might fix. Some gentlemen seem to be under the impression that if this clause is repealed the company can go ahead and issue stock by some other means. They can issue no stock unless authorized by act of Congress to do so. I say, as I have said before, that the present stock issue of the Washington Gas Company does not equal even the structural value of the plant at present, but here is an act that, as construed by the court that will have to apply it, will capitalize this franchise, which is given the companies free. We should not give away the property rights of the people by way of a franchise and then allow the donee to capitalize it and demand an earning upon the gift.

But Congress has full power to authorize the increase of the stock of the gas company under such limitations as Congress may fix. It may say that in finding the value that the franchise rights and good will shall not be included, or it may fix any method, but Congress ought not, according to the judgment of the committee, have passed this bill, but the committee insists it has the right to repeal it before the rights of the companies under it have become vested.

Mr. HARDY. I desired to ask you a question, but I think you have just stated what I wanted to ask. My understanding of this position is that Congress has passed a law under which it is possible for the supreme court or higher court to hold that this company may capitalize its franchise, and before it has done so you wish to repeal that law. That is the whole thing.

Mr. SIMS. That is the whole thing in a nutshell. Now, Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is not to reflect upon the court or findings of the court, either the supreme court or the court of appeals, or to anticipate the action of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is not interfering with the case in court, because there is only one party.

It is in the nature of an ex parte proceeding asking simply that the courts do that which will enable them to issue the stock to the extent of the value ascertained, and the court has already passed upon the Georgetown case and included the franchise, which would not amount to much if it did not go any further than that; but in the case of the Washington Gaslight Company, the franchise might be worth a million dollars, in five years' time it might be worth a million more, and in ten years' time it might be worth another million; and as long as this act stands here recapitalization can continue indefinitely, including the increased value of the franchise in each capitalization, for which nothing was paid. Now, I have no prejudice against the gas company any more than any other public-service corporation, and I may say that I have been very unsuccessful in trying to get some regulation of the street car companies here. I have no objection to the gas company having a capitalization equal to the value of the plant, excluding these elements of value that are not contributed by the stockholders directly or by withholding the dividends.

Now, I do not think the repeal of this act will prevent the gas company from getting a reasonable price for their gas. If they only had one dollar of stock they would be entitled to a just compensation for the services rendered, but the stock issue under these circumstances, as the committee looked on it, is equal to a judicial determination of the value, and then you never could reduce the price of gas below what would be a reasonable earning upon that value as evidenced by the stock issue under it. I, for one, am perfectly willing to vote for any bill to recapitalize the gas company upon a just valuation of the property; I think they are entitled to it as much as the street car companies to a vastly overissue of stock above the actual value.

But I am not here to plead the rights of either or the equity of either. Here is a law. I do not think it should ever have been passed. The law has not been executed, no rights have been fixed under it, and the committee thinks the law ought to be repealed, as it should never have been passed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a couple of questions?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If this law be not repealed, what authority is there for these gas companies to increase their capital stock, and does the increase have to be for money paid in?

Mr. SIMS. No, sir; it does not have to be for money paid in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He said if this act was repealed.

Mr. SIMS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I misunderstood him. I understood the gentleman to say if we did not pass the act.

Mr. MANN. If the act be not repealed, what provision is there for the issuance of capital stock, and will the stock, if issued, ever be paid for in cash?

Mr. SIMS. If this section 5 of the act of 1896 is not repealed, and the present bill does not pass——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will answer the question in the form in which it is put——

Mr. SIMS. I was going to tell the gentleman what would be the effect. They could simply take up the outstanding certificates and reissue certificates equaling the value found by the court under this proceeding, whatever it might be, without one additional dollar being paid into the treasury of the company, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. Under what authority of law is it that they could issue stock without paying in any money? There is nothing in the act that provides for the method of issuing the stock. Would they not still have to pay for the stock in cash?

Mr. SIMS. I do not think so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There would be no restriction.

Mr. MANN. Then, if there be no restriction upon their issuing stock with this law as it stands, without paying cash, what restriction is there under the law for issuing stock without paying cash if this law is not in existence?

Mr. SIMS. There is no law authorizing the issue of one dollar of stock, except this.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in this act that authorizes the issuance of stock.

Mr. SIMS. It fixes the value upon which they may issue stock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. There is no limitation upon the power to issue stock except what is contained in this section 5. If this section be repealed, then there is no limitation upon the power.

Mr. MANN. Is not there a general incorporation law in the District of any kind?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have a special charter.

Mr. SIMS. They were chartered by act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I know there is a general incorporation law in the District.

Mr. SIMS. If I understand the gentleman correctly, I will answer him. As I understand it, there is no law authorizing a public-service corporation to increase its stock, and it must be done by special act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Then is there anything in their act of Congress authorizing them to issue stock?

Mr. SIMS. If this act is repealed?

Mr. MANN. Whether it is repealed or not repealed.

Mr. SIMS. No; I do not understand that there is. In fact, I understand it to be the contrary.

Mr. MANN. Then the authority to issue stock under this act is merely by implication? I would be inclined to think, unless the gentleman looked it up, that they have not relied entirely upon that. There must be some provision authorizing them to issue stock. Now, what this House does not want to do is to repeal an act which has some limitation upon the issuance of stock and thereby authorizing these companies to issue stock ad libitum.

Mr. SIMS. They can not issue a dollar, if this act is repealed, under the law of the District of Columbia, as I understand it; that is, not without special authority of Congress.

Mr. MANN. They can issue stock and add additions to their plant, can they not?

Mr. SIMS. Not under the law as it now is.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SIMS. They can not issue stock or bonds. That is my understanding. That is given to me by the District authorities here.

Mr. MANN. No doubt the House will pass the bill. The gentlemen on the committee have recommended it, and the people want it, but I wish the gentleman himself would look that matter up before this becomes a law, because we would feel exceedingly cheap here if we found in the end that we had repealed the only limitation there was, and that these companies could issue such stock as they pleased, thereby forbidding us in the future to reduce the price of gas.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on this bill and on the bucket-shop bill.

There was no objection.

ADMISSION TO THE GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I call up the bill (H. R. 12898) to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes, so as to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I will say in regard to this bill that at the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] I will ask that this bill go over until another District day. Therefore, I ask that it be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed without prejudice.

WASHINGTON, ALEXANDRIA AND MOUNT VERNON RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I now call up the bill H. R. 15448.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15448) to amend section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901,

With an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert an amendment, so as to read:

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 12 of the 'Act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes,' approved February 12, 1901, providing among other things that a standard underground electric system of street car propulsion shall be installed by the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Railway Company on the part highway leading to the new highway bridge, and that no dynamo furnishing power to said portion of the road shall be in any manner connected with the ground, is hereby amended by inserting after the words 'shall be paid by said company' the words 'Provided, however, That said company, for the purpose of making the necessary change from underground to overhead wire in the conduct and operation of its cars at the north end of the new highway bridge, shall be permitted to use an approved overhead-wire system on the approach to said bridge for a distance of not more than 350 feet from the northerly or Washington end of the bridge; the location, construction, and maintenance of all parts of the overhead and underground systems, of the necessary plow pits, and of the asphalt or other paving between the tracks and the 2 feet outside thereof on the bridge and both approaches to be subject at all times to the supervision, instructions, and approval of the Secretary of War; and all instructions and requirements of the Secretary of War shall be fully complied with by the said company within the time specified, at its own expense and without cost to the United States.'"

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] if anyone desires to ask any questions concerning the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is simply an engineering proposition. In the act intended to eliminate grade crossings passed in 1901, all trolley wires were directed to be put underground. In the approaches to the bridge over the Potomac it was found impossible to do this from an engineering standpoint. It was believed it would endanger the abutments of the bridge and affect its strength. It has been necessary in order that the cars of the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon line might pass over the bridge to maintain the overhead wires for a distance of about 270 feet from the north side of the bridge, in the District of Columbia. The whole question comes under the jurisdiction of the War Department, which in compliance with the act of 1901, has ordered that the wires now in existence be placed underground.

The War Department is entirely satisfied to let them stand as they are, and the District of Columbia engineer commissioner suggests that this is the best thing that can be done. We are asked, therefore, to legalize the wires as they stand. Authority is asked for 350 feet of extension north of the bridge. There seems to be no particular objection to the bill. It is simply a question of legalizing the wires and poles already in existence and absolutely necessary for the proper transit of the cars.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to explain the engineering difficulties that prevent the underground wire. Is that a real difficulty or an imaginary one?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would seem to be very largely a question of expense, as well as one affecting the foundations of the bridge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How can the wire going under the bridge affect the foundation of the bridge?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would run under the piers and abutments. If you will allow me to quote from the report, something taken from the statement of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, I think it will explain the situation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to hear it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "As the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia pointed out to the committee, the plow pits are now out of the way of vehicles and pedestrian traffic, where they harm nobody, and are as near to the bridge as they can be placed and continue to remain out of the way of traffic, whereas if they were put upon the bridge or its abutment they would be a dangerous nuisance."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Wherein can they be more dangerous than where the lines run down the streets of Washington?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think if you were to examine the line, as I did this morning, you would find that perhaps the plow pits were placed in the very best position.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, the plow pit is the groove connecting the car with the electricity?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How can it be more dangerous to have that on the approaches to the bridge than it is down in the middle of Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The engineers seem to think it would be.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it really would be, I believe the bill ought to pass; but if it is merely a matter of saving some cost, some expense to this company, when we have adopted a rule that in building these railroads in Washington we should have no overhead wires, I do not see any reason why it should be set aside in the case of this bridge unless there is some real engineering problem.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Since I am not an engineer, suppose I quote a little further from the report of the engineer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to hear it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania—

It would be difficult, if not impossible, to locate these plow pits upon the bridge or in the abutment, and it would be decidedly objectionable to have them located upon the bridge or its abutment, as the tracks are there in the center of the passage for highway traffic, whereas on leaving the bridge in the park the tracks of the railway curve to the easterly side and are out of the way of travel.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That does not answer my question. The plow pit is right in the center of Pennsylvania avenue today, where every vehicle goes, and it is not considered dangerous. I have not heard of any vehicle receiving any injury from having the plow pits there. If you had it in the middle of the bridge, I do not see how it would be any more dangerous than it is in the middle of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can only say to the gentleman that the judgment of the engineer is as I have stated. The War Department has approved of this statute and the District of Columbia engineer has approved of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has the gentleman in his report the language of the War Department approving the proposition?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have seen a letter from the Secretary of War which holds to the view that I have just given, and which states that the War Department has no objection to the passage of this bill as amended. Certain amendments were offered to the bill, and the Secretary of War made certain suggestions, and those suggestions were adopted by the committee. It is upon the strength of the statement of the Secretary of War to the committee that this report has been framed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can readily see how the War Department may have no objection. For instance, in my town we have everything in the way of street cars run by overhead trolley, and it works very successfully.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They have that on the Virginia side, where they operate under the laws of Virginia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the absence of objection on the part of the War Department does not mean that the War Department thinks it would be dangerous or impossible to put the plow pits in the middle of the bridge. The system that we have adopted in Washington is to require the plow pits to be underground, and the underground connection made, instead of an overhead connection with the trolley, in order that the city may be a city beautiful; and I think it is a bad proposition, if it is merely a question of spending a little money, to make an exception to this rule. If there is a real engineering problem, of course we ought to grant the consent; but if it is merely a proposition to save this company a small amount of money and not make it put the current underground instead of overhead,

I do not think there is any reason for passing the bill; and from what the gentleman has read I can not see that he has given any engineering reasons why it should not be an underground current.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Here is a very expensive bridge, built partly by the money of the Government and partly by that of the District of Columbia, and it was intended to add to the city beautiful here, as I understand it. To cut under the bridge and put this box or plow pit there would, in the judgment of the engineers, be an undermining of the structure of the bridge. In other words, it would affect the strength of the abutments and of the bridge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman has something from the engineers which says that, we ought to know it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have only that which has been read here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not see that the language which has been read to us conveys that idea. It merely conveys the proposition that the engineers of the District and the engineers for the War Department do not object. I do not see anything——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman whether he is familiar with the location of this bridge?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, yes; I have passed over the bridge a good many times. It is a very handsome bridge, very well located, and I do not really see that the wires are in the way now; but it is merely establishing a precedent somewhere in Washington, letting them establish by law an overhead trolley, when the whole proposition has always been that we must have underground wires in this city, and I think we ought to stand on that proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is not the approach to the bridge much narrower than Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it is narrower than Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is one of the engineering difficulties that is objected to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is much narrower than Pennsylvania avenue, but it is not narrower than a good many other streets on which the street cars run with an underground trolley. It is not nearly as congested as it is down on F street, and if it is not dangerous on F street, it would not be dangerous in crossing that bridge. So that I do not think the gentleman ought to press the bill on the idea that the engineers say that this is an engineering problem that has got to be met, unless some more specific facts can be obtained from the engineers to demonstrate that fact to the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose we leave the engineers out of it for a moment, and assume that a very large crowd is about to pass over from the Washington side to the Virginia side. Would it not appear to the gentleman that it would be very dangerous to have that plow pit right at the bridge itself rather than 270 feet distant, as it now is? Suppose a crowd was surging across the bridge and there should be a pressure at the entrance. Would it not be rather more dangerous to life and limb to have the plow pits right there at the entrance than to have them 270 feet removed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not understand why it should be more dangerous, because we have them in the streets of Washington. The only thing is that it will cost more money, perhaps; that it will cost this company considerable money to make the change, but we never hesitated before to spend money to put electricity underground.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman suggest how the connection might be made between the underground trolley on the Washington side and the overhead trolley on the Virginia side, midway on the bridge?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no necessity of making it midway on the bridge. There is no law on the Virginia statute book which will not allow you to carry it clear across the bridge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am informed that the trolley is overhead on the Virginia side immediately after the crossing of the bridge, and the connection between the two would have to be made on the bridge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. I understand the law of the District of Columbia controls the entire river to the opposite bank. The entire bridge to the opposite bank is in the District of Columbia, and the change from the underground trolley to the overhead trolley does not have to be made until the car has crossed the bridge on the Virginia side.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I rather think the gentleman from Alabama ought to consider the convenience of the people who are going across the bridge each day. If this change were ordered—that is to say, if the order of the War Department were carried into effect, and the overhead wires for this distance were to be removed—I think there would be a temporary cessation of travel, and it would be a great inconvenience to the people on the Virginia side who want to get in here daily. There would be a great inconvenience in reaching Washington if a continuous ride could not be had across the bridge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman is mistaken. If I recollect right, these cars are run every twenty minutes, and you do not find two cars on the bridge at the same time. They could put the underground trolley on one side of the bridge and run the cars on one side, and then put in on the other side of the bridge while the repairs were going on.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a matter of inconvenience to travelers if they are made to get off the cars and walk 270 feet——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They would not have to do that; they could put a switch below and run the cars on a single track instead of a double track, and put a flagman either side, and it is only a twenty minutes' schedule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With all due respect to the views of the gentleman from Alabama, I shall decline to discuss the engineering problem further, and call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAPRON). The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the committee amendment be reported again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the amendment is in the nature of a substitute and that it has already been read and is now before the House.

The question on the amendment was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were 34 ayes and 21 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

FIXING THE PRICE OF GAS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up H. R. 18345, to fix the price of gas in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after January 1, 1909, no person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of fuel or illuminating gas in the District of Columbia shall sell or otherwise dispose of the same to any person, firm, copartnership, association, or corporation in the District of Columbia for a price exceeding 90 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

"Strike out of page 1, line 3, the word 'May' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'January.'

"Strike out of page 1, line 3, the word 'eight' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'nine.'

"Strike out of page 1, line 9, the word 'eighty' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'ninety.'

"Add in page 1, at the end of line 9, the words, 'such gas to be of the standard and quality required at the present time.'"

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there is a short letter from the Commissioners of the District in connection with the report that I would like to have the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 6, 1908.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners have the honor to state in response to your reference to them of H. R. 18345, entitled "A bill to fix the price of gas in the District of Columbia," that they are in favor of a reduction in the price of gas to whatever figure will yield a reasonable profit to the gaslight companies, as they have heretofore recommended to Congress. But, as they have also stated to Congress, they have not the authority or the means at present to determine what that price should be. They have recommended in their annual report that they be given the necessary authority and means to properly supervise the operations of all the public utility corporations in the District of Columbia, including the gaslight companies. If Congress will give the Commissioners the additional authority and means needed they will be able, with the advice of disinterested experts employed by them for the purpose of investigation, to arrive at the amount of reduction that ought to be made in the price of gas.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, like the Commissioners of the District, I, too, have been of the opinion for some time that perhaps the price of gas could be reduced in the District.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman give the committee the price of gas in the District for the last ten or fifteen years, and how it is that it has been so high?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The price of gas net in Washington is $1 per thousand.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have had a great deal of legislation in the last ten years upon this subject. What was it before?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Previous to that time I think that gas was sold at $1.25 per thousand in Washington.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Were not we paying more than that?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; previous to that time we were. There have been one or two different reductions. I think the last reduction was eight or nine years ago; I don't remember the exact date.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the gentleman the exact figures there?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think I have.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it would be very interesting reading, because I know the gas company has used some sort of influence for years here, persistently claiming and showing that to reduce the price of gas would be a confiscation, and I want it to go into the RECORD if I can get it there, as going to show that they were wrong and that Congress was right.

I remember one day here when we refused to pass a bill as reported by the committee and instructed the committee to go out and bring in a certain bill reducing the price of gas a great many cents. The distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], as I remember it, was the able gentleman who urged the reduction of the price of gas. I think he will remember the occasion. I do not think he ever got the bill back, either, that we directed the committee to bring back. I would like to know if you can give us the charges for gas for as many years as we can get them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will be glad to put into the RECORD that information. I have no doubt that it can be obtained. I have not the information at hand.

My remarks upon H. R. 18345 have been withheld until this time that I might obtain the information as requested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], and in response to a telephone message this morning the secretary of the Washington Gaslight Company has kindly sent me the following information, which, at the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], I will insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks:

WASHINGTON GASLIGHT COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1908.

HON. SAMUEL W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
House of Representatives, City.

DEAR SIR: According to promise, I herewith transmit schedule of reductions in price of gas in this city from January 1, 1867, to July 1, 1901, and there has been no change since July 1, 1901, to the date of this communication.

Very respectfully, W. B. ORME, Secretary.

Price of gas and reductions in the same at Washington, D. C.

Date.	By the company.	By act of Congress.
Jan. 1,1867	$4—7½ per cent=$3.70
July 1,1867	$4—12½ per cent=$3.50
July 1,1868	$4—15 per cent=$3.40
Nov. 1,1869		$4—18¾ per cent=$3.25.
Aug. 1,1872	$3.75—20 per cent=$3
July 1,1874		To United States and District of Columbia, $2.50.
Do		To other consumers, $2.75 less 25 cents, $2.50 net; street lamps, 2,200 hours, 6 feet per hour, $40 per year.
May 1,1876	$2.50—25 cents=$2.25; street lamps $36.70.
July 1,1878		Street lamps reduced to $32.
Jan. 1,1880	$2.25—25 cents=$2; street lamps reduced to $28.70.
July 1,1881	Street lamps to $25
Jan. 1,1882	$2—25 cents=$1.75
July 1,1883	$1.75—25 cents=$1.50; street lamps to $22.
July 1,1886		Street lamps reduced to $20.
Oct. 1,1886	$1.50—25 cents=$1.25
July 1,1891		Street lamps increased to $21.50 and 3,000 hours, instead of 2,600 hours as heretofore.
Nov. 1,1893	$1.25 net	Same as above.
July 1,1896		Street lamps $20; consumers, private, $1.25—15 cents=$1.10 net; consumers, United States and District of Columbia, $1 net.
July 1,1901		Consumers, $1.25—25 cents=$1.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wish the gentleman would put it into the RECORD, so that we can have some vindication of the judgment of this House, that the gas rates in this District were outrageous, that they were oppressive, that they should have been reduced, and they could have been reduced without confiscating the gas company's property, and let it go into the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that the committee, in the investigation of this matter, heard two distinguished experts. One was Edward W. Bemis, of Cleveland, Ohio, and he was heard upon both the subject of the repeal of the fifth section, which has already passed the House, as well as upon the question of the reduction of the price of gas. As to the first proposition, that bill having passed, I will not spend any time respecting that portion of his statement, although I would like to insert, as a part of my remarks, the statements of Mr. Bemis and Mr. Humphreys, given before the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, permission will be given.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Upon the question of the price of gas Mr. Bemis gave it as his judgment to the committee that gas could be manufactured in the city of Washington for 58.9 cents, and I think in another portion of his testimony the outside figure claimed was 62 cents. Mr. Bemis also gave it as his judgment that the maximum price of gas in the city of Washington should be 85 cents. But, Mr. Speaker, no one can read the statements of Mr. Bemis and Mr. Humphreys without coming to the conclusion that these gentlemen were at that time in a large measure unprepared to give the committee their best judgment for the reason they had not had sufficient time to visit the plant and to make a satisfactory examination.

The committee heard Mr. Bemis for an hour and twenty minutes. Subsequent to that time the committee also heard another distinguished expert, Mr. Alexander C. Humphreys, for an hour and thirty minutes, and upon some questions these gentlemen differed, questions that are certainly very material in determining what is a fair price for gas. I shall not take the time now to go into the details, but I desire to say upon one important question, which is very material to the people of the District, particular stress was laid, and that is this: Mr. Humphreys insists that we do not need in this city gas at 22 candlepower, but that we could get along with gas at 17 candlepower, and both he and Mr. Bemis agreed upon this, that the difference in price would be 5 cents per thousand. It seems to me that this is a very material matter in the final determination of this subject, for if it shall be found that a fair price for gas at 22 candlepower is 85 cents, 90 cents, 95 cents, or a dollar, it is of the utmost importance that we make sufficient further inquiry to know whether or not in the city of Washington we shall have gas at 22 or 17 candlepower. Both the experts agree that the reduction from 22 to 17 candlepower will save the consumer 5 cents per thousand. There are but three or four cities in the Union that have 22 candlepower gas.

It is suggested to me that it is twenty-three. As I remember the law, it is twenty-two. Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Humphreys in his testimony frankly admitted that he had not had an opportunity to examine the gas plant in late years, although his testimony does disclose that he had been sent here on different occasions during the last eight or ten years to examine the same, and as I remember the testimony of Mr. Bemis, he was never called here, but both of these gentlemen are agreed on the fact that ample time should be taken and opportunity be given for the examination of these matters before a final conclusion is reached. Mr. Humphreys told the committee that gas in the city of Washington at $1 per thousand was right. Now, after the committee listened to Mr. Bemis for an hour and twenty minutes and to Mr. Humphreys for one hour and thirty minutes, making less than three hours altogether that the committee listened to these two distinguished experts, the committee struck, so to speak, a middle price between what Mr. Humphreys thought the price of gas ought to be in the city of Washington and what Mr. Bemis thought it ought to be and reported this bill to the House at 90 cents.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to have the gentleman state in what manner either of these two gentlemen arrived at their conclusion or in what manner the committee arrived at the conclusion which they reached.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have just stated.

Mr. DRISCOLL. For instance, what rate of interest did they allow on the stock in coming to this conclusion of 90 cents?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As I remember the testimony of these gentlemen, 6 per cent.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Both agreed on 6 per cent on the stock?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There was no material dispute on that question, as I now remember it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I suppose the franchise was not considered in that matter at all, was it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Bemis, as I remember the testimony, took one view of that, and Mr. Humphreys, who has been connected with gas companies for many years and is himself a stockholder, and a large stockholder, in gas companies here, as well as abroad, entertained an entirely different view from Mr. Bemis upon that question. I understand—and I think it is the general understanding—that the Supreme Court of the United States, if it did not hand the opinion down today, will likely hand down an opinion on almost any Monday bearing upon that question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is in the New York case.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is in the New York case. I understand that question is involved with several other important questions.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not the gentleman think he ought to reserve the bill until that opinion is handed down?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; my regret is that we did not have more time, better opportunity, and better facilities to make the investigation. In other words, had time in proportion to what we took last session to investigate the proposition of getting the tracks to the Union Station and the cross-town extension, time we took to investigate the prohibition question, if you please. Those were questions which seemed paramount at the time, especially the railroad question, and we spent a great deal of time upon them.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did the committee consider this case in that manner?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have stated frankly, and I think the other members of the committee will bear me out, that after listening to the two experts, one for an hour and twenty minutes and the other for an hour and thirty minutes, less than three hours, the committee recommended the bill as I have said.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood you to say that you had two experts before the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. And that the committee refused to agree with either of them?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is so.

Mr. HEPBURN. And arrived at their conclusion how?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As I said, one of the experts fixed the price at a dollar, and the other at 85 cents, and the committee reported a bill at 90 cents.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the committee is going to be exact, it ought to have been 92½ cents, ought it not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; that is so.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, now, when the committee were considering this matter what valuation did they put upon the plant?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is stated in the report. Both Mr. Bemis and Mr. Humphreys in giving their testimony and fixing the price took into consideration the last report of the gas company for the last year.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood you to say one of these experts had never seen the plant and that the other had not seen it for eight or nine years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Humphreys had not seen it for some time so as to make a careful examination. He had been here on one or two former occasions and made a careful examination. I do not want to do Mr. Bemis any injustice, but as I remember the testimony he had not visited the plant; certainly not at the time when he testified.

Mr. HEPBURN. And then how did they arrive at the value of the plant?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is only fair to say of either of these gentlemen that their testimony was very largely general. They had to give it in that way.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did they include the franchise or any part of it in their valuation of the plant?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think Mr. Bemis did, and I do not recall that Mr. Humphreys did.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] asked me a question a moment ago with reference to the report of the committee. If it were not for the prejudice which seems to be prevailing in some quarters, it would seem to me that it would have been well for the committee even now to further consider and take more testimony, but the committee have reported the bill, it is on the Calendar, and I assume that when it goes to the other end of the Capitol they certainly will be able to spend more time and make a more careful and thorough investigation than the House Committee on the District of Columbia did in the short time that we had in which to investigate the matter.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And they will probably hold it up until the decision comes down.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, I do not know. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. I have listened very attentively to the explanation that has just been made by the chairman of the committee, but after following him closely I must say I have come to the conclusion, as I believe most of the Members must have come to the conclusion, that the price that has been fixed upon in this bill is merely a guess. If anything justifies the appointment of a public-utility commission to investigate this and kindred subjects, it is the statement that has just been made by the chairman. He states that it has been utterly impossible for the committee, on account of lack of time, to examine into it as it should have been examined into. And that committee might have spent a hundredfold the length of time that it has taken, and they, not possessing expert knowledge to go into the technical details, would have been enveloped in a maze of difficulties that would have prevented them from arriving at an intelligent decision, just as they have after this bare inspection of three hours of a very important question.

We do not know from the statement and investigation made whether we are doing justice to the capital invested or justice to the consumer. But the time is coming, I wish to say, when a public-service commission will have to be created in order to pass upon the returns to these public-service corporations and the price they may charge for services to the public, such as street railway fares and the price of gas and the price of electric light; for Congress has not the time in which to properly investigate those questions. We give too much time as it is to the consideration of these District measures, and it will be necessary in the future to have a public-service commission that will pass intelligently upon the questions involved so as to report to Congress what should be the reasonable rate to the consumer of these public-service corporations. Not upon the investigation that has been made in this case, but upon the general reduction in the price of gas in other municipalities, will I support the reduction in the price of gas to 90 cents, or even lower.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A few days ago we had up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and it developed in the course of the debate on the several items that we are paying $471,000 a year rent for offices for the government service. Now, does the gentleman know whether that rental is reasonable or not; and if it is unreasonable, what would be reasonable? And what is the judgment of the gentleman as to what Congress should do—continue to rent offices or proceed with some policy as to establishing a proper number and quality of buildings?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My judgment has been for some time that the Government could well afford, when it can borrow money for 2 per cent, to erect its own buildings and not pay rent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am going to ask the gentleman another question. Is it the duty of your committee to look after that sort of thing?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, sir. I should think it would be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations. They, as I am informed, have taken that matter up, and I think a member of that committee visited—at least, if they did not, some one in the last year or two visited—these various buildings that are being rented by the Government and determined as to whether or not there was a fair rental being paid. As I remember it, the report was, in substance, that the Government was paying a fair rental for the buildings rented.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stated the other day that it was not pertinent to bring in relief in the bill then pending. It would seem the Committee on Appropriations has not jurisdiction of it, and I would like to locate the committee of Congress that has jurisdiction.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it is a reform that ought to be brought about.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman allow me as ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BONYNGE. What is the price charged by the gas company in the District of Columbia now?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A dollar net.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the statute fix the price at a dollar?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A dollar and twenty-five cents—a dollar net.

Mr. BONYNGE. Can the gentleman tell what the price fixed by law is?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. One dollar and twenty-five cents—a dollar net.

Mr. BONYNGE. Is that the way the law reads—that the law permits the gas company to charge a dollar and twenty-five cents or a dollar?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As I understand, $1.25—$1 net.

Mr. BONYNGE. The statute permits them to charge a dollar and twenty-five cents?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As I understand it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And for cash a discount of 10 per cent.

Mr. BONYNGE. Is the standard of quality of the gas specified?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir; 22 candlepower.

Mr. BONYNGE. When was the law passed fixing the price at $1.25?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Eighteen hundred and ninety-six.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Before I came to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Under the existing law the gas company makes out a bill at the rate of $1.25, or a dollar if the bill be paid before a specified time. Now, the proposition is to do away with that system entirely. Is it not desirable that there be some premium given to those who pay their gas bills promptly?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think so.

Mr. MANN. But you do away with that entirely.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Upon what theory do you change that method, which has been adopted by every municipality in the country?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is no theory about it. I have stated the case as correctly as I could, and I think every member of the committee agrees with me. After listening to one gentleman for an hour and twenty minutes and to another gentleman for an hour and thirty minutes, some one made a motion that the price of gas be 90 cents.

Mr. MANN. That is not the idea—that the net price of gas be 90 cents. Whereupon, without any consideration, without a vote, without any further consideration, it was passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Without any further consideration. I think I have stated that in the statement I made as to how this bill was reported to the House.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman himself, I know, has given consideration to the subject. Therefore may I appeal from his action as chairman of the committee to his individual opinion? Ought there not in any bill fixing the price of gas to be some arrangement by which there can be given a preference to those who pay their bills promptly?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir; I think that is a fair proposition.

Mr. MANN. Now, another thing I would like to ask the gentleman. This bill not only fixes the price of gas for those companies which have been created by act of Congress, but undertakes to say at what price one individual shall sell gas to another individual, without regard to any act of Congress. Have we the constitutional power to do that?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is a very nice question.

Mr. MANN. Can we say at what price butter shall sell; can we say at what price clothes shall sell; can we say at what price gas shall sell, where it is not in a sense sold by a public-utility corporation or by anybody who derives their right from Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know whether the bill will bear the interpretation the gentleman puts upon it in that respect.

Mr. MANN. Well, it says "no person."

Mr. MACON. Can not the gentleman make any distinction between a case of public utility?

Mr. MANN. I make the distinction; but that is the point I am trying to make the distinction in—whether this bill is constitutional or whether it will go the same way as the last bill went fixing the price of gas at a dollar; then after a delay of years it was found that it was unconstitutional.

Mr. MACON. We have power under the Constitution to fix the sale of any public utility.

Mr. MANN. We have the power to control a public utility, but this bill says—

Any person, firm, copartnership——

Mr. MACON. Oh, yes; "person."

Mr. MANN (continuing)— association, or corporation engaged in the manufacture or sale of fuel, illuminating gas in the District of Columbia, and so on, shall sell or otherwise dispose of the same at a price exceeding 90 cents per thousand.

Now, I very much doubt the power of Congress, if I establish a plant down here without asking anything of Congress—whether I shall sell gas to my next-door neighbor or some one in the same building—to say at what price I shall sell it, as long as it is in no way a public-utility matter, deriving no authority from an act of Congress.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, there has been great agitation here for a long time in the public press, or part of it, for cheaper gas and better service. I do not remember how many bills have been introduced, but I must insist that the committee did try to have hearings and have the matter investigated as far as it was possible for a committee to do so. Several times when we fixed days for hearings on one or the other of these bills (we heard them together because they were related) one of the gentlemen who was to appear before us in behalf of the gas company was ill, and we adjourned the hearings several times in order to have that gentleman before us to give his views as to the Washington and Georgetown gas companies but his illness continued, and it was impossible to hear from the gas company or to get facts as to the company given by a person connected with it and familiar with it. Finally Mr. Bemis was brought here, as I understand, upon the employment of a Washington newspaper, and qualified as a gentleman having knowledge of such subjects.

I may not state exactly what he said, but I think I give the substance. As to this particular company, he had made no investigation and knew nothing about it except what he gathered from the reports of the Washington and Georgetown gas companies made to Congress. From those reports he made a statement to the committee, saying that without an investigation of this plant it was impossible for him to be exact. Then finally came before us Mr. Humphreys, I believe, of Buffalo, N. Y., who qualified as a gas expert, and I believe he stated that he appeared at the request of the Washington Gas Company. He made his statement not from an examination of the plant, but from the reports of the gas company to Congress. I want to read to you what Mr. Bemis said about this matter relating to the price of gas. Remember that both these gentlemen gave opinions as to the effect of the capitalization clause of the act of 1896, but I only want to read what they said, or a portion of what they said, bearing as pointedly as possible upon this question. Mr. Bemis said:

Now, I want to say a word about the question of the price for gas, assuming for the moment that you have desired to consider that when this other matter is out of the way. Any full consideration of either the price of gas or proper capitalization can only come after a very considerable study—a study by expert engineers, a study by expert accountants. In any case which I have ever been connected with there has been a large amount of time necessary for such investigations. Even the smaller cities of 50,000 population have found it necessary to go into the matter quite exhaustively. The company will do that, and the public must do it in order to present its side of the case, and the court should have all of that information before it. It would certainly be impossible for me to go into a full consideration of the proper price in Washington with the very small amount of available data at present. All I shall attempt to do will be merely to call your attention to two or three things, which I think no one will controvert.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. What course do you think we ought to pursue in order to get at a fair price for gas in the city of Washington? I wish you would indicate just what you think we ought to do.

Mr. BEMIS. I think you ought to repeal this law, and have a thorough investigation of the books of the company running back several years, going fully to every account as to what it costs them, find out just how much it has earned out of their dollars and put in the plant every year, and just what it has cost them before they did that. Also get some idea of the average expense as compared with last year, and whether last year was normal or abnormal.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not think we can get at the price to fix by spending an hour in this way, with all due respect to you?

Mr. BEMIS. No; and I do not come——

Mr. NYE. Your conclusion ought to be worth something to us, however.

Mr. BEMIS. Of course you can do this: You can pass an act making a reduction, assuming that the courts will not hold it to be confiscatory, and that the courts will declare it confiscatory if it does reduce the price too law. You can pass an arbitrary act saying that you think that the circumstances justify 80-cent gas, or whatever you fix, and leave it to the courts to go into the investigation. Undoubtedly some time or other there will have to be an investigation. Make it 75 cents if you wish; but I think it would be better if you can have this investigation, and if you can do that I think you can pass an act making a comparative reduction, but not going to the extreme limits, and then leave it to the courts for further investigation.

Now, that is the testimony of the witness who appeared on behalf of the consumers, or on the side of the reduction of the price of gas. He concludes from an investigation of the reports of the gas company that the price of gas can be reduced in the city of Washington. I asked him this question:

Mr. SIMS. Considering the gas that is made here, 23-candlepower, and taking into consideration such facts as you have been able to gather from your limited investigation, what do you think the maximum reasonable price for gas to private individuals in this city should be?

Mr. BEMIS. It should run somewhere between 75 and 85 cents. It might be as low as 75 cents, and it might be as high as 85 cents. But

I do not like to take a very decided stand without having an opportunity to go into it further.

Mr. SIMS. It would be more of an estimate than a scientific conclusion?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes.

Now, Mr. Humphreys, who appeared in behalf of the gas company, and who beyond any question qualified as an expert, stated in substance, from the reports of the Washington Gas Company, taking into consideration the high candlepower required, the price of coal and materials, and all expenses as shown by the report, that a dollar a thousand for gas in this District was not unreasonable.

With nothing else before us and with no opportunity of having anybody else before us, for there is no appropriation to authorize us to employ experts to make a physical examination of the properties and every element entering into the cost of making gas in Washington City, we did the best we could. I am not here to urge that it is absolutely correct, because the experts themselves base their conclusions on the report of the gas company and nothing else except their general knowledge.

I thought it was more important, and think so to-day, to pass the bill repealing the capitalization clause of the act of 1896 than it was to pass this bill, because this bill at 90 cents is a compromise between 80 cents and $1, the amounts named by these respective witnesses, and is not the result of specific detailed information. Further, both of these experts agree that each gas plant was, so to speak, an individuality; that you could not well classify them, and to have a proper price, just to the consumer and just to the producer of gas, the gas plant itself should have a careful and critical examination by experts qualified to pass upon it.

Now, there was great demand for action by the committee for the reduction of the price of gas, and the committee have done all that it could with the limited means at its disposal, and as a result has brought in this bill. I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct in his criticism.

The bill ought to be amended to that extent, at least, of providing a price and a discount similar to existing law, as I believe is done with gas companies everywhere; but this amendment can be made here or at the other end of the Capitol. This is simply in the nature of a compromise price that we did not think under the evidence was too low, which is a reduction of 10 per cent on all gas furnished private individuals.

Gas may not be worth over 75 cents as made here under the law and requirements in force here, and it may be worth 85 cents or 90 or 95 cents or $1. The experts do not agree on the same state of facts. I am not an expert, and could not know which of the experts seems to be the best sustained in his conclusions by the statements made.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I regret to see the committee report a bill for 90-cent gas. I hoped that the committee would see its way to report in favor of a much lower price. The cost of gas to the consumers all over the country is being lowered continually, and I think the price provided in the bill introduced by me some time ago of 75 cents was nearer justice to the people who consume gas than the price which is sought to be fixed in the bill reported by the committee. The company having the right to manufacture and sell gas in the District of Columbia has a capitalization of $2,600,000, on which, according to its report, it pays 10 per cent dividends. This company also has $2,600,000 of interest-bearing certificates on which, I believe, 6 per cent interest is paid annually. In addition to that it has about $593,000 in bonds on which it pays interest, and all of this stock, bonds, and certificates of indebtedness have been created out of the earnings of the company.

No very large amount of cash was ever invested in this enterprise. The company, in addition to the payment of this interest charge and these dividends, sets aside a large amount of money every year—I have not the figures in my mind—for depreciation of the plant, and also sets aside a large sum annually for the construction of new mains and the extension of the plant. A company that is able to build additional facilities to enable it to supply additional consumers out of the earnings after paying dividends at the rate of 10 per cent on the stock that is quoted in the market at 67 for a $20 share ought to be able to sell gas at 75 cents.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Illinois says 67 cents. He means it is quoted in the market at $67 a share on a par value of $20.

Mr. MADDEN. I supposed the shares were $100 par value. Then the stock is three times more valuable than the face of the certificate. Well, this great value attaches to the stock because of the enormous earnings of the company, and the enormous earnings of the company are created by the fact that the company is permitted to charge for the gas exorbitant prices. The fact is that at 75 cents a thousand cubic feet the company would be able to pay handsome dividends, not only on the money it has originally invested in the enterprise, but on the wind and the water it has seen fit to inject into the capitalization of the company.

If this stock is worth $67 for every $20 that the certificate says the company has invested, everybody can see that the value has been made by the privileges that have been granted by the public through the legislation granted by Congress, and I hope that the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill will be able to see his way clear to offer an amendment to the bill of the committee reducing the price proposed to be paid in the bill and making that price 75 cents instead of 90. If, on the other hand, it is determined by the committee to insist upon the figures named in the bill, I am so anxious to see some reduction in the price made to the consumer of gas in this District that I would even be willing to vote for 90 cents rather than not see any reduction made at all.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, before this bill is passed upon, because of the differences in opinion and of the different issues that have been raised by men who are deeply interested in the burning of gas, a commodity to-day that furnishes light, heat, and fuel to the home of everybody, rich and poor, the matter should be well considered. There is no man here to-day on this floor who can say that the expert examination was made by men fully qualified as experts. Because of this fact I shall move that this bill be recommitted to the committee. The real issue is the cost of the production and the cost to the consumer. This city should be the mother influence that goes over the whole country and should name the price, not only in Washington, but in New York and Chicago and in every city in our Union. Let us have the best experts; let us have men worthy of being called experts to pass upon this question. Let us have this issue intelligently investigated by men who are fit to do so. I move that this bill be referred back to the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the suggestion that, so far as possible, Washington in all these matters of public-service corporations should set an example to the country, but, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] said a few moments ago, this committee has no money with which to do these things, and the only way in which, in a measure, the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCMILLAN] could be carried out would be either to authorize the Commissioners of the District, as they have repeatedly requested, to do this work, or to have a separate commission. I have no idea that this Congress will do either.

I have no hesitancy in saying that we as a committee should have made further investigation, but I do not know where or how we would have procured any expert testimony. You must remember that Mr. Bemis was brought here by one party and Mr. Humphreys by another, and that as a committee we listened to their testimony. I for one would have been glad to have spent more time, but I see nothing now to be gained by rereferring this bill to our committee. Let it go to the other end of the Capitol, and let them further investigate, if they so desire.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions. This bill does reduce the price of gas in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the price of gas in the District of Columbia now is too high, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want to say as I have said before that I have thought and still think that gas might be sold in Washington at less than a dollar a thousand. The gentleman a few moments ago referred to the price of gas in different cities. If there is any one thing that is disclosed in the testimony of Mr. Bemis and Mr. Humphreys in this case, it is that the only way in which you can decide is to take each city by itself. Within the last few weeks the city of Indianapolis has passed a franchise fixing the price of gas at 60 cents a thousand. In the city of Saginaw, in Michigan, Judge Gage, one of Michigan's ablest judges, recently handed down an opinion in which he declared that 90 cents a thousand for gas in that city was confiscatory. Therefore, as both of these experts said to us, the only way you can get at these matters is to take each city by itself and all the facts and circumstances connected with the subject, in order to determine what the price of gas should be in that particular city. I ask the Members of the House, to read the testimony of Mr. Bemis and Mr. Humphreys which I will insert as part of my remarks in the RECORD, and I feel sure they will certainly come to the conclusion that there ought to have been a further and more thorough investigation of this matter. The committee has made this report, and it is before the House. It becomes my duty to ask the House to accept it.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Wednesday, April 8, 1908.

Committee called to order at 10.25 a. m., Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH in the chair.

PRICE OF GAS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Statement of Mr. Edward W. Bemis, of Cleveland, Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Bemis, will you please state your name, your residence, and your profession?

Mr. BEMIS. I am superintendent of the waterworks at Cleveland, Ohio, a position that I have held since the fall of 1901. Before that I had been engaged in college teaching for ten years at the University of Chicago, and elsewhere, and that also been engaged in statistical investigations of municipal work, particularly with regard to gas. During the last few years I have been appearing before courts and commissions quite extensively in connection with gas cases, more particularly in connection with fixing the price for gas; for example, in the last three or four years I have appeared before the New York State Commission a great many times in connection with the price of gas in New York City, Syracuse, and Buffalo, and before the federal court or referee appointed by the court in the New York gas case.

I also have done work in court for Saginaw, Mich., and Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and have done work for Chicago, Boston, Montreal, Baltimore, and several other cities. My work has not been directly that of a gas engineer, for I have never been engaged directly in the gas business. Of course, my work at the waterworks has been more or less along the same lines in some ways—that is, the distribution system is somewhat similar; the methods of handling business are somewhat similar—but I have gone into it more directly in connection with the statistical and financial side. I may say also that I was one of the committee of five of the National Civic Federation that had to do with the very extensive investigation of municipal ownership in this country and in Europe. There was a larger committee, but a subcommittee was appointed of five to do the work, hire the experts, write the report, and I was one of that subcommittee, going abroad with the experts and visiting a good share of the large gas and electric light plants of Great Britain and a number in this country.

I make that statement at your request as a general introduction. I may say, by the way, that as I go on I have no objections to any interruption, and at the close I will expect a good many questions.

As I understand it, the committee has to do primarily with the repeal, or the demand for the repeal, of a certain section 5 of the gas laws of the District of Columbia with respect to the capitalization of the gas companies here and at Georgetown, but that the larger question of the proper price for gas comes up directly, that you wanted both questions more or less considered. As a matter of fact, they can not be separated. It may be from many points of view immaterial whether you have a million dollars of stock worth 300 on the market, every share representing $300 worth of property, the share itself having a par value of $100, or whether you have $3,000,000 of stock worth $100, or $6,000,000 of stock worth $50. It all amounts to the same thing in the total market value. Nevertheless, if the Government is going to do anything in the regulation of capitalization, it is quite common for the courts, and even for public opinion, to consider that there should be some relation between that capitalization and a proper investment on which to compute a proper profit in fixing the price of gas; and therefore the capitalization that is allowed does seem to have, whether we think it ought to or not, some influence upon the courts and public opinion with respect to the question of price. I refer to nominal capitalization as represented in so many nominal shares of stock.

Now, in approaching this subject, we do not have as many precedents as you might expect from the importance of the subject. It is to a considerable degree still untried, and you can feel, I think, that you are making history on this question. You can also feel that, although there are not so many precedents at present, public opinion is rapidly forming in certain directions, and will undoubtedly in the future look back with a good deal of criticism or approval upon what is now done, as it is so important.

Now, first, regarding capitalization, and then in regard to the price.

The present law, as I understand it, in the District of Columbia aims to allow a company, whenever it comes before the proper authorities, to capitalize any earnings that have gone into the plant or into the property. There is a dispute as to what the word "plant" means, I understand, but anyway the earnings have been invested in something, and if it can be shown to the court, the theory of the law seems to contemplate that it may be capitalized.

Now that needs to be examined in the light of two theories that have largely prevailed in recent years with regard to how to treat profits that come from the consumer, for that is what it means, capital that the consumer furnishes. It is not claimed that it is capital directly furnished by the stockholders. The stockholder has furnished capital, and he gets his dividend—in this case 10 per cent—but in addition to that the consumer has furnished a large amount of capital, how much is not yet definitely stated, and the company demands the right to capitalize and earn dividends on that.

Now, there have been two theories with regard to how to treat such profit as comes from the consumer. One theory has prevailed very largely in Massachusetts ever since perhaps the creation of a commission in 1885, and it is this: The company, under this theory, should be encouraged to earn for a while more than it is permitted to divide into dividends, more than the law would consider proper, or public policy would consider proper to earn if it were to go to the stockholders. The idea is that the amount that the company shall be allowed to earn in excess of the proper amount to distribute will be put into the plant, not, however, to go to the stockholder, but to stay there until some future time when perhaps the money the stockholder furnished does not represent more than half or third of the investment, the money the consumer furnished representing the rest. There will thus come a time after a while when the plant has become very large, but with a very small nominal stock. Then the consumer will get the benefit of the capital thereafter furnished, and the company will continue to be allowed to give dividends upon what the stockholder has furnished, but not upon what the consumer has furnished; and ultimately the consumer will get a very low price for gas.

The theory has been strongly held, but it has had very grave difficulties in the courts—there has been no formal adjudication of this subject, the case coming up first in Haverhill, Mass. There the gas commission ordered a reduction in the price of gas that would leave only the usual dividend on the small amount of stock that the company had itself furnished, which was only one-fifth of the actual physical value of the property, the rest having all come from earnings. The company refused to obey the decision of the commission, and the case has not yet been adjudicated in the courts. There is some claim that the commission has hesitated about bringing the case to a head for fear it would lose, although a member of the commission now tells me that they are expecting to bring it to a head this year and get a decision. But it has been in the courts for six or eight years, and there has been a growing feeling that it was rather dangerous for the consumer to furnish capital with the idea that he ever would get it back again or get benefit from it. It is more than likely if he does not eat his cake when he can get it, he never will. If the profits are once allowed to go into possession of the company and furnish its capital, it is probable that the consumer will never enjoy the benefits of it, but that the company will. That has become so strong a feeling of late that the Massachusetts commission has changed its attitude on the subject and is insisting upon reductions at present in the price whenever cases come before them rather than to allow the profits above a reasonable dividend to go into the plant without capitalization. And the tendency of legislation of late has been along the same line.

There has, however, been another theory which has been more largely prevalent in Europe, especially in England, which is that the consumer shall get the benefit immediately of the profits of the company; that the company shall not declare more than certain dividends, neither shall it earn more, and all beyond that shall go immediately to a reduction of the price; and if the company wants more capital it must go to the proper government board or Parliament and get that right, and furnish the capital itself in the shape of selling stock and bonds in the open market or auction to the highest bidder.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In a somewhat extensive, but a very hurried, investigation that I have been able to make within the past five or six weeks of this very important question I have found this proposition somewhere that the gas company may increase its capital stock in the proportion that it reduces the price of gas.

Mr. KELIHER. That is the law in Massachusetts to-day, is it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it is.

Mr. BEMIS. In regard to one company in Massachusetts, in Boston.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it was in consideration of the Boston law that I found that theory. What do you think of that theory?

Mr. BEMIS. It prevails in a few places in England, from which it was introduced into Massachusetts with respect to that one company, the Boston company. That theory has worked very well in Boston, and under it the price of gas has been voluntarily reduced by the company below the 90 cents at which the ordinance fixed it when it took effect—first to 85, and then in July of last year the company voluntarily reduced it to 80 cents, because, under the sliding scale and the reduction of 5 cents in price below 90 cents, they could increase their dividends from 7 per cent upward. The greatest objection to the law is the fact that you tie this up for a long time to come, but whatever may be the present adjudication as to a proper capitalization you must tie this up, and ought to, for quite a while in order to be a proper protection to the company and encourage it to go on in reductions; but the moment you do that you are assuming to decide to-day for quite a long time to come what your basis shall be for the reduction in price and for increase of capital. There is so great an uncertainty now as to the proper basis of capitalization of such companies, and the public sentiment is so rapidly changing on the subject, that a good many hesitate about introducing this sliding scale very rapidly just now, but are continuing the rather short relations or engagements with companies, not tying themselves to long franchises or long contracts which the sliding scale contemplates, letting the matter drift a little and trying to get every four or five years such reductions as investigations show are deserved and merited, and perhaps in time the sliding scale will be generally introduced.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you regard that as scientific?

Mr. BEMIS. I regard the sliding scale as an improvement over most of our efforts, but I do not feel quite ready to tie to it—not just now when public sentiment is so rapidly changing on the subject. I think it is best to leave the matter a little more open for a while yet, and I would rather see the experiment tried in Boston. I am awaiting for that with a good deal of interest, and the service is working well there. I am afraid that that basis, if taken now, would be very unpopular in a community ten or fifteen years hence.

I have spoken of two theories of the disposition of consumers' profits. One theory is to encourage the company to take it and invest it in the plant and never to capitalize it, but to give the consumer the benefit of it, if the courts will allow; and the other theory is to see that they shall turn over to the consumer all the profit in the shape of low prices beyond what is reasonable return on the capital that the stockholder has put in, and do it every year. But this law unfortunately has none of the benefits of either one of these propositions and is worse than either, for this law provides directly that the company shall keep these profits, and, having kept them, shall never return them, but shall capitalize them whenever they please to do so and can show that it has taken the profits.

So that this law directly antagonizes everything that they have attempted to do in Massachusetts, and does not attempt to do what they have tried to do in England, give the benefit to the consumer; but has the disadvantage of both schemes and leads to a tendency to absorb entirely and forever any profits that are made in the gas business. But you may reply, If it is not allowed to do this, why can't the company declare a larger dividend? It has the right to declare, perhaps, as large a dividend as it wants to, in Washington. There are, of course, places where that might not be legal, but I suppose it is here. Therefore if the company should not, as a matter of public policy, be allowed to take the profits from the consumer and put them in the plant, and avoid raising money by direct contribution of stockholder and bondholder, what would prevent its treating the consumer badly by dividing the profit as it accumulates in larger dividends? Simply the company would not dare do it, that is all; and that is one of the bases of the present scheme; it enables the community to be deceived as to the profits of the company.

You have to face here not only what is legal, but what the public opinion will tolerate. Public opinion will not tolerate a 20 per cent dividend in the gas business. If the company can show that for a long period of time it has not made any dividends—of course the company might have existed for many years and not made any money—then if it declares a 20 per cent dividend, which one would say was a reasonable recoupment for not earning anything for a long time, there might not be any objection. But if the company had been earning good dividends, the community would not tolerate an open payment of large dividends; but this law allows the community to be deceived, or go to sleep on that matter. Take, for example, the reports just made to Congress by the Washington Gaslight Company, shown in House Document No. 609. It appears from this document that the company declares that it made a profit last year, which it spent for extensions and construction aside from what it put in the renewal reserve fund; that it earned and spent for extensions and construction $130,602.24, and had a further surplus of $139,290.82, or a total of $269,893.26, which is over 10 per cent on the $2,600,000 paid-up capital stock. So that the company, in addition to declaring a 10 per cent dividend on that stock, put into the plant the surplus, a little over 10 per cent more, but the community does not realize that fact at all. Or, put it in another way: The company has $2,600,000 of paid-up capital stock, and $2,600,000 of dividend certificates of indebtedness, paying, I believe, 6 per cent. I do not yet see how under the law they ever had a legal right to declare those certificates of indebtedness or to issue them. It seems to me like evasion of the law. It was really a stock dividend of 100 per cent to the stockholders out of earnings that the consumer had furnished, and without going to any court under this law, simply evading the idea of having an investigation, they just simply issued these certificates, as I understand it; I may be wrong on a hasty reading of the evidence, but that is what I infer from the evidence and from what I have seen in Moody's Manual and elsewhere.

Mr. OLCOTT. I do not quite understand one thing you mentioned there. You spoke of the earnings and surplus being $269,893 and the paid-up capital stock as $2,600,000. That did not much more than enable them to pay their 10 per cent dividend on that; it is about $9,000 more. Those are the figures you gave us, are they not?

Mr. BEMIS. I did not state, because I took it for granted that you were familiar with the fact—but I see that I should have stated it—that after they had paid a dividend of $269,000——

Mr. OLCOTT. I only call your attention to this, because I want to have it correct in the hearings.

Mr. BEMIS. They had paid $260,000 in dividends, and $179,948 in interest, the interest consisting chiefly of the 6 per cent on the $2,600,000 of certificates. After having done all of that, they still had 10 per cent interest on the stock; I did not go back to the point as to whether the stock was ever the result of earnings from the consumer or not; but assuming for the moment that the stockholder had furnished all of that, which I remember has been disputed by many, this 6 per cent on the certificates of indebtedness and the 10 per cent that went into the surplus made 16 per cent—plus the 10 per cent actually declared, makes 26 per cent. So that assuming that the $2,600,000 of paid-up capital stock was really paid up by the stockholders, and not by the consumers, then the earnings last year were 26 per cent, according to this report.

I am not asking you to accept any theory of mine, but to take their own returns, given to Congress on February 1, and which I am sure the company will not dispute. Or we may put it in this way: If the company is entitled to $2,600,000 of certificates, then what they put into the surplus is equivalent to a 5 per cent addition to their dividends, making their dividends 15 per cent, and 5 per cent additional to the 6 per cent upon the certificates, or 11 per cent on that. While legally I suppose the company could declare a dividend of any amount—20, 30, or 40 per cent—the people would not long endure that if they knew it. But this law directly does allow it without the people knowing of its being done, which constitutes a very great phase, to my mind, of its viciousness. And that is not all. Not only does this law deceive the public as to the profits, and if taken advantage of by the company in the formal way allows a permanent capitalization, but it can be interpreted by the court or by the referee, who acts under the law, in a way to exert still worse results, and that is very apparent in what is before us in the case of the Georgetown Gaslight Company, and therefore I want to speak a moment upon that.

I have before me the report of the auditor in the Georgetown case. I find that he secured from the company a report of all the money that they had put into the plant since it started. He did not secure from them any statement as to the amount of renewals to take care of depreciation from year to year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You say that is not shown in the report?

Mr. BEMIS. Not for the entire period; no. There was a little testimony as to the buildings having depreciated 5 or 10 per cent, and a few little things like that, but most of the property had no depreciation charge upon it, and there are no returns as to the amount of renewals put in the plant since it started. Perhaps that would be difficult to obtain, since the company went back to 1853; nevertheless, no effort appears to have been made running back for any length of time to have gotten it. We are left in the dark whether this investment of $353,568.39, which is all the company claims it has ever invested in Georgetown, has had charged off any depreciation or not. It was quite common until late years for companies not to charge off depreciation, but to merely keep up a fair degree of repairs from the earnings and pay out the rest of the profits, and then, after a series of years, issue a new block of stock for further extensions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What have you found to be the average per cent of depreciation of gas companies?

Mr. BEMIS. It varies very much with the many conditions. You have got to take into account how much they do spend, for repairs and the reserve for depreciation go together. You may spend so much on your plant from year to year in renewals that you have no depreciation at all. That is the common method with our steam railroads now, such as the Lake Shore and the Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is claimed by some that railroad property is renewed every ten years.

Mr. BEMIS. The best illustration we have of the extent to which this can be carried is the New York gas case, where the Consolidated Gas Company has kept very accurate returns for twenty years, and it has spent on the average 10.6 cents per thousand feet for repairs and renewals; and the testimony of their own witnesses, engineers and superintendents, shows that the plant at the time of the hearings in 1907 was in better shape in every way than in 1884, when they began their system of bookkeeping on that subject. In other words, the 10.6 cents had much more than kept the plant in good condition. It had improved the plant, very largely improved it. They had taken out small service pipes and put in large ones, and charged it to renewal. They had done very much in their manufacturing plant to improve it and to get a much better plant out of it, so that the question is a difficult one to answer. The amount will vary all the way from 6 or 8 cents a thousand feet for repairs or renewals up to 15 cents.

Mr. KELIHER. What are they selling gas for in New York now?

Mr. BEMIS. One dollar per thousand. The case is before the courts now.

Mr. OLCOTT. The decision of the master was in favor of the company.

Mr. BEMIS. Yes. The decision of the judge indicated that about 85 cents per thousand would be a price that would be a reasonable price, but that 80 cents was not, for reasons that I will come to in a moment.

In most hearings that I have attended gas companies insist on a depreciation charge of more than 2 per cent a year. But I took occasion last night to see what a 2 per cent depreciation charge written off on the declining value of every year since 1853 would amount to, and it would take off one-third of it, leaving the Georgetown property worth only about $225,000. I think that is extreme; I think it is too high. Very likely the plant has been pretty well kept up by renewals and out of earnings, as it should have been, so I only give that as an extreme illustration. But there should have been much more taken off, probably, than there was by the referee, since the company made very little allowance for depreciation in their testimony.

It is rather amusing that in almost every case of litigation that I have ever been in the depreciation has always begun at the time the case came up for hearing; there was never any in the past; but from the time of the hearings it must be allowed for on the price of gas in the future. It is a wonderful situation—never any depreciation in the past, and it has always begun at the time of the hearing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As a matter of fact, is there much depreciation in the strength and durability of a gas main as the years go by?

Mr. BEMIS. No; there is very little depreciation in gas mains if there is no electrolysis, and there should be very little in Washington because of the conduit system here. The main will practically last for two hundred years. Of course it may become too small in some districts. There is no limit, however, to the durability of either water or gas mains; that is, where there is no salt or ashes to eat into it and where there is no electrolysis.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is really the heavy expense, is it not, in these plants?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes. Of course there is always a considerable expense for depreciation for the manufacturing plant, which must be kept up-to-date, which is from 6 or 8 cents up to 15 cents, according to the size of the plant. In smaller cities, particularly where the cities are growing rapidly, and where you have a population of twenty-five or thirty thousand, as in the western towns, there you would have to allow a depreciation much greater for displacement by growth than in the larger cities of the East, which are fairly standardized.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What per cent of the cost of a gas plant in a city the size of this would be in the mains?

Mr. BEMIS. It varies a good deal, but I would not be surprised to find half of it. I find this company, after setting aside an amount for repairs, also set aside for renewals, as it should have done, last year—and the total is a little over 8 cents per thousand feet of gas—8.17 cents. This includes what they do not include as depreciation, $7,328 for material destroyed and $4,000 for material charged off. That probably was a reasonable allowance, so far as we know at present. Anyway it is what the company considered was a reasonable allowance and I am not in a position, without further light on the subject, from examination, to say that it is wrong. But considering in a broad way how the law is interpreted, it seems to me that in the Georgetown decision—and that illustrated what will happen in the city of Washington if the law continues—depreciation does not seem to have been charged off as much as I should think it ought to have been. In the next place, the auditor attempted to determine, not what had been invested in the plant out of the earnings of the consumer, but what the plant could be duplicated for. I have not noticed any reference to any illegality in that point of view, but it strikes me that it violates the spirit of the first sentence of the fifth section, "that neither the Washington Gaslight Company nor the Georgetown Gaslight Company shall hereafter issue any greater number of shares of stock than shall be equal to the actual cash value of said plants and necessary cost of the construction of future extensions or future enlargements of plants."

If the company is going to enlarge its plant to-day—if, for example, it discovers that there is an unpaved street about to be paved, and that it has no street main on that street, it would lay its main there probably. That is the way almost all gas mains are laid. Then it could under this law go to the court and say that it is going to cost them so much to put this main down and they want the right to capitalize that cost. The court could say, "Well and good" under this law. Suppose, however, the gas company is shrewd, and says, "No, we will not do that; we will wait; we will put the main down, but we will wait until the Government has come along and paved over the main. Then we will go to the court and say, "If we had come to you two or three years ago we could only have asked for what it cost us, but by waiting three years we are going to ask for 60 or 75 per cent more, because we are now going to ask not only what it cost us, but what it would cost us to construct it now, because the company has put the paving down." It would seem to me that that violates the whole letter and spirit of the act. When this act provided that they can only capitalize the future extensions on the basis of cost, it must have intended to apply it to whatever was put in, but the auditor has gone on and taken an entirely different theory—that it can apply to the past one theory and to the future another theory.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It developed in the trial of the Georgetown case, as shown by the record and the pleadings and briefs, that the court refused to hear any testimony, ex parte or otherwise, or anyone, excepting the gas company. Do you regard that as a fair sort of way at which to arrive at the value of the gas plant?

Mr. BEMIS. I have rarely known that to be pursued. It would not strike anyone as being fair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Taking the practical side of it—you have been on both sides, in all probability, of gas questions in many States——

Mr. BEMIS. I have been connected with twenty such cases, but I have never seen a case in which both sides have not been heard.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Even experts would differ, would they not?

Mr. BEMIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. An auditor making an examination to-day would probably have some of his conclusions or findings disputed by another auditor on the same question to-morrow?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes.

Mr. OLCOTT. It is the general experience that experts never agree anyhow.

Mr. BEMIS. No; I suppose they do not.

Mr. SIMS. Has it been the rule for capital stock to be issued upon the value of the franchises, earnings, and rights where nothing has been paid in as an investment made for those rights or franchises? Is it usual to include that in capitalization?

Mr. BEMIS. I was going to refer to that a little later, but I will refer to it now. That is one of the points in which the auditor has interpreted this law even worse than it reads on its face. He has interpreted this law as allowing a capitalization of the franchise and good will, as he calls it, but the rulings of the Massachusetts and New York commissions and the custom in England have not been that way; they have always been rigidly against that. The only case in which I have known a court to sustain a capitalization of a franchise is the recent New York gas case, which I am pretty familiar with, as I have done a good deal of work on it for the city of New York, and have carefully read Judge Hough's opinion, which I have here, and which shows very clearly two or three things: First, that he believed it to be absolutely ridiculous to capitalize a franchise, and that he was absolutely opposed to capitalizing franchises; and that the only reason he allowed it in this case was because the law had allowed it back in 1884 when it provided for the consolidation of the manufacturing corporations of New York City, and at a capitalization to include the value of their property and franchises, and because this has never been tested in the courts, and because the stock and bonds had been outstanding for over twenty years—on that basis Judge Hough said he thought that he had better pass it up to the United States Supreme Court for further action. And in a later decision, or a supplemental decision, in respect to further hearings on this very case, when he was asked to again review his position, he states: "For all I can see, the franchise of 1884 might as well have been valued on just the amount of stock issued on the face; it was enough to attempt to capitalize expected profits, but the attempt has now twenty years to justify it." It was because it had had twenty years uninterrupted legal success, and for that reason alone—as I read the original decision—he indorsed this in that particular case.

Mr. OLCOTT. That consolidation took place in 1884 and especially provided that the franchise should be valued?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes. It was contended by the State, even if that were done, the franchise had run out and had no value.

Mr. OLCOTT. Was not the law tested just immediately after 1884? There was certainly a good deal of litigation, according to my recollection, about that gas-consolidation act.

Mr. BEMIS. There is still disagreement among the lawyers——

Mr. OLCOTT. Wasn't it decided by the court of appeals of New York State?

Mr. BEMIS. I heard it discussed among the attorneys as to what the decision settled, but whether it settled that case was still a matter of discussion.

Mr. OLCOTT. I know the State had a vast amount of litigation with the gas company, and I thought they were beaten.

Mr. BEMIS. Now, further on this franchise matter, that is an argument for repealing this law before rights are secured under it. Certainly it is against public policy, it strikes me, to capitalize a gift from the community and make a community pay interest on its own gift. If it gives to the company a fair return on the capital furnished by the company, it seems to me it has gone as far as it should. Then the question comes up of capitalization of good will or established connections with the customer. Those connections with the consumer were either paid for directly by the consumer, who owns part of the service—the service at least from the sidewalk in—or they were charged to construction by the company and allowed in their schedules, or the soliciting of the business was a proper charge to the promotion, and paid for in operating expenses—that is, the canvassing, the advertising, the securing of business. Nevertheless, they have gone ahead here and capitalized those established connections with the consumers. I am trying to find the number of them in this Georgetown case, but they were somewhat over 2,000—I will assume that they were 2,000—and they value the franchise rights and good will at $66,000, or about $30 a connection. In other words, what they have done has been to capitalize the consumer at $30 a head. What that means would be this: I am a consumer in Washington and pay for having the service put in. In the operating expenses I pay for all charges for promotion, having paid for the canvassing which secured me as a consumer, and having paid interest on any construction costs the company has been put to for service connected with my house. I then have to go to work and pay interest on myself for the rest of my life. That is what this means. The consumer shall not only pay the expense of getting himself connected with the gas company, but after the connection is made he shall pay interest on it the rest of his days. That is one of the most ridiculous contentions ever made by a gas company.

Again, in this Georgetown case the auditor has interpreted the law to allow him to increase the value of the land. I question if land usually is worth more for gas-making purposes, because of the growth on the lands around it, than it was when purchased, but you have got to find one horn or the other of the dilemma. If you are going to increase the value of your land with the growth of the value of the land surrounding it, you have got to take the basis on which the value of the land is fixed in the neighborhood, and that is what it would be wanted for for ordinary purposes. Gas land would not be wanted for ordinary purposes, and therefore if you are going to value the land at the increased value on the basis of what the land around is worth, you can only value the manufacturing plant on it at its scrap value. I think it is a great deal fairer to value the apparatus at its cost, or take account of the depreciation, or even the cost of duplication, and to give to the land the value paid for it. To be sure, the company could sell that land if it cared to and move to another location; I think that right would be recognized. But while it is using it for gas-making purposes I do not think it should be too ready to increase the capitalization with the assumed increase of the value of the land.

Mr. OLCOTT. Why should not the gas company have the right to get the unearned increment just as well as the individual?

Mr. BEMIS. It can when it sells it; but I do not think that during its use it is really of any more value for gas-making purposes. I doubt if its value for gas-making purposes has increased, and I think that you can not fix a value for the land excepting as you throw it in the open market and strip it of its improvements.

Mr. OLCOTT. The taxes will have increased?

Mr. BEMIS. But the taxes must have been paid by the consumer.

Mr. OLCOTT. But the tax increase shows that the land has itself increased in value, even if used for gas-making purposes?

Mr. BEMIS. That would seem to indicate it to that extent; that is true.

Now, if you are going to adopt the theory as to the value of the property in case of duplication, you ought to take into account what the prospective purchaser should give who had a franchise and no gas property, and had a right to buy this property or locate anywhere else in the city and duplicate the plant. It is more likely that he would take cheaper land.

But take the question of street mains in this Georgetown case. They have capitalized the street mains, the new paving that has gone over them since they were put down, and there seems to have been no complete investigation as to whether all the street mains were put down before the paving or not, but in most cases they are, and I shall assume for the moment that they were until further evidence is introduced. If they were, then what has happened is this: That $54,000 capitalization has been added by the auditor on account of the paving, for that is what is accepted as the value of the paving, plus 10 per cent, making about $60,000. That, to my mind, is equally absurd. The consumer, as the taxpayer, pays for the paving, and then he has to pay interest on it in the form of a higher price for gas. If the auditor is consistent in that view, then this company would have the right, every time the city of Washington put down some more paving, to charge more for gas, because the company could go to the courts and say: "Here, my property is worth $100,000 more this year than last, because the Government has put paving over my mains; therefore I am not charging enough to pay for the outstanding amount on that cost." Logically that is a direct result of that reasoning, and yet you can see how ridiculous it is when it is analyzed.

Mr. NYE. Was that allowed by the court in the Georgetown case?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes; they added $54,000 for paving without apparently stopping to find out whether the company had paid for the paving or not. In fact, the tendency of the testimony seems to be that probably the company had not put down many mains after the paving was laid, but that the company ought to have the right to capitalize it because it would cost $54,000 for a new company coming in now and laying mains under this pavement.

The working capital, too, was taken by the auditor at $30,000, which does not seem to have been accompanied with sufficient investigation of how much credit the company was enjoying. For example, if the company had two months' credit on coal, oil, and other supplies without interest, then to that extent there should be a deduction made from the working capital. What the company paid no interest on it should have no right to charge the consumer. But there does not seem to have been any recognition of that fact.

Now, I have taken up these matters merely to indicate how many defects there are in the present law, which is bad enough on its face, and it is still capable of still worse interpretation than has been put upon it in this decision. And therefore it strikes me that the first thing necessary is to repeal the law before further valuations are attempted under it. The law may be constitutional—I understand that point is being tested—but it certainly is against public policy, as I look at it.

Now, I want to say a word about the question of the price for gas, assuming for the moment that you have desired to consider that when this other matter is out of the way. Any full consideration of either the price of gas or proper capitalization can only come after a very considerable study, a study by expert engineers, a study by expert accountants. In any case which I have ever been connected with there has been a large amount of time necessary for such investigations. Even the smaller cities of 50,000 population have found it necessary to go into the matter quite exhaustively. The company will do that, and the public must do it in order to present its side of the case, and the court should have all of that information before it. It would certainly be impossible for me to go into a full consideration of the proper price in Washington with the very small amount of available data at present. All I shall attempt to do will be merely to call your attention to two or three things, which I think no one will controvert.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was not the price of gas yesterday found by the House to be worth 75 cents?

Mr. OLCOTT. For the public schools.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, if it is worth 75 cents to the Government, I think it is worth 75 cents to the individual.

The CHAIRMAN. Allow me to ask you whether, with the experience you have now had with the Washington Gaslight Company, you are able to say what the price of gas should be here?

Mr. BEMIS. I was going to say a few things about that, and I think perhaps it is best to say them in the way I am going to do. I said a moment ago that I have not information enough, and that it is impossible for anyone to have information enough, to settle that question offhand, but what I am going to say is this: That there are a few facts that no one can controvert. The company has made a report, which I have already referred to, for the year 1907, and it is embodied in House Document No. 609, Sixtieth Congress, first session. It is the annual report as of February 1, 1908, signed by John R. McLean, president, and furnishes a list of the stockholders. It is not to be assumed that the company will put its profits too high or its cost of gas too low. The tendency rather, I should think, would be in the opposite direction. The company has stated that after paying all expenses and providing for a depreciation and renewal account, it had left the profit paid as dividends of 10 per cent on its stock, and an average of 5.629 per cent on some improvement bonds, of $598,700. It also paid 6 per cent on $2,600,000 of certificates of indebtedness, which represented apparently, as I have said before, a stock dividend out of the consumer; and in addition to that, as I have already indicated, they earned and put into the plant a surplus of about $270,000. Now, that amounts to 14.57 cents per thousand feet of gas, and the average price, they say, for their gas was a dollar.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that 14½ cents profit per thousand feet?

Mr. BEMIS. After paying dividends and interest. Their actual cost, they claim, was 62 cents.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For manufacture and distribution both?

Mr. BEMIS. Manufacture, distribution, depreciation, and renewal. They claim that they had to put into the plant after paying interest and dividends 14.57 cents. They could have, according to their own report, furnished gas at about 85 cents, and still have paid interest, dividends, renewal, and depreciation account which they did pay.

Mr. TAYLOR. On their own capital stock?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes. At a price of 85 cents, that would be 10 per cent on the stock, 6 per cent on the certificates, and an average of 5.625 per cent on the bonds.

Mr. TAYLOR. Including fixed charges?

Mr. BEMIS. Everything, including 10 per cent on the stock, 6 per cent on the certificates of indebtedness, and the interest they paid on the bonds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That includes all fixed charges, rents, salary, and other expenses that would not be included in the manufacture and distribution, and the depreciation?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes.

Mr. OLCOTT. Following out the remarks that you made when you began, you rather approve of their keeping some surplus providing they do not attempt to capitalize the surplus afterwards. Say we have 14.57 cents taken off, and the gas sells for 85 cents, which includes this surplus, I imagine you think that would be a good thing for them to have in case of an emergency when they could not get money.

Mr. BEMIS. I am glad you brought that out. I said the plan in Massachusetts had been along that line for years, but experience had shown that it was unwise. Approaching it from another point of view, the company claims an actual operating cost and expense of renewals to meet depreciation of 62.116 cents, but in that amount there are three items of expense at least which I think would be subject to criticism, to say nothing of what an exhaustive study of their books and accounts would reveal. These three items are, first, they have a leakage of about 10 per cent, while good companies like Boston, Baltimore, Chicago, and many others have a leakage below 5 per cent; 3 or 4 per cent, I believe. A leakage of 5 per cent would reduce their expense about 2 cents per thousand feet.

Mr. KELIHER. Is that due to lax methods or a poor plant?

Mr. BEMIS. Some fault of the system, or care for it; I would not undertake to say now what. You will find plenty of small companies that have a leakage of 10 or 15 or even a greater percentage, but I speak of the better companies.

Again, they have a legal expense of nearly 2 cents per 1,000 feet, while the average expense per 1,000 feet for legal expenses of all the 60 companies in Massachusetts is less than 1 cent—about three-quarters of a cent. They have probably had an extra expense on account of this litigation, and they have doubtless charged that up to the consumer, and the propriety of that is open to discussion. It certainly is not a normal amount.

Then they have charged in as operating expenses interest on deposits of consumers, which is a capital charge. In other words, they make the consumer in many cases put up a deposit, which is perfectly proper to do, but the interest on it is not an operating cost; it is a capital charge, if the deposit is used as capital; and therefore in speaking of operating cost we ought to exclude any interest charge and put it in the capital account.

Mr. OLCOTT. How much difference does that make?

Mr. BEMIS. The three together make 3.2 cents, and taking that from the 62 cents, about, you have 58.9 cents.

Mr. OLCOTT. I understood you to say 2 cents for the legal cost and 2 cents for the leakage.

Mr. BEMIS. I only took off one of them; I took the average, that is, I took 1 cent out of the two. It is 5 per cent, which would mean only about 2 cents per thousand feet.

Now, that reduces the expense, even by those cursory suggestions, to 58.9 cents. Since that includes repairs and renewals, they can easily be obtained. There has been recently a decision in the little town of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where Judge Ellison, of the Iowa state court, has lately ordered a reduction to 90 cents, although the operating cost was 68 or 69 cents, more even than this cursory examination indicates in Washington.

Mr. TAYLOR. And then in a town of smaller size it costs more to produce gas than in a larger place?

Mr. BEMIS. Very much more. If Boston can sell gas at a profit at 80 cents, it would certainly appear that Washington, which is nearer the coal, gas, and oil fields, ought to do so.

Mr. KELIHER. From your investigation made here, how do you think the principle of the sliding scale in operation now in Boston would apply to the local conditions here?

Mr. BEMIS. I should not want to make any suggestions of how to apply it without more study. Of course, it could be applied by taking a price and a dividend, and letting the company change the price 5 cents, and then change the dividend 1 per cent after that, and so on, but you would have to be careful as to the amount of stock you allowed them to start with.

Mr. KELIHER. But from what you learned in Boston, it is an unqualified success there?

Mr. BEMIS. It has been a success up there; I do not say unqualified, because there are criticisms of it; but President Richards is a magnificent manager.

Mr. CARY. Have you any statistics concerning the gas company in Milwaukee?

Mr. BEMIS. No; I have never had occasion to investigate it, but I know they are charging in the neighborhood of 80 cents for it, and at Detroit and Grand Rapids about the same.

Mr. CARY. The Milwaukee Gas Company rate is from 60 to 80 cents per thousand, according to the amount used; and not that alone, but they give a certain percentage in wages every six months to employees.

Mr. BEMIS. They do that in Boston; therefore I should say that 85 cents is a maximum charge, and it looks, from all of these considerations, that it should be considerably lower than that, but I do not want to make any definite statement now, because it should be a matter of careful investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would explain what causes the difference in cost in the difference in candlepower.

Mr. BEMIS. Candlepower is high here, as it is in Chicago, Philadelphia, and New York, and the difference of five candles will make a difference of about a gallon of oil per thousand feet, and that will cost them from 4 to 5 cents.

Mr. TAYLOR. The candlepower here is about 22?

Mr. BEMIS. The average of the District is about 23. The law requires 22.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is high. It runs as low as 15 in illuminating gas in other places?

Mr. BEMIS. In Boston the average was 18.3 last year, according to the state inspection.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it in Milwaukee?

Mr. BEMIS. From the data I have from the president of the company, I am told that it is about 18, and also that in Detroit and Grand Rapids. In Chicago it is 22, Philadelphia 22. It is 24 in Chicago a mile from the works.

Mr. SMITH. I have the honor to represent in part the city of Detroit, and during nearly all of last winter, after reducing the price of gas to 80 cents, the papers were filled with statements from people to the effect that their gas bills were larger than they were before. Will you please explain what brings that about?

Mr. BEMIS. If there is a proper testing of the gas, it can not occur. What often happens is this: That the people, since the reduction in the price, use a good deal more for fuel purposes, cooking, and so forth.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; it is just like in the cheapening of railroad and street-car fares; they ride more and use more money.

Mr. BEMIS. What really happens, they use more gas and less coal.

The CHAIRMAN. What course do you think we ought to pursue in order to get at a fair price for gas in the city of Washington? I wish you would indicate just what you think we ought to do.

Mr. BEMIS. I think you ought to repeal this law, and have a thorough investigation of the books of the company running back several years, going fully to every account as to what it costs them, find out just how much it has earned out of their dollar and put in the plant every year, and just what it has cost them before they did that. Also get some idea of the average expense as compared with last year, and whether last year was normal or abnormal.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not think we can get at the price to fix by spending an hour in this way, with all due respect to you?

Mr. BEMIS. No; and I do not come——

Mr. NYE. Your conclusion ought to be worth something to us, however.

Mr. BEMIS. Of course you can do this: You can pass an act making a reduction, assuming that the courts will not hold it to be confiscatory, and that the courts will declare it confiscatory if it does reduce the price too low. You can pass an arbitrary act saying that you think that the circumstances justify 80-cent gas, or whatever you fix, and leave it to the courts to go into the investigation. Undoubtedly some time or other there will have to be an investigation. Make it 75 cents, if you wish; but I think it would be better if you can have this investigation, and if you can do that I think you can pass an act making a conservative reduction, but not going to the extreme limits, and then leave it to the courts for further investigation.

Mr. CARY. But you think 85 cents would be the maximum?

Mr. BEMIS. I do not see how you can possibly make it higher than that, in view of this company's report.

Mr. MURPHY. The courts would probably investigate anyway.

Mr. BEMIS. It would depend a good deal upon what the evidence is. It is pretty hard for the company to go back on its books in the courts.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can you give the name of some city located very much as Washington is, and about the same size, containing, say, 325,000 people or about that, and located as to fuel and supplies about the same, so as to have about the same cost of production?

Mr. BEMIS. The only city I think of at the moment is Baltimore, but Baltimore is not situated quite the same.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the rate there?

Mr. BEMIS. It varies from 85 cents to a dollar, I think. I have not the lowest figures. It may be lower now, but that was my information a few months ago. But you can not very well be guided by Baltimore, for the reason that there has been no great effort made to get a low price there, and that is true of four-fifths of the cities of the country. The people have not paid much attention to it.

Mr. NYE. Are you familiar with the condition in Minneapolis?

Mr. BEMIS. I once lived there, but it was many years ago.

Mr. NYE. We approximately have 300,000 people.

Mr. BEMIS. Yes. The price of gas is 90 cents there now, is it not?

Mr. NYE. Yes; they have been paying a dollar up to recently, and have been squabbling over it for a year, insisting upon a reduction to 80 cents. I do not know whether they have come to a conclusion upon it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. If a dollar is a fair price for 23-candlepower gas, in the same proportion what would 18-candlepower gas be worth?

Mr. BEMIS. About 5 cents less, I should think.

Mr. OLCOTT. Did you come here at the request of a citizen of Washington?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes; Mr. Welliver, of the Washington Times.

Mr. SIMS. Considering the gas that is made here, 23-candlepower, and taking into consideration such facts as you have been able to gather from your limited investigation, what do you think the maximum reasonable price for gas to private individuals in this city should be?

Mr. BEMIS. It should run somewhere between 75 and 85 cents. It might be as low as 75 cents, and it might be as high as 85 cents. But I do not like to take a very decided stand without having an opportunity to go into it further.

Mr. SIMS. It would be more of an estimate than a scientific conclusion?

Mr. BEMIS. Yes.

Mr. CARY. Would 80 cents be a fair price?

Mr. BEMIS. The more I look into this the more I think the price can be somewhat lower to the city than to a private consumer, although the difference in cost would not be large, but may be from 2 to 5 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course you do not know what the present physical valuation of either the Washington Gaslight or the Georgetown Gaslight Company is, do you?

Mr. BEMIS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the price that the stock has been costing the stockholders for the past few years make any difference as to the price of gas?

Mr. BEMIS. I do not think it ought to.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a gentleman here, a citizen of Washington, who would like to ask you a question.

Mr. TUCKER. Suppose we took out of those items of cost the renewal expense and add that to their capital, how much would that reduce the 85 cents, on their own report?

Mr. BEMIS. As to the the renewal account, it was about 3 cents, so if I took out that it would be about 82 cents.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Wednesday, April 15, 1908.

Committee called to order at 10.20 a. m., Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH in the chair.

COST OF GAS.

Statement of Mr. Alexander C. Humphreys, residing in Morristown, N. J., doing business in New York, and president of the Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, N. J.

The CHAIRMAN. You may go ahead in your own way, Mr. Humphreys, but I think it would be well for you to make a statement showing your experience in this subject.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have been connected with the gas business since the year 1871, and from the year 1872 have continuously been in charge of one or more gas companies, running all the way from one company up to as many as fifty at one time. I graduated from the Stevens Institute with the degree of mechanical engineer in 1881. Immediately after that I became chief engineer of the Pintsch Lighting Company, which is the company lighting cars, buoys, light-houses, and so forth, with compressed-oil gas.

In the year 1885 I became superintendent of construction of the United Gas Improvement Company, of Philadelphia. Three months later I was made general superintendent and chief engineer, and shortly after put in charge of all their operating concerns. When I left them at the close of 1894, we were operating something over 50 different companies, I being responsible for the commercial operations, engineering, sales of apparatus, and so forth. In the year 1892 I started the firm of Humphreys & Glasgow, of London, which firm has built probably 75 per cent of all the water-gas plants built in the world outside of the United States. In the year 1894 I started the firm of Humphreys & Glasgow, of New York, which has since then done a consulting engineering business in gas, and largely has been concerned in making appraisals and directing financial people as to investments in that line. In the year 1902 I was made president of my alma mater, the Steven's Institute of Technology, and now conduct the affairs of that institute while conducting my professional business. I happen at the present time to be president of the American Gas Institute, which is a consolidation of the American Gaslight Association, the Western Gaslight Association, and the Ohio Gas Association. I am past president of the American Gaslight Association. I belong to most of the engineering societies of America; I am a member of the council of the American Association of Mechanical Engineers and a member of the British Institute of Civil Engineers, and so forth.

If I might be permitted, as I am deeply interested in the subject, and I think it may be pertinent, I would like to refer to an article that I saw in the Washington Times last night, which speaks of the doctoring of the books and the papers of the New York Consolidated Gas Company, and as to their having been proven to be in error. If that be so, it is absolutely opposed to my understanding of that matter, because I was in that case, and am still in it, was in it for a year and a half, and I went into the books in great detail and never found, in checking up with the chief accountant, Mr. Carter, who is now vice-president, any more than the ordinary errors one would expect to find. On the contrary, I was very much astonished to find how very accurately they brought their matters before me for me to digest before I went on the stand as a witness. I will say further that I have not found anything in my analysis of the accounts of the Washington Gas Company to indicate that there is anything wrong with their accounts.

Mr. SIMS. To what do you refer—to their reports issued to Congress from year to year?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; or to matters brought to my attention alone. I will say that I have not had an opportunity to go into this thing exhaustively, as I was called suddenly, but I have been more or less familiar with Washington gas affairs for a number of years. I made an appraisement of the plant, I think, in 1898, and another one some few years later, and have been called in from time to time, so that in a general way I am familiar with the Washington plant and business, but I do not pretend to be familiar with all the business details connected with it by any means.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that editorial in the Washington Times to which you referred should be introduced in the record.

Following is the editorial referred to:

SOME "COST FIGURES" ON GAS.

[Washington Times, April 14, 1908.]

A fine mess has been stirred up in New York, as a result of the charge that the Consolidated Gas Company submitted false records to the court in the recent investigation to determine whether gas could be sold for 80 cents per 1,000 feet.

Legislation had reduced the price from $1 to 80 cents. The gas company enjoined the rate. The court named a master to hear evidence. The master sent for books, papers, and witnesses of the gas company. The cost of making and distributing gas was investigated in detail. The court decided that 80 cents was too low, but found that about 85 cents would be fair.

Now, information has reached the authorities in New York that the Consolidated Gas Company made up misleading and untrue statements of cost; had sheets inserted into the ledgers from which employees read; suppressed the carefully prepared and accurate "cost sheets" kept in the offices, and forced employees to swear to the accuracy of all the mass of doctored testimony brought forward.

The experts on behalf of the State found that gas ought to cost 54 cents. The books of the company made it 74.

The charge is now made that the State's experts were correct to within a cent or two; that the doctored ledgers and lying affidavits served to add 20 cents to apparent cost; and that, instead of 85 cents, something like 65 cents would be the fair and reasonable price of gas.

This, be it understood, for one of the most outrageously overcapitalized concerns in the country.

Attorney-General Jackson is going after the Consolidated, and will get to the bottom of these charges.

If he proves them correct, he will deprive the Washington gas monopoly of one of its pet arguments against reducing the price of gas here.

The fact that the courts held 80 cents unreasonably low in New York has been a dainty and delicious morsel to roll under the tongue of every special pleader for the gas monopoly. It was made to answer every argument.

"The charge that the New York price was swollen 20 cents per 1,000 by perjury and falsification of course will not get much attention—at the hands of the gas-monopoly lawyers.

"But it illustrates handsomely how these things are done. Professor Bemis showed from the gas monopoly's own report that it can sell gas in Washington at 82 cents and make a 10 per cent dividend. That, of course, is an excessive dividend. Grant a 6 per cent dividend—that is what the court was willing to do in the New York case, which the gas monopoly has loved to quote—and 80-cent gas would be highly profitable here.

"Incidentally, it may be observed that the annual report of the Washington Gas Company needs attention, and a good deal of it, before it will be entitled to any high rating for honesty and candor.

"Repeal the gas-inflation act.

"Pass a 75-cent gas law.

"And then let the gas monopoly enjoin the new price and have a judicial determination as to what is reasonable.

"That is a fair course to all concerned."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I had drawn to my attention last night some sort of a communication, as I understand it, made by some people in Washington, giving the population of different cities and the prices charged for gas. I started in to check up every one of them, from Brown's Gas Directory, which is evidently the source from which they were obtained, as I notice that the populations are sometimes generally a little less than I found them to be in 1907 in Brown's Directory, and so I think that they have probably used that directory for the year before. I will not attempt to read those that I have checked up, but I will show you enough to demonstrate that the schedule as prepared is absolutely reprehensible and unreliable.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state what schedule you are referring to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is a schedule that has been brought into this case, so I was told last night, in connection with some computation made. For instance, it starts off this way: "On the question whether gas ought to be sold in Washington for less than a dollar, the following list of cities is given in which it is sold at from 30 cents upward; in which, in all cases, artificial gas only is refered to; in none of which is the price so high as $1, and in which few have coal as cheap as Washington." That is all I know about it.

Mr. SIMS. Where does that come from?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. From some citizens' committee, I understood.

Mr. SIMS. Does it not show what it is?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; because I only picked up the one sheet that was given to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment; I want to get the straight of that, so that we will know what we are doing.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; that would be well, because I thought that Mr. Humphreys referred to some member of the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; some citizens' committee.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not know but that it was the list that was published in one of the evening papers some time ago.

Mr. SIMS. I think it is.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not find such a resolution among the papers in the case here.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I am sorry that in my haste I did not learn its origin.

The CHAIRMAN. For one, and as a member of the committee, I am anxious to hear Mr. Humphreys's views about that, because there has been published in the papers at different times a list of the different cities of the Union, with the respective prices of gas, and I would like to hear what Mr. Humphreys has to say about that by way of comparison.

Mr. CARY. Have you read the list?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have started it, and I can introduce a few words upon it later.

Mr. SIMS. I think it will be well for you to go on and give your testimony in your own way. We simply want to find out what instrument it was you referred to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. This list here before me gives the price of gas in the city of Oakland, Cal., as 90 cents, when, in fact, the net price for light is $1.15 and for fuel 90 cents, and the average last year was $1.03¾. Bridgeport, Conn., is stated as 90 cents, whereas the price is from $1.15 to 90 cents, and the average $1.02½. I particularly call attention to the fact that in the statement preceding the table of prices, as already quoted, it says that the following list of cities is given in which gas is sold from 30 cents upward, but in all of which cases it is artificial gas. Akron, Ohio, is then given as furnishing artificial gas at 30 cents, whereas the statement of the company, as it appears here in Brown's Gas Directory, directly states that the artificial gas works have been closed, and they are now selling natural gas.

Mr. MCGAVIN. In regard to these places that you have mentioned, and the discrepancies between the statements made there and what you claim to be the actual price of gas, do you know whether or not there is a minimum price they can charge in those places?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. MCGAVIN. What is the minimum charge? I think you stated that it was 90 cents at Bridgeport, Conn.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. What they have done is this: This list has been made from a statement showing a range of prices running from a higher price for gas used for light to a lower price for gas used as fuel, and the lowest price has been quoted, with no mention of the higher price. Brown's Gas Directory gives a price net for light and another price net for fuel, and also gives the per cent of the gas consumed for fuel—and with these data you can make up an average, and while it might not be correct to a fraction of a cent, it will be practically correct. This is the way I have prepared my figures for the comparisons, whereas in making up this table they have taken the minimum price, which does not take note of higher prices charged, and hence is not the average price. The prices used in the table in most cases only cover the large wholesaling of gas. Not to weary you with references to all the cities named let me speak of a most flagrant case. I speak of Superior, Wis., where the table gives the price as 75 cents, whereas the price is for light $1.60 gross and $1.40 net; and for fuel $1.20 gross, $1 net. For power it is 95 cents gross, 75 cents net; and the proportion of fuel and power is 35 per cent. The only thing that I haven't got to figure on is the division between the amount used for power and the amount used for fuel, but I assume that there will be at least 20 per cent used for fuel and not more than 15 per cent for power, and if I had all the data, I should not expect to find that more than 5 per cent was sold for power. I find that this is a remarkable case, that while it is stated in this table that the price is 75 cents, if we omit from consideration the gas for fuel and power, and simply take the amount received for light alone, and distribute that all over the gas sold, that alone will give an average of 91 cents per thousand instead of 75 cents. I wish this to be understood, so I repeat: If I eliminate all the fuel and the power gas, and take the receipts from the light gas alone, the illuminating gas, and distribute that over all the gas that is sold, it will still give an average price of 91 cents, and this in spite of the fact that the price is given as 75 cents. But figuring in the fuel gas and the power gas, according to the percentages named, I find that the average price is $1.22½ instead of 75 cents.

Mr. CARY. Will you now please take up some first-class city? These are second and third class cities, as I understand it; but take up a city of the size of Washington, and let us hear what the price of gas is in those cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest that you take Detroit.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Very well; I think that happens to be one that is mentioned here. Detroit is named here as 80 cents. The fact is that Detroit has a sliding scale, according to how much you use, or the purpose for which it is used, rather, and the price is from 90 cents to 60 cents. I figure that the average will be about 85 cents instead of 80 cents.

Mr. CARY. Have you Milwaukee there also?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Milwaukee is down here at 60 cents. As I figure it out, it will be 85 cents on the average; that is, light, gross, $1.20 to $1 net. Fuel, gross, $1 to 80 cents.

Mr. CARY. But that is wrong. It is from 90 cents, and 10 per cent off, and from 80 cents to 60 cents.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; that is it. Fuel, gross, $1; net, 80 to 60 cents. The proportion of fuel is 54 per cent, and that would make it average about 85 cents. You have got to take any proportion at the average prices in order to arrive at the average price. It is from 80 to 60 cents for fuel gas.

Mr. CARY. That is not as shown in their reports, is it? I live there and I pay my bills there. Here are the figures on the back of the bill. Some two or three years ago they had a separate price——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. This is their own report for 1907.

Mr. CARY. They used to have two meters, one for fuel and one for illumination, but now it is all registered by one meter, and this is what is charged.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is 90 cents gross, with 10 per cent discount, 80 cents net for the first 10,000, and the next 10,000 80 cents, 70 cents—if that is it, then they have gone back to the one-meter scheme, and of course in that case I would be in error on that. I take the same source of information, however, that these people have taken.

Mr. CARY. That is in case they do not pay their bills inside of ten days?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Of course. In one company that I am connected with—the Buffalo Gas Company, of which I am president—the unaccepted discounts sometimes amount to quite a considerable sum.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you a question which I asked of Mr. Bemis, and it is this: As is commonly known, Detroit is selling gas at 80 cents, but the newspapers of Detroit last summer were constantly giving complaints of people to the effect that while gas was said to have been reduced in cost, yet their gas bills were higher than before. They said that they thought that was brought about in some way by the pressure. I wish you would explain that, for I do not understand it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In both Detroit and Milwaukee they have the advantage of using gas produced by a by-product from coke ovens, operated by an independent company, where the principal purpose is to make coke as the product of the business, and sell the gas for what they can get for it. Of course they get the best price they can. It is a scheme outside of the gas company, but they have got to get rid of the gas at a fair price in order to make the coke-oven business pay.

Mr. CARY. Now, I wish you would put that right. It is not true that the gas is the second consideration. You are referring to the Semet-Solvey Coke Company, but that is a different proposition from the Milwaukee Gas Company.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Certainly it is.

Mr. CARY. The Semet-Solvey Coke Company have had to get rid of their gas in some way, and they forced the Milwaukee Gas Company to buy it, but the Milwaukee Gas Company first started out in the fifties to manufacture gas, and my grandfather was one of their first foremen. At that time they gave the coke away, but finally a price of 6 cents a bushel was paid, then it went up and up, and now they get $4 or $5 a ton. But I want to say that the gas is a first consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But there is no difference between us. The Coke Oven Company sells its gas wholesale to the gas company, and the gas company thus has the advantage of buying cheaper gas. The Semet-Solvey Coke Company is a coke-producing company, so far as their plant is concerned, and it is a business with which I am somewhat familiar. I was for a number of years vice-president of the United Coke and Gas Company, which has operated coke-oven plants and has built a number of these plants in the United States, including the one in Boston.

Mr. CARY. Now please excuse me for interrupting you again, but I want to say that the Semet-Solvey Coke Company started about three years ago, and after a year or so, there being no way to take care of the gas, they came to the council with a proposition for a franchise, and we all knew that it was nothing but a subterfuge to scare the gas company into taking this gas off its hands, and it turned out that way, and I helped to bring it about, too. Of course I thought that that would tend to cheapen the gas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have they reduced the price of gas since they have been able to get it from the coke company?

Mr. CARY. No; it is just the same.

Mr. SIMS. What do they give the coke company for their gas?

Mr. CARY. I could not say, but it is very little.

Mr. MCGAVIN. But they have done away with the two-meter system since then?

Mr. CARY. No, that was done away with before—no, I would not be sure about that; I would have to look that up and see.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I think it was after that. I want to say that there is no difficulty between the gentleman and myself. My point is that there is a separate company making coke, and they can afford to sell gas to the local gas company at a lower rate than they could make it themselves, which enables them to sell it for less to the people.

Mr. SIMS. What rate do they get?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have forgotten the rate.

Mr. SIMS. If the price of gas has not been reduced since this was done, then what effect did it have?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was reduced, I am quite sure. This gentleman, Mr. Cary, has shown that there has been a reduction between 1907 and the time when this bill was made out. Their own report shows one thing, while their bill states another thing. I am inclined to think that in going back to the one-meter system the price was reduced.

Mr. SIMS. Relatively, how much gas does the coke company furnish, as compared with the total volume sold?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That I do not recollect. It is a very large amount of gas. It is the same in Boston, where the coke-oven gas is made by the New England Company, and that is a very large proportion of the gas made; and there they have the advantage of a special contract with the Dominion Coal Company, which was made while the two companies were in accord in management. This enables the Boston company to give a price which no other company would attempt to give.

Mr. SIMS. I hope you will get down to the city of Washington in the course of the hearing; that is what we are considering.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Now, Mr. Chairman, you asked me as to the city of Detroit; why, if the price is reduced, the bills for gas remain the same. I think that is one of the places referred to by Mr. Bemis—one of the chief places—and I would agree with him on that, that it is due to a large extent to the fact that when people get things cheaper they use more of it. They are not as careful about their bills, and I will also say that the candlepower is very low. It is only 17.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, please explain about that question of pressure. That is what I do not understand. I am told by some that they have a means of manipulating the pressure in some way so as to increase the amount of gas consumed, and I would like to know about that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is a very interesting question, and it has been brought up a great many times in connection with this discussion in many large cities in the United States, but there is a misconception in regard to the whole question. So far as it actually increases the amount of gas delivered through the meter by reason of the increased pressure, which of course means an increased compression for each volume of gas going through the meter, you would have a little more gas under the higher pressure than under the lower pressure. If I compress the gas to two atmospheres above the absolute zero, I would be delivering through the meter twice what I would deliver at the atmospheric pressure of about 15 pounds to a square inch—that is, I would compress twice the amount of gas into a given space. They would probably answer that by saying that that is not the point we make. The point is, by increasing the pressure the gas is forced through the burner at too rapid a rate to give a satisfactory light, which to a certain extent is true. If you burn gas under excessive pressure, then you get a poor flame, and in that way you get less light, but that is in the hands of the consumer, and he can turn it down himself. But if there is a constantly excessive pressure due to the fact that a house is on a hill, that can be regulated once for all at the meter cock so far as the general regulation is concerned. For instance, all who use the Welsbach burner know that you can not get a proper result by simply turning the cock and lighting the burner. It has to be regulated, and that is done at the burner itself. I do not believe that that is any real cause for complaint excepting where there is a distinctly excessive pressure at a certain point due to the fact that they can not force the gas through the weak spots of a city without putting excessive pressure on the points which have large enough mains. In the case that I have cited, the consumer on the hill would get too high a pressure, but even then it could be regulated by the two cocks, first at the meter, and then at the burner itself; and that is being continually done. But here is where the trouble comes in: If you have a pressure that varies between day and night, from an excessive pressure to a pressure that is too low, then you will be led, by necessity, to regulate it from time to time during the evening, which would be very annoying, and I know for one that I should kick. But that is a rare case.

The CHAIRMAN. If gas can be sold in Detroit for 80 cents, and Detroit has about the same population as Washington, why can it not be sold in Washington for 80 cents? That is what we would like to know, and that is what we would like to have you explain.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Now, I can not tell you in figures, but I can tell you in a general way. Of course the fact that you can sell gas in a certain place for a certain figure is not a good reason why you should sell gas in another place for the same figure. But if I had known just exactly what questions I would have to answer, I should have brought more figures with me. Coal is dearer here than in Detroit. It is a question of relative price all the way through, and a great many things enter into the question of cost. Now, for instance, you have here some of the conditions which are so onerous in New York—expensive street pavements, regulations as to quality, carrying excessive penalties, and the like. A large amount is paid out for renewals of expensive pavements. In some cities we do not have as much of that, if at all. In some cities the renewal of pavements practically amounts to but little, because they use very little expensive pavements, such as asphalt, but use block pavement, which can be more easily taken up. Here I suppose the pavement renewals would amount to $12,000 or $15,000 a year. All those things count up; in other words, you can not take two places and put them side by side, and because the population of one is about the same as the other make a comparison and assume the same price should be charged in both.

Mr. MCGAVIN. But if you assume that the cost of production is about the same—as to Detroit, I think you are mistaken about the coal; I think it is dearer there than it is here, and I think you will also find that labor is dearer in Detroit than in Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I feel sure I am correct, and if the committee will allow me I will submit a memorandum on that.

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes; we want to know about that question of coal and labor.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not pretend to know anything about gas; I am seeking light, and that is the reason why I am asking these questions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would it be too much trouble to have you state, in the memorandum, the relative cost per thousand feet for Milwaukee, Detroit, and Washington or at any other cities that are similar in size and location?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Of course Cleveland and Cincinnati pay a much lower price for coal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And also the relative consumption in these cities per inhabitant.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not easy enough to take the coal cost in any one of these cities per thousand feet and the coal cost in Washington per thousand feet and make a comparison on that basis?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is easy enough as far as that one item is concerned if I can get the figures. I do not know, but I think they will give me the figures.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do they make water gas here?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, yes; they make both here. That is a very complicated question, when you bring the two things in.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In connection with that question, please give the cost of distribution in the several cities and the cost of fixed charges per thousand.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Of course you are asking me for a good deal, and I will have to get some of this information.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But it goes right to the meat of this matter.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. As to a good many of these things, I can answer right from my office, but I would have to get permission. I would have to make some examination of the works, and of course I could not use that information without the company's consent. But one point in that connection might be emphasized, and that is that people are apt to think that when they have made a comparison of the cost of manufacturing gas they have virtually covered the cost, but the fact is that there are other items of cost that vary greatly throughout the United States; for instance, we generally say that it costs more to make and distribute gas in the smaller places than in the larger places, but I know a number of small places that can distribute gas at considerably less than New York City can, on account of the conditions; and those things have to be brought into account.

The CHAIRMAN. Should not gas be sold cheaper in New York City than in Washington, considering the population and everything?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; I think not. There are some things in favor of New York and some things in favor of Washington. Washington has a large sale per capita, but New York has still larger. New York has a large sale per mile of main and very condensed districts. But, on the other hand, they have very heavy expenses on the streets. I have known them there to make a little change that would cost, under ordinary circumstances, a few dollars, but they had to pay out thousands of dollars to get ready to do it on account of the obstructions in the streets. And all that has to be charged up to operating expenses, to renewals or repairs. So it is an extremely difficult matter to analyze fairly the relative costs, and, consequently, what should be the relative prices in the different cities.

The CHAIRMAN. When you began your statement you referred to an editorial in the Washington Times of last evening and said that in your judgment the statements in that editorial were not correct. Do I understand you to say that there was not any fraud practiced in New York, as that article sets forth?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes, as I said, I was in it, and so far as I know it is an absolutely false statement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Are you familiar with the books of the New York Consolidated Gas Company?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. To this extent, that I did not accept any of their statements on which I was to testify, but I checked up the books as they were offered to me, the accounts, going into the books on the different cases and checking them up to see if I could make the statements tally.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is, you checked up the accuracy of the statements in the books before you went on the stand to testify?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Do not understand me as saying that I checked up every voucher, but I took different items and checked them up, and spent probably two months at it in the endeavor to see that the statements would tally; and I will say that the errors were extremely few, so much so as to astonish me; and the man in charge, Mr. Carter, is one of the fairest accountants I have ever met. I do not think you could get him to tamper with the books in the smallest details.

Mr. MCGAVIN. But it might be that there were conditions and things which they would not disclose to you, or which they would not want to disclose to the public.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would not go into a case if I found anything of that kind had happened.

Mr. MCGAVIN. Of course I am not reflecting upon you, but I mean to say that there might have been a good deal they would not disclose to you as an expert, and perhaps which might have been material to that case.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have free access to the books in that case?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; anything I asked for, and understand that that was a case where, if I failed to check up according to the statements submitted, I would have to work perhaps two days before I could get an agreement, and why? Because the commission was demanding a classification that did not agree with their books, and therefore it was necessary to reclassify the accounts to meet the wishes of the commission. In doing that they naturally would make some mistakes, and in that way we got down to what the books showed. They had men working on the reclassification of the accounts of the books, so as to get the statements in the way the commission wanted them. The information was called for one way one day, and a different way another day. The result of the whole thing was that the unreasonable demands broke down a number of the company's men and one man had to go to a sanitarium on account of it. But when I finally got down to a complete analysis, and ran out these apparent errors to the end, I found that the statements checked with the books; and in my testimony, where they tried to show that there were items of disagreement, I accounted for every one of them that they put up to me.

Mr. KELIHER. Have you made any study of the gas situation in Boston?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; but not recently.

Mr. KELIHER. You know that we are getting gas there for 80 cents per thousand?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; you are getting gas for 80 cents, a large part of which is coke-oven gas bought from a company under a special contract, to which I referred, and that company has a special contract for coal; and on top of that the gas is of a much lower candlepower than is sold here—about 5 candlepower less.

Mr. KELIHER. It seems to be giving satisfaction both as to the price and the quality.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. What is the difference in cost per thousand feet due to the difference in candlepower?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Somewhere around 6 cents, I should say.

Mr. KELIHER. What do you think of the sliding-scale system that they have in use there; what is your opinion of the principle?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I think the principle in some ways is a pretty good one, but it will have to be introduced with great care. I doubt whether it is altogether satisfactory in Boston. I think if they are going to introduce the system here they ought to follow more largely the England idea, which is not to start off with the lowest possible price as a standard price. Some of the strongest men connected with the business in England—I think of one particular man with whom I have been associated for many years, an engineer and a barrister, who is a director in some eight companies, and who believes that it is not wise to adopt the sliding-scale principle, because in the effort to increase the dividends they usually skin the property and do not keep up the repairs. That has been shown, he claims, by an analysis of the working of the system in certain companies. But I simply mention that as one of the objections, and I should want to take up each case and examine it by itself in order to come to a final decision.

Mr. KELIHER. You do not mean to say that they have put the lowest possible price on in Boston for the standard?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I say that they have gotten close to the lowest possible price and have left no margin. And I say this, that if Boston has bad luck they will be in trouble, because they have no margin for contingencies.

Mr. KELIHER. President Richards, of the Boston Consolidated Gas Company, is rated as one of the cleverest men in the gas business in this country, is he not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Richards is an extremely clever business man, and is credited with being such, but I do not think he would claim to be an expert gas engineer. He is simply the gaslight company's business manager, and has had a wide experience in street-railway management and other public-utility concerns. He is a man that I have the greatest respect for, but I do not think Mr. Richards himself would claim to be a gas expert.

Mr. KELIHER. Have you heard that there is any marked deterioration in the equipment at Boston?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; I should not in any case expect to find that at once.

Mr. KELIHER. On the contrary, I have heard that the company is maintaining a very high standard of equipment, management, and everything else. I am surprised to hear you say that owing to the adoption of that principle the management of the company is suffering——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, I have not said that, if you will excuse me; and that is the trouble in a hearing of this kind. I have said that that was one of the dangers recognized by Englishmen, but I certainly would not want it understood that I have made any such charge as that against the Boston company.

Mr. KELIHER. Not to your knowledge?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No. In my opinion, at the price they are now running, they are pursuing an unsafe course, and not providing for the contingencies that are liable to arise; for instance, the contingency with regard to electrolysis. We to-day do not know what electrolysis is going to do with our mains. In some cities it has occasioned great losses, and I myself, with a wide experience in that line, confess that I can not size the situation up.

Mr. KELIHER. Is that danger increased by lowering the price of gas?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; but the danger of ultimate loss to the company is increased; for instance, if they have not provided against this possible trouble with electrolysis, they will have heavy losses coming upon them not provided for in their ordinary depreciation charges.

Mr. KELIHER. Good judgment and good management should protect them from those losses.

Mr. MCGAVIN. Has there been anything found that will protect these mains from electrolysis?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. You can have bad practice and comparatively good practice, but there has been nothing yet found that has been a complete protection against electrolysis.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there, in your judgment, a need for 23-candlepower gas in Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would devote a moment or two of your time to that. I have heard about a candlepower gas as low as 11 in some cities, and I think the average is 16 or 17, so I was wondering why 23-candlepower gas was necessary in Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not recall any gas in America as low as 11 or 12 candlepower, unless it is natural gas. Of course that will go lower than that. But the necessity for high candlepower gas does not exist to the same extent to-day that it did, say, eight years ago, when the Welsbach and similar burners—that is, the incandescent mantle burners—were not used to such an extent. The perfection with which we are now able to use the mantle burners with low candlepower gas has greatly reduced the necessity for high candlepower gas; in other words, what we want in that case is not the high illuminating value from the gas itself, but the high illuminating value from the mantle, which can be secured as soon as the gas has a sufficient number of heat units in it and sufficiently high flame temperature to bring the mantle up to a sufficient temperature. In England they have for many years run a number of companies—and that shows the practical side of the Englishman's character—in the southern part of England, where they only have ready access to the lower quality of coals, they always use a low quality of gas, but the farther north you go the higher the quality of gas, and when you get to Scotland the candlepower runs up pretty close to 28, but they use it to the best advantage. In Liverpool they use as high as 20 candlepower, and it has always been regarded as an extremely high candlepower city.

The CHAIRMAN. What would you say would be a fair candlepower for Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I should say that 18 candlepower would give excellent results.

Mr. CARY. Do you believe that the gas company furnishes 23 candlepower in Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I certainly do.

Mr. KELIHER. Is it fixed by regulation?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is fixed by the act which makes it 22, and with heavy fines which may run as high as $100 a day.

Mr. KELIHER. Do they not furnish a higher candlepower than that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They must do that in order to deliver it to the houses and testing stations, which otherwise they could not possibly reach with 22 candlepower, and must make it as high as 24 candlepower in order to do that; and with certain qualities of oil that we have been forced to use of late, especially the oil from Texas, we could not deliver 22 candlepower without making it, in winter time especially, even higher than 24 candlepower.

Mr. KELIHER. But you think that 18 candlepower would be sufficient?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. KELIHER. And what bearing would that have on the price?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. A bearing of 5 cents on the price, probably.

Mr. MOORE. That would be the difference in cost of production?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. About 5 cents, I say.

Mr. SIMS. Does the candlepower have anything to do in connection with the making of water gas; in other words, can you give as high a candlepower with water gas at a lower rate of cost than without the water gas? Which is the more expensive, water gas or the other?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is too broad a question to answer, but I will try to explain it, however. It is the most dangerous thing in the world to generalize in this business, and that is why I testify in this way, because as I testify, it is apt to be put down as an exact statement, whereas I must make a separate statement for each place. The cost of gas will vary all over the United States, and the relative cost between coal gas and water gas will vary at each place.

Mr. SIMS. Well, take the same place then; can you not tell that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. You can not tell until you examine the particular cost for each kind of gas, taking into account the several items in each case. For instance, it will vary as to the candlepower.

Mr. SIMS. But I am referring to the same candlepower.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. You can not get the same candlepower. Water gas, if it is used properly, is the agent employed for raising the candlepower. You make the coal gas, say, of 14 candlepower, and that is as high as the coal will naturally give you; but say you have to furnish a 24-candlepower gas, so you have to make the water gas of such candlepower, and introduce it in such proportion, that in the mixture with the lower candlepower coal gas it will bring the mixed product up to the candlepower required. That is one of the great advantages of water gas, and that is why it has been able to make its way in spite of the larger per se cost in many cases, because of the value of its mixture with coal gas. It brings the candlepower up, and you can put in so much oil as will vary the quality of the gas according to necessity from day to day. In England, when my firm went there to introduce our plant, we could not have thought of driving out the coal gas, and we did not and do not attempt such a thing, but we pointed out that if we could make the two kinds of gas in certain proportions, making coal gas in larger proportion at a constant rate, and making water to enrich and also take care of the fluctuations of demands—that is, the peak of the load—we could produce a mixed gas that would in many cases cost less than either gas if made alone. So you see that it is a pretty complicated question to cover in a hearing of this kind.

Mr. MCGAVIN. Well, suppose we come back to Washington. You are an expert whose opinion we consider of value to this committee, and I assume that you have studied this Washington question somewhat?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Let me say in advance, before you ask the question, that I have not studied the question in detail. I have not gone into the accounts any more than I can show you by my analysis of these accounts here. In the past seven or eight years I have gone through every one, but——

Mr. MCGAVIN. Taking into consideration the price of coal-gas materials, the price of labor, and everything, can you give this committee somewhere near a definite idea as to what gas could be manufactured and sold for here?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes, sir; if I made that analysis.

Mr. KELIHER. With the same candlepower as is now being served?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Of course. We have the accounts here before us, and I see nothing in them to lead me to think, from my examination now, that they are incorrect, especially as in the past we have found them correct, as stated to me at the time. And I find nothing in this statement here, which is the gas company's published statement, to indicate that there is anything incorrect in the figures.

Mr. MCGAVIN. Is the cost indicated in that report?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would say from my analysis of the figures made last night that my analysis does not agree with that of Mr. Bemis.

The CHAIRMAN. What deduction do you get from them?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The cost that I make, by their own figures, including the depreciation and deducting residuals as a credit, is 64.36 cents. Mr. Bemis puts it down at about 62 cents and then proceeds to make certain deductions from that amount.

Mr. MCGAVIN. What are these "residuals," as you call them?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Residuals are the by-products left over after making coal gas. There are no residuals to speak of from the manufacture of water gas, so the returns from residuals seem to be small for such a large company. The residuals, of course, only apply to the amount of coal gas made, and there are no residuals from water gas excepting a small amount of water-gas tar, which is used in firing the boilers. I will give the figures I use so you can check me up, especially as I am in contradiction of Mr. Bemis. The total operating expenses, including depreciation, as given on page 3, are $1,257,079.56. On the same page, lower down, the amount of gas sold, as shown, is 1,852,689,902 feet. If the amount of expense is divided by the amount sold in thousands—in other words, in round numbers, dividing by 1,852,690, we would have the figure of 67.8 cents; but the way this report is made out that does not show to the credit of the residuals, which is stated on page 1 to be $63,770.15, which, following the same procedure, will amount to 3.44 cents per thousand. Deducing that from the 67.8 cents, we have as the cost of gas manufactured, delivered, taxes included—which, by the way, amount to 6 cents a thousand alone—as 64.36 cents delivered at the burner.

Now, in this connection I would like to explain one thing. The gas company has started a depreciation and renewal account, which is one of the most complicated things in our business, and which they state to be 7 cents per thousand. There might be a conflict there, and I might as well explain that. So as not to complicate it between the amount made and the amount sold, I will say that they use as a divisor the amount of gas made, which makes 7 cents per thousand, and that 7 cents becomes 7.77 cents when we spread the cost only over the gas sold; but in addition to the amount shown for repairs—here is the item on page 3—the damaged and worn-out meters destroyed amount to $7,328.25.

Mr. MCGAVIN. Is not that included in this other depreciation account?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No, sir.

Mr. CARY. Do you know whether the gas company charges 25 cents a month for the use of the meter or not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not remember whether they do or not, but I do not think they do.

Mr. CARY (addressing Mr. Hart). Do they do that?

Mr. HART. No, sir; no charge.

Mr. MCGAVIN. What is this depreciation account for?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. One moment and I will get to that. The damaged and worn-out meters destroyed are put in as $7,328.25, which equals 0.4 cent a thousand, and adding to that 7.77, makes 8.17 per thousand feet sold. In my opinion, instead of this being sufficient, it is insufficient to cover repairs plus accruing depreciation; in other words, to provide for future renewals of the plant.

Mr. MCGAVIN. All other depreciation of plant and renewal is included in this depreciation acount, is it not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; and it is very clearly indicated here as to how they do it, and more so than is generally found in these reports. They write up an amount which they say is 7 cents, and it is correctly 7 cents figured on the gas made, but 7.77 cents figured on the gas sold. They write that up as general depreciation reserve, and then charge against that the actual amount spent from year to year, leaving a balance not so wiped out by the actual cash charges to take care of the accruing depreciation and all reserve from year to year; and the fact is that the actual repairs, according to this last report, were 4.42 cents. And then there was this 0.4 cent for the destroyed meters, making 4.82 cents actual cash expenditure, and the balance is against this accrued depreciation, which I say is not sufficient, although Mr. Bemis says it is. I am familiar with his testimony in many other cases, and as far as I know he has never testified to a figure as low as that. But I want to say that that is a dangerous basis on which to make comparison in this or any other item of cost—that is, cents per thousand—unless we understand the underlying principles. We convert our costs into the form of cents per thousand after the facts have developed as a convenient means of comparison in checking up from day to day and month to month to determine whether we are doing as well as in previous like periods. The depreciation should be figured by analyzing the condition of the plant, to determine what, in our best opinion, is the amount being required to keep it up, having in view not only the physical decay, which we must indicate, but obsolescence and the chance of the plant becoming inadequate, which latter is one of the most serious items of so-called "depreciation" that we have to meet.

Mr. MCGAVIN. Then the cost of the gas to the burner is 64.36 cents plus 7.77 cents plus 0.4 cents, is it not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; the figure 64.36 covers depreciation as far as covered in the company's report, but does not include as much as I believe to be necessary for that item.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Bemis gave it as 62 cents, I think.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can not make it 62 cents, as Mr. Bemis figured it, and I have tried my best.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Bemis called our attention to another thing that I would like to have you explain. He stated that there was greater leakage here in Washington than usual. What is your view of that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Now, you have gotten into another pretty complicated question, this so-called "leakage." There is no such thing as it is ordinarily reported. It would be a good deal better if we used the term "unaccounted for," which would at once point to the danger of error. There is the actual leakage of gas through the mains and services, and that actual amount of leakage would indicate with a fair degree of accuracy the condition of the mains and services, but before you can determine what the actual leakage is you must be sure that all your estimating is done correctly, and the man does not live who can do it with absolute accuracy, because it has to be estimated.

Suppose we register our gas at one temperature at the works. It will be registered at different and varying temperatures at the consumers' houses, and no man knows what that average temperature will be, so it can only be estimated. Again, if the city lamps are consuming gas, that gas is not metered. We estimate what we believe each burner will consume, and so average it up, and we try to keep it as accurately in our records as we can. In my company in Buffalo I know perfectly well that the record is not absolutely accurate, because we supply more gas to the city lamps than we receive credit for. But suppose we make all the corrections indicated and then come down to what we say correctly is unaccounted for, we still have to consider this question, namely, how much gas we are going to lose in transit from the works to the consumers by reason of condensation in addition to what we apparently lose by compression due to fall in temperature. Here the quality of the oil affects our results.

Then we come to the final danger. The percentage as shown on the amount of gas sold is no indication unless we have all the facts before us, to take an extreme case, but it is a good one to point out the nature of the source of error. Suppose we had the works built to-day and we were now ready to turn the gas on.

We say we have 16,000 consumers, and we are going to turn the gas on by an electric button at a certain time to-morrow, and no gas is going to be consumed until to-morrow. Some gas would be lost over night, and we would have 100 per cent leakage, so-called, because there would not be any consumed. The only gas which passes out will be the leaked gas, and so the leakage is 100 per cent. In other words, the per cent of leakage depends upon the amount sold, and is therefore no basis for final comparison as to efficiency of operation.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is the leakage changed by pressure?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That affects it to a small degree, but the effect of pressure is one, I think, not in accord with the popular idea.

Mr. MCMILLAN. But an increase of pressure leads to an increase of leakage. What is the largest element of cost in producing gas?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That varies in different places.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is the coal, labor, machinery, genius, or what?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Generally the largest element of cost in the manufacture is the gas-making material; coal in the case of coal gas, and oil in the case of water gas.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What material are you now using most of here, or elsewhere, wherever your investigations take you?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Gas coal for coal gas and oil for water gas.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Which produces the best results from your experience?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is difficult to answer that type of a question. What do you mean by "best results?"

Mr. MCMILLAN. In the manufacture of gas.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can not answer any such general question, because what would produce the best results in one place might not in another. For instance, in connection with my business in Europe, I have in some few cases advised against the introduction of my own plants, because under peculiar local conditions they would not give the best results in dollars and cents; the local conditions were unfavorable. You can not generalize in that way. Probably in general the best results obtained, if you should take the average of a good many works, would be the combination plant, coal gas to take care of the solid output and water gas to take care of the fluctuating demand and the increased candlepower such as you have in Washington, but which is an extreme case. If you will put the question in some other form I will do my best to answer it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. We want to know the element that will give to the people of Washington the cheapest gas. Is it coal, oil, or what element is it, so far as your experience can indicate it to us?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I believe that the combination of coal gas and water gas that you have here to-day will give, all things considered, the best results for the least money.

Mr. SIMS. Can the gas company here supply a gas of one candlepower at night when we need it for illuminating purposes, and during the day when they need it for fuel purposes supply a gas with a reduced candlepower?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; not practically. They could do it, but of course you would have very unsatisfactory results, because you would have times at night when lean, or low-candlepower, gas would reach the burners, and times in the day when rich, or high-candlepower, gas would reach the burners. In practice the gas of required candlepower could not be separated between day and night. If you had two sets of mains, of course you could send out two qualities, and by manipulating the one plant supply the two characters of gas in that way, but it would be very complicated and expensive, and I think the advantages would not at all equal the disadvantages. But now with the same works and the same mains you would have both rich and poor gas mixed, and the consumers would never know what they were going to get. The burners regulated for one quality would not be regulated for the other.

Mr. SIMS. Then they must supply the highest candlepower for both fuel and light, and when they are using the gas for fuel they are using a much higher quality of gas than is needed.

Mr. CARY. I wanted to make a comparison with the city of Wheeling, W. Va. I think it was in 1890 that they took over the gas plant themselves. Do you remember what the price was before the city took it over, and what the price is now?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not remember, but I did make a very exhaustive examination of that whole question; but I do not remember.

Mr. CARY. I think it was in the neighborhood of $1.40.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I should not wonder.

Mr. CARY. And I think now it is down to 80 cents, and they are working on the eight-hour system, too.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I made an analysis of the Wheeling conditions, a very exhaustive one, about the year 1894, in connection with an attempt to reduce the price of gas in a western city, and this examination, I think, demonstrated beyond all question that at the western city referred to they were doing better at $1.50, as far as actual management of the plant was concerned, than at Wheeling, charging 75 cents. Wheeling is not including in its cost sufficient for repairs and renewals, and that is the case in many places in the United States under municipal management, and also in England. Take the case of the Richmond municipal plant, to which reference is frequently made. An examination was made of the Richmond plant about a year ago, and it was discovered that they needed about $705,000 to renew the plant, which should have been charged up in previous years to operating expenses for repairs and renewals, but they have done what all are very anxious to do—endeavored to make as good a showing as possible. At 75 cents Wheeling makes a loss instead of a profit, if all items of cost are included.

Mr. SIMS. From what you know about the Washington Gas Company's plant, and of the kind of gas they supply, what would be a fair and reasonable price for the gas furnished here, all things considered?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I find in an analysis of their report as to the conditions under which they operate, which are extremely severe in the way of inspections and so forth, and the fines that they are liable to——

Mr. TAYLOR. Do you mean to say that that is a matter of any importance, that they have to pay out any considerable sum in fines? You mean that they might have to pay them, is not that it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They have to pay out quite a sum to avoid them. For instance, they have a most elaborate system, not only of settling their tar, but as is quite unusual with gas companies, they actually filter every drop of it. That can not be done without an expenditure of money.

Mr. MOORE. But suppose you simply put in a fair return to the company upon the investment.

Mr. SIMS. Yes, including the items to be considered, including a return on the capital, that is proper. You know what that is, what it should be, what is a fair price for the manufacture of gas of the quality that is served here?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I believe that the price of a dollar per thousand with the conditions as you find them here to-day, and the quality of gas delivered, is absolutely a fair price in order to give a fair return on the capital invested, which capital, as we find it here, does not begin to represent even the structural value.

Mr. SIMS. Do you mean simply the $2,600,000?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; I mean $2,600,000, plus $2,600,000, plus, say, $600,000. That is the total capitalization, par value, including stocks and bonds. That, in my opinion, does not begin to represent the structural value of the Washington Gas Company's plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The physical value?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The physical value. I have not made a critical examination, and I start in with that statement in advance and would not hesitate at all to make it.

Mr. SIMS. Taking it for granted that the company has always paid remunerative dividends on the stock that is out and has paid for the structural cost out of the earnings in addition to the dividends, should they also have dividends on the structural plant?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. My opinion is, though I am not a lawyer—but I am inclined to think that the highest courts in the land will follow the same line—that the carnings that have been put into a plant are the possession of the stockholders, and it does not make any difference whether those earnings have been taken out in dividends and then a certain amount paid back and put back into the plant or not. Those stockholders own that plant.

Mr. SIMS. But that is not what I was asking you. Taking it for granted that the dividends paid have been fair and reasonable upon the stock issued, and then enough has been charged over and above that to build the structure, should that have any effect in fixing the price of gas now?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I believe so, certainly. I believe that that is money that belongs to the stockholders.

Mr. SIMS. In addition to the dividends already paid? Suppose the stockholders had received the dividends, and then in addition money has been used to enable them to make the improvements and additions, should the price of gas now be fixed with reference to that fact or not; should it be considered?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I believe it should. I believe that independent of whether it is a fair dividend or not, the thing was permitted at the time, and that money belongs to the stockholders. The earnings were allowed at the time under those conditions, whether they have charged an exorbitant price or not. But that is not my experience generally in the general gas business, and I doubt whether it is the experience here; but it does not make any difference whether it is a question of dividing up dividends or not. Supposing you should say that 10 per cent on the actual investment, or the property value, was a fair dividend, and the stockholders have been receiving 6 per cent. Then they are entitled to that other 4 per cent, even if it has been stated in advance that that shall be the limit. Take, for instance, the New York Consolidated Gas case—one which I have been largely interested in. We proved conclusively that we had not been building a plant out of earnings wrongfully made, but that the dividend had been at a low rate, sometimes as low as 3 per cent, for many years simply on a capitalization not in excess of actual value. Certainly in those cases the money put back in the plant belonged to the stockholders, and it certainly would be correct to say that they owned it; and in addition to that the property as a whole is made safer, because the undivided profits are so tied up for the benefit of the creditor.

Mr. SIMS. Supposing there had been a 10 per cent dividend paid all along, and this additional added value by way of structure had also been met out of the earnings, in increasing the capital, should that amount, whatever it may be, be added to the capital and included in it, and entitled to earnings just as though no dividend had been paid?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I should say yes, as a question of right. They have a right to certificates of value for those additional earnings apart from the question of the original stock. But before you established the actual rights in the case, you would have to find out whether the certificates of stock as issued represent the actual value of the property. In Washington for many years they did not begin to represent the value in its stock issue. Washington, Cleveland, Cincinnati are three marked cases of companies capitalized away below their actual value. Now, if they paid 10 per cent on those valuations, they are certainly entitled to more.

Mr. SIMS. You are here, in part, to give your opinion as to whether a bill should be passed that will repeal a law authorizing capitalization on actual value. What we want to get at is whether or not that law ought to pass, or be amended, or remain as it is. And that law, as is shown by a suit that has already been instituted, includes franchise value, rights, and good will. Of course it also includes the physical or actual money value of the property as part of it. Now, as to the extent of the franchise, good will, and rights, ought that to be covered by an issue of stock?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I should say it should. Any of us in business know that a mere physical plant without a business does not begin to be worth what that same plant would be worth with the business attached to it. And a question of estimating the value of a plant as only of the value of the mortar, bricks, and iron is to my mind absolutely absurd.

Mr. CARY. Right on the back of this bill it says: "These prices apply to all gas used by any one consumer, with one meter or with any number of meters located in one building," and so forth, showing that it is a uniform price all the way through?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is what I understand you to say.

On that question of capitalization, Mr. Bemis in his testimony referred to a very marked case at Haverhill, Mass. There is a case where the physical capitalization per thousand feet of gas sold per year is probably not less than $5 to $6. Now, what have they got on their books: Sixty-three cents; and why? Because here they have followed the very misleading practice that they have been following in Massachusetts under the direction of a commission, and now are beginning to see the boomerang of blindly charging up a lump sum for depreciation and crediting it to the plant. They meet around the directors' table and some dear old gentleman says: "I think we have made a nice lot of money this year, and we will put up $30,000 for depreciation." They have done that in Haverhill until they have reduced their book value of plant to 63 cents per thousand although they could not reproduce that plant, without any good will or anything else, for probably less than $5.

Mr. SIMS. Will you allow me to ask you by whose invitation you have appeared here?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gas company's.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Upon that question of the pressure of gas in the pipes, what influence has the pressure, if any, upon the meter?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In what way?

Mr. MCMILLAN. In increasing the consumption—in giving evidence of consumption. What injury does it work to the consumer? Please give a good, clear, concise statement on that. A great many people think that there is more injury caused from the pressure than through the increased price of gas.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is a very difficult matter to make a clear and concise statement without being technical.

Mr. MCMILLAN. But you ought to put yourself on record upon that point.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I think I did that before you came in.

Mr. CARY. Is not there a law in the District of Columbia at present that the company can not charge over a dollar per thousand for gas?

Mr. SIMS. I think not; I think it is $1.10.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Replying to the question asked by Mr. McMillan, I will say that if I take an amount of gas and squeeze it, I can get more in a cylinder than if I do not squeeze it. The harder the pressure the more gas can be squeezed in a cylinder.

Mr. MCMILLAN. And the more the pressure the more consumed?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; I think not. That will not affect the consumption at all.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask you why gas can not be sold as cheap in Georgetown as in Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Well, it is a more scattered district, and, as a rule, in general, as I have stated—you can not always follow a rule—but the general rule is that it costs more to make gas in smaller communities and distribute it than in the larger cities. There are certain exceptions that sometimes, on analysis, will show that the rule is not followed. But as a rule the smaller place has to charge more for gas than the larger one.

The CHAIRMAN. In that New York case was anything taken into consideration besides the physical value of the gas company?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What was taken into consideration in that case?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. My recollection is on the last decision, which I confess I have not had time to read—Judge Hough's last decision—that $20,000,000 was allowed for franchise and good will, I think. But I am not positive about that; it might have been $12,000,000. Upon second thought, I am confident that the judge stated it was not less than $12,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. As you have not had sufficient time to make a thorough investigation here, I would like to ask you if you can and will in the near future tell this committee what gas ought to be and can be sold for in Washington and allow a fair profit to the company, and at both 18 and 23 candlepower? I have been told that we ought to get along with 18 candlepower, and that the people would be just as well satisfied and would then have the benefit of a reduction in price. If that is the case, I would like to know it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Very well.

Mr. KELIHER. Will you also furnish the committee your idea of the relative cost at tide water per ton of coal in the cities of Washington, New York, and Boston?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Of course, in the Boston case we will have to take into account the special contract with the Dominion Coal Company, which, I think, has been modified some 5 cents.

Mr. KELIHER. What I have in mind is regardless of any contract. What should be the cost of the coal?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will put that in as a side memorandum and take the ordinary commercial gas coal as delivered in Boston. Of course it is not for me to say that I will do this; it is for the Washington Gas Company to say whether they will employ me to do it or not, as I am a rather expensive man.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Bemis has consented to come back here, the other side has consented to bring him back, and I apprehend that if the committee is going to take your testimony or that of anybody else it ought to have the benefit of at least enough time of the witness to satisfy ourselves as to the value of the testimony.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I am a little modest about talking about it. I am not the principal, I have to be employed, and I presume that my charge is probably ten times that of Mr. Bemis.

Mr. HART. He will be retained.

Mr. SIMS. Which is the greater cost, coal or oil, in the manufacture of water gas alone?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The oil is the chief element of cost in the case of water gas.

Mr. SIMS. So that if there is a larger percentage of water gas, the oil cost will become greater relatively if we use the high candlepower; that is, if you reduce the candlepower you reduce the oil cost, and that would reduce the general price?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is where the saving comes in.

Mr. SIMS. In answer to a question, in which you said that you are employed by the gas company; I suppose that fact has nothing to do with the answers you have given?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; not at all; I hope I am answering the questions absolutely upon what I believe to be true.

Mr. SIMS. I understood you to say a moment ago that if you answered certain questions it would depend upon whether you were employed or not.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, no. The question the chairman asked me was whether I would come here again to answer certain additional questions, and that would mean a long investigation and an additional cost to the company.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Have you examined this gas plant here?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In a general way.

Mr. MCMILLAN. So far as you know, is this plant an up-to-date plant?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is, all the appliances that are now used in the manufacture of gas are used here, so far as you know?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So far as I know. Of course we could rebuild the works every year and probably bring in something new.

Mr. MCMILLAN. In other words, the works here are really up-to-date works and have been kept so?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; and admirably managed works. Since I was here a year or two ago they have made some distinct improvements.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Do they use modern means to cheapen gas?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They might possibly cheapen it a little bit.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What fuel do they use now for generating gas—coal, oil, or what?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They use what is known as "gas coal."

Mr. MCMILLAN. Soft coal?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is a particular kind of bituminous coal adapted to the making of coal gas, because it is of a high volatile character, and with a large amount of gas held in it. That does not necessarily mean that any rich soft coal is good gas coal, because it must be free from excess of sulphur. Then they use an anthracite to make the water gas. Water gas has to be made by just the opposite kind of carbon from coal gas. It must be made from coal that is free from bituminous matter, so they are obliged to use both kinds of coal. They also use the coke from the coal-gas works in making their water gas.

Mr. MCMILLAN. And you consider that a modern means?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; and on top of that they use oil.

The CHAIRMAN. I heard last night that gas was sold in Cincinnati for 50 cents a thousand, and I would like to ask you why it can not be sold as cheap in Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But that is not true; gas is sold at 50 cents in Cincinnati, yes, under certain arrangements as to what it is to be used for. I figured up last night from the returns, and I made up my mind that, as close as we could figure it from the reports, the average price is 66¼ cents in Cincinnati.

Mr. HART. Will you allow me to ask what the candlepower is in Cincinnati?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The candlepower is 17.

The CHAIRMAN. You say that it is sold in Cincinnati for about 66 cents?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It averages about 66¼ cents.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a difference of candlepower, you say, of 5—between 17 and 23. If we allowed for that difference, would it be the same price here?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Because Cincinnati is one of the cheapest places in the United States for the delivery of gas coal. It has always been one of the cheapest places for gas coal in the United States; and it also has been always a very low candlepower city.

Mr. SIMS. Would it be cheaper with water gas?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; they never have used much water gas because of their ability to make a cheap coal gas due to the particular materials at hand, just as they do in England. I put in a plant for water gas in Cincinnati in 1892, but they have never used it regularly, just holding it in reserve for emergencies.

Mr. SIMS. You state that the present price of a dollar per thousand, in view of the conditions prevailing here, you believe to be a reasonable and fair price?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I believe it to be so.

Mr. SIMS. Supposing these conditions continue, but the city grows larger and the population increases, would that not give a greater profit?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Then what would you suggest, if anything, in the line of a sliding scale, for instance, a sliding scale beginning with a dollar as now, and in two or three years bring it down——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I should not want to answer that question offhand, because the conditions vary so with increased population. I was surprised on comparing New York with London to find that the increase there from a sale per capita was about six thousand up to ninety-two hundred per capita, and it had not produced a decrease of cost, because the actual cost of distribution in New York had increased in spite of the large increase per capita and in spite of having probably the largest sale per mile of mains in the United States.

Mr. SIMS. I am only assuming that the present cost of materials will be maintained. The price might go up or down?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I am not referring to that so much as the congestion in the streets. That has been the great trouble in New York—the tremendous cost of operating in the streets and repairing them.

Mr. SIMS. But that will never exist here, in all probability.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. To no such extent; no, sir; I should not imagine so. You have broader streets for one thing.

Adjourned at 11.50 a. m.

COMMUNICATION FROM MR. HUMPHREYS.

In a letter addressed to the committee, under date of April 21, 1908, Mr. Humphreys, in referring to his statement, says:

"There is one correction I would like to make, but hardly feel warranted in doing so, because it is based upon information obtained since I returned to New York. You will remember that they questioned my statement that coal was dearer in Detroit than in Washington. I have made the statement that I felt quite sure that I was correct. If there is any way to have it so, I would like to have it appear that this statement is confirmed. If you think it is proper to put it in as parenthesis, I would be very glad to have you do so.

"I find that, under ordinary circumstances, there is a difference of about 50 cents in favor of Detroit."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment covering the matter of a discount for payment of the bill in cash within a certain time in this form, if the gentleman will yield for that purpose: After the word "feet," in line 10, add the word "net," so that it will read:

Ninety cents per thousand cubic feet net: Provided, That 10 cents per thousand cubic feet additional may be collected on any bill which is not paid within twenty days from the time of mailing the bill to the consumer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that there is a motion pending before the House to recommit the bill.

Mr. MANN. I was not going to offer the amendment; I was going to ask if the gentleman from Michigan would yield to me for the purpose of offering that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the bill be recommitted to the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCMILLAN) there were—ayes 4, noes 61.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish you would state the issue; these gentlemen do not know what they are voting upon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. This is not a committee amendment. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois has not been submitted.

Mr. MANN. I have no authority to offer an amendment unless the gentleman yields to me for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, Mr. Speaker; I do not feel like receiving the amendment and I ask for a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment——

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is no committee amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). To strike out the word "ninety" and insert the word "eighty-five," line 9.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof "eighty-five."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced he was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 33.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AGENCY ACT.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 20247.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20247) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the fees charged for the employment of agricultural hands, coachmen, grooms, hostlers, seamstresses, cooks, waiters, waitresses, scrubwomen, nurses (except professional nurses), chambermaids, maids of all work, domestics, servants, or other laborers (except seamen), or for the purpose of procuring or giving information concerning such person for or to employers, shall be as follows:

"Employment agents or agencies shall be entitled to receive in advance from an employer, for male or female employees, $2 each: Provided, That such fee shall entitle said employer to at least thirty days' service from said male or female employee, or from other employees at the same rate of wages to be furnished by said employment agent or agencies.

"Employment agents or agencies shall be entitled to receive in advance from the applicant for work or employment, either male or female, $1 each, one-half of which is to be returned on demand if such applicant is not secured a fair opportunity of employment within thirty days after the receipt of said original fee of $1: Provided, That where the male or female employee receives employment at a rate of wage of $25 per month or more, said employment agent or agency shall, on obtaining employment for such employee, receive an additional $1 from said employee: Provided, That the whole fee and any sums paid by the applicant for transportation in going to and returning from such employer shall be refunded within four days of demand, if no employment of the kind applied for was vacant at the place to which the applicant was directed: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any employment agent or agency to receive more than the fees set forth in this act in the business aforesaid.

"It shall be the duty of such licensed person to give to every applicant for employment from whom a fee shall be received a receipt in which shall be stated the name of said applicant, the date and amount of the fee, and the purpose for which it was paid, and to every applicant for help a receipt stating the name and address of said applicant, the date and amount of the fee, and the kind of help to be provided. Every such receipt, excepting only those given by theatrical and teachers' agencies and those procuring technical, clerical, sales, and executive positions for men only, shall have printed on the back thereof a copy of this section in the English language. No such licensed person shall divide fees with contractors or their agents or other employers or anyone in their employ to whom applicants for employment are sent. Every such licensed person shall give to each applicant for employment a card or printed paper containing the name of the applicant for employment, name and address of such employment agency, and the written name and address of the person to whom the applicant is sent for employment. Every such licensed person shall post in a conspicuous place in each room of such agency a plain and legible copy of this act, which shall be printed in large type."

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In page 2, line 7, after the word "employees," insert the words "at the same rate of wages."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the object of this amendment, and the only amendment to the existing law, is to increase the fees paid by persons employing help from $1 to $2, and the reason for that is that in the law which was passed a little over two years ago, providing for the regulation of employment agencies and the fees to be charged, a dollar was allowed to be paid by the employer and a dollar by the servant. That was simply an experiment. We had no data to go on, and after two years of trial and after a careful investigation of more than a dozen respectable and first-class agencies we came to the conclusion, justifiably, I believe, that the fee was too small to maintain the high-class and proper agencies that we are trying to keep up in this District.

Members of the committee gave personal investigation of more than a dozen places, and hearings were given to more than a dozen persons interested in employment agencies, also to certain ladies of the District who are interested in this line of work. This was the recommendation of all of those people. As an additional consideration for this extra dollar, the committee has inserted a proviso that the employer, after paying his $2, shall have for thirty days a chance to test out a servant and get a proper servant without additional charge. That is a very valuable suggestion, and we hope it will be enacted into law with this amendment. The only other amendment is where the salary of a servant is $25, from $25 up, which is more than the average salary, the employer of the agency may receive an additional dollar. Up to $25 they shall only receive a dollar, as now provided in the law in existence. These are the only amendments, and I have given the reasons for the amendments.

Mr. CAULFIELD. What are the customary fees charged in places throughout the country?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. As near as I can get at it, in the larger cities it is on a percentage basis, which works out a much larger fee than anything paid in Washington. In some cities it is scaled according to the salary.

Mr. CAULFIELD. How long does this percentage continue?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Just one payment.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Is a license required of these people under this law?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes; a license is provided for. Now, if there are no further questions, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the committee amendment will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed was laid on the table.

INFERIOR COURT JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 6359, entitled "An act to change the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace of the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

During the reading—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to make a point of order that this bill ought to be on the Union Calendar. It is the proper place to consider it, I think; and it is now getting late, too. I understand the bill creates offices and changes offices, and necessarily ought to go to the Union Calendar; also, it fixes the compensation.

Mr. MANN. It fixes a compensation or rental at $1,800 a year.

Mr. MACON. And fixes salary, too.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But it does not provide for any appropriation.

The SPEAKER. If it makes a charge upon the Treasury of the United States, it is surely subject to the point of order. The Chair is causing the bill to be examined to see whether it makes a charge upon the District revenues alone or upon the Treasury itself.

Mr. MANN. It provides for a rental of $1,800 a year, and that itself would put it upon the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will point out the provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the organic act the judges are paid half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and half from the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to ascertain, and therefore asks the gentleman whether or no, under the terms of this act, the salaries and expenditures referred to in the act are payable from the District revenues or from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The act does not say, and unless the act specifically directs that they shall be paid out of the District revenues, they are paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On page 4, beginning with the fourteenth line, the bill reads:

The said court shall have power to employ a clerk at an annual salary of $1,500; and an assistant clerk at an annual salary of $1,000, payable monthly by the District of Columbia, which clerks shall hold office at the pleasure of the court.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At this time the court collects fees. This money is turned into the Treasury, and out of that money the salaries and rentals are paid, and there is still a surplus left that goes into the Treasury. The salaries of the six justices are reduced from $3,000 to $2,500, and the salary of the clerks will average about what the reduction amounts to. Also, we pay rent now for the buildings that are occupied by the six justices. Our proposition is to put them all in one building instead of keeping them in six.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. On page 2, line 16, the bill says:

Such municipal court shall sit for the trial of causes in one building, to be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be rented by said District of Columbia at a rental not to exceed $1,800 per annum.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the aggregate rent we pay now amounts to more than that.

Mr. MANN. That is all the same. Here is an express provision not now authorized by law, providing for the rental of a building in the District of Columbia, and no provision being made as to how it shall be paid; and yet, by the organic act, one-half is paid out of the National Treasury and half out of the District treasury.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if it is not a fact that all the men appointed to these municipal judgeships will have police powers?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; and they have now.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it a fact that all the police court fines are covered into the police insurance fund?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; when they sit as police judges they go into the police court and sit there and merely try causes. The clerk of the police court has charge, rather than the clerk of the municipal court.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee a minute. The reasons I raised the point of order are these: I do not know that I am opposed to the bill, but it is a very important bill, the hour is late, but few Members are here, and I think it is too late to consider this bill at this time. Manifestly there is not a quorum here, and I ask the gentleman, to save time, to withdraw the bill for the present. Unquestionably he can not go along with it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the District Committee may have one hour to-morrow for District business. We have three or four more bills. This committee did not have a regular day from the 23d day of March last until the adjournment on the 30th of May.

The SPEAKER. Pending the point of order, the gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may have one hour of to-morrow's session as of to-day. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair desires to state that the gentleman from Illinois calls attention to line 16, page 2:

Said municipal court shall sit for the trial of causes in one building, to be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be rented by said District of Columbia, at a rental not to exceed $1,800 per annum.

The line of decisions is that it must appear from the face of the bill and not as a matter of argument or speculation that the bill makes a charge upon the Treasury. The Chair will take time to read the bill through very carefully, if it is desired. The Chair can not decide the point of order without a careful examination of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House do now adjourn. Pending that, the Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate for the return of a bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States, December 14, 1908.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of restrictions of alienation of lands of allottees in the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings of any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of said agency, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be returned.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 78. Joint resolution establishing the boundary line between the States of Colorado and Oklahoma and Territory of New Mexico.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MARSHALL, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WEEMS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Andrew Crowl (H. R. 18170), Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting data in relation to railroads in Alaska under the act of May 14, 1898—to the Committee on the Territories and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

A letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting papers on the claim of Cadmus Crabill—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of State submitting explanations in connection with estimates of appropriation for foreign intercourse—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a response to the inquiry of the House in relation to admission of manganiferous iron ore at ports of entry—to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to print manuscript, but not the book.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for irrigation on Indian reservations—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Postmaster-General submitting an estimate of reappropriation for street railway tracks at the Baltimore post-office—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for taking the Thirteenth Decennial Census—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the upper Mississippi Valley—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a petition of the Sac and Fox Indians of Oklahoma, praying for the payment of certain trust funds—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Thomas Williams against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of J. P. Matthews, administrator of estate of Nathan Gradick, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of L. H. Kelly, administrator of estate of John McH. Kelly and Allie V. Kelly, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, proposing legislation authorizing the construction of road and bridges in Warm Springs Reservation, Oreg.—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with draft of a bill, recommendations as to construction of a bridge over Little Colorado River, abutting on Navajo Reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22361) granting an increase of pension to John Marshall—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 22362) granting an increase of pension to John C. Cribbs—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 22363) granting an increase of pension to George D. Hamm—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 22364) granting an increase of pension to John Lukecart—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 22365) granting an increase of pension to William E. Weckerley—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23279) granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Dyer—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23357) granting a pension to Ellen M. Brennan—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23358) granting a pension to Harry Menovitz—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23379) granting a pension to Ruthey J. Robinson—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23400) granting a pension to Jacob H. Mose—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23401) granting a pension to Charles E. Welker—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23404) granting an increase of pension to Mary Gorman—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 22963) granting an increase of pension to Anna Irvine—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DOUGLAS: A bill (H. R. 23971) to amend section 2 of an act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions," etc.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23972) to amend section 4708, laws of the United States, granting pensions, etc.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 23973) for the relief of pensioners of the Metropolitan police fund—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: A bill (H. R. 23974) providing for a light-ship in Lake Michigan off the harbor at Gary, Ind.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 23975) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act amending section 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to pensions to remarried widows,'" approved February 28, 1903—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINNEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 23976) to correct the mistakes in the location and construction of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, the lock and dams within and near the village of Milan, county of Rock Island, and State of Illinois—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MAYNARD: A bill (H. R. 23977) to provide for acquirement by condemnation of lands at Cape Henry, Va., for the purpose of fortification and coast defense—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. LAFEAN: A bill (H. R. 23978) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to purchase certain lands on the battlefield of Gettysburg, and making an appropriation therefor—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 23979) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend moneys already appropriated for Beaufort Harbor, North Carolina, for certain improvements in said harbor and for an additional appropriation of $18,000 for said harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HIGGINS: A bill (H. R. 23980) to provide for a survey of the Mystic River, Connecticut—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LOVERING: A bill (H. R. 23981) to amend the act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, etc., approved June 30, 1906, and the act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, etc., approved May 30, 1908—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A bill (H. R. 23982) for the erection of a public building at the city of Woodbury, in the State of New Jersey—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WILEY: A bill (H. R. 24134) directing the fixing of a standard of cotton classification in the transaction of cotton business by the exchanges in the United States—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: Resolution (H. Res. 455) to amend the rules as to the admission of reporters to the floor of the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 203) to authorize the Secretary of State to invite the permanent International Association of Navigation Congresses to hold in the United States, in the year 1911, the Twelfth International Congress of Navigation—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WILEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 204) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to cause an examination and survey to be made of an inland waterway or canal from Mobile Bay to Perdido Bay and from the latter bay to Escambia Bay of such width and depth as will be sufficient to permit of the navigation of such vessels as ordinarily navigate said bays—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 23983) granting a pension to Thomas M. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 23984) granting a pension to Lucy R. Woodward—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23985) granting a pension to Sabina Pierce—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23986) granting an increase of pension to Alexander M. Rainey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANSBERRY: A bill (H. R. 23987) granting an increase of pension to Mathias Hicks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23988) granting an increase of pension to John Love—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23989) granting a pension to Amanda S. Kline—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 23990) granting an increase of pension to Rollin B. Shower—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23991) granting an increase of pension to George Abrams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23992) granting an increase of pension to William R. Vanhoozer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23993) granting an increase of pension to Michael Knight—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 23994) for the relief of J. M. King—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 23995) granting a pension to Oscar C. Oliver—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23996) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Bayliss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 23997) granting an increase of pension to Enoch Carter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 23998) granting a pension to Jane Elvin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALE: A bill (H. R. 23999) granting an increase of pension to William H. Chapin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24000) granting an increase of pension to Adelbert Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24001) granting an increase of pension to Byron T. Gibson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24002) granting an increase of pension to Albert F. Pierce—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24003) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Hinman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24004) granting an increase of pension to William H. Meade—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24005) granting an increase of pension to James A. Benjamin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: A bill (H. R. 24006) granting an increase of pension to Josiah D. Mater—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24007) granting an increase of pension to William A. Rose—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24008) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Hannah—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24009) granting a pension to Izora O. Cook—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHANEY: A bill (H. R. 24010) granting an increase of pension to Edward E. Thorn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24011) granting an increase of pension to George W. Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24012) granting an increase of pension to David Jarvis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24013) granting an increase of pension to James A. Medaris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24014) granting an increase of pension to John D. Bray—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24015) granting an increase of pension to Louis R. Edmunds—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24016) granting an increase of pension to Silas R. Houston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24017) granting an increase of pension to John Rees—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24018) granting an increase of pension to Chamness S. Burks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24019) granting an increase of pension to Marcus H. Ingram—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 24020) granting a pension to Esther M. Stanley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DIXON: A bill (H. R. 24021) granting an increase of pension to Thomas A. Pearce—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24022) granting an increase of pension to Sylvester Justis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24023) granting an increase of pension to Julius Lane—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24024) granting an increase of pension to Jasper Ross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOUGLAS: A bill (H. R. 24025) granting an increase of pension to Henry Duddleson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DWIGHT: A bill (H. R. 24026) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Cornish—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24027) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel J. Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 24028) granting an increase of pension to James E. Reilly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 24029) for the relief of Alexander Everhart—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FOSTER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 24030) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Boles—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24031) granting an increase of pension to William H. Williamson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24032) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Watts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24033) granting an increase of pension to Daniel W. Myers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24034) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan Huston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24035) granting an increase of pension to John G. Dale—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24036) granting an increase of pension to George T. Clausen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24037) granting an increase of pension to Christopher C. Estes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24038) granting an increase of pension to B. M. Laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24039) granting a pension to Lydia McKoin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24040) granting a pension to W. J. Collins—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24041) granting a pension to Clifford Sweeten—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24042) granting a pension to Oscar Sweeten—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24043) granting a pension to Viola Shaw—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24044) granting a pension to Elizabeth Girard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24045) granting a pension to Sarah Highsmith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24046) granting a pension to B. F. Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24047) granting a pension to Richard M. Goddy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24048) granting a pension to Prudence Simmons—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24049) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of George W. Terrell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FOSTER of Vermont: A bill (H. R. 24050) granting an increase of pension to C. C. Sabin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 24051) granting an increase of pension to William H. Young—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILHAMS: A bill (H. R. 24052) granting an increase of pension to Alvin E. Nishwitz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HIGGINS: A bill (H. R. 24053) granting an increase of pension to Oscar E. Hildebrand—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24054) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin G. Barber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24055) granting an increase of pension to George E. Leonard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24056) granting an increase of pension to Benajah E. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUSTON: A bill (H. R. 24057) for the relief of James R. House—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 24058) granting an increase of pension to James Skrine—to the Committee to Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24059) granting an increase of pension to William H. Reinhart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24060) granting a pension to William Haley—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24061) granting a pension to George Ihnath—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24062) granting a pension to Michael J. Tully—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24063) granting a pension to Howard Farrell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24064) granting a pension to Marie Fraser—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 24065) for the relief of the legal representatives of Jacob W. Staley, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 24066) for the relief of George A. Vandever—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 24067) granting a pension to Peter Andress—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEIFER: A bill (H. R. 24068) granting an increase of pension to George W. Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNAPP: A bill (H. R. 24069) for the relief of John T. Mott—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24070) for the relief of William D. Allen—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KNOPF: A bill (H. R. 24071) granting an increase of pension to Christian Wendling—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KÜSTERMANN: A bill (H. R. 24072) granting an increase of pension to George William Northedge—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFEAN: A bill (H. R. 24073) granting an increase of pension to Adam F. Becker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24074) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24075) granting a pension to Annie M. Tinsley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A bill (H. R. 24076) granting an increase of pension to Jacob L. Parker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCALL: A bill (H. R. 24077) granting a pension to Lucy A. Deering—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McGAVIN: A bill (H. R. 24078) granting an increase of pension to James Linnett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24079) granting an increase of pension to Orlando Van Buren—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 24080) granting an increase of pension to Elwood W. Coleman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24081) granting an increase of pension to Andreas Hirlinger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24082) granting an increase of pension to James W. Kearns—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24083) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Kaseman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24084) granting an increase of pension to Henry Kearns, alias Henry Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24085) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Letteer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24086) granting an increase of pension to William H. Small—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24087) granting a pension to James F. Adams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24088) granting a pension to Edwin R. Warburton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24089) granting a pension to Joseph Yeager—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 24090) granting a pension to John Webb—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKINNEY: A bill (H. R. 24091) granting an increase of pension to Milon L. Tompkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 24092) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of William Birk—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAYNARD: A bill (H. R. 24093) granting an increase of pension to Martha L. De Ryder—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 24094) granting a pension to Ellen Murphy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24095) granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Lechler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24096) granting a pension to James B. Coppuck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24097) granting a pension to Mary Sullivan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24098) granting a pension to Emma Wagner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 24099) for the relief of the estate of Aaron Murdock, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24100) for the relief of the estate of Patrick Henry Watkins, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24101) for the relief of the estate of William Roberts, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24102) for the relief of James B. Hoge—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24103) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Penny, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OLCOTT: A bill (H. R. 24104) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 24105) for the relief of the estate of T. J. Semmes, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 24106) granting a pension to Ann Hickox—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 24107) for the relief of Davis W. Hatch—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of California: A bill (H. R. 24108) granting an increase of pension to Abram Storms—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNAPP: A bill (H. R. 24109) granting a pension to Mary Hanna—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 24110) granting a pension to Bennett Whidden—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24111) granting an increase of pension to Myrtle L. Hart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPERRY: A bill (H. R. 24112) granting an increase of pension to David S. Dort—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THISTLEWOOD: A bill (H. R. 24113) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Fuller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24114) granting an increase of pension to James A. Woodson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24115) granting an increase of pension to Mary B. Jenks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 24116) restoring to the pension rolls the name of Robert J. Scott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEISSE: A bill (H. R. 24117) granting an increase of pension to Charles Ward—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24118) granting an increase of pension to Byron T. Gibson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24119) granting an increase of pension to J. H. Heather—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24120) granting an increase of pension to John Neugebauer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24121) granting an increase of pension to Peter McHugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24122) granting a pension to Margaret Williamson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24123) granting an increase of pension to William Anglum—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24124) granting an increase of pension to George T. Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24125) granting an increase of pension to August Grupe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 24126) for the relief of the estate of Ann M. Meehan, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 24127) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Jaworski—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24128) granting an increase of pension to John F. Barrow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD: A bill (H. R. 24129) granting a pension to Ellen Johnston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARCHFELD: A bill (H. R. 24130) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust the claim of the Merritt & Chapman Wrecking Company—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24131) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust the claim of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick and Wrecking Company—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24132) for the relief of John D. Toppin, passed assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SHACKLEFORD: A bill (H. R. 24133) granting an increase of pension to Eleanor A. McCardell—to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Edward B. Ward—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALLEN: Petition of Walter H. Libby and 21 other citizens of Portland, Me., against Senate bill 3940 (religious observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ANTHONY: Petitions of citizens of Atchison and citizens of Willard, against the passage of S. 3940 (proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, for removal of duty on basic slag—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of W. E. Tyler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Annie Irvine (previously referred to the Committee on Pensions)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Petition of Board of Trade of Philadelphia, favoring Senate joint resolution No. 40, relative to transportation of material for the Panama Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BRADLEY: Petition of J. W. Matthews & Co., of Newburgh, N. Y., for removal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CHANEY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Louis R. Edmunds—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Silas R. Houston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: Petition of sundry citizens of Hermann, Mo., asking for improvement of certain portions of Missouri and Gasconade rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DAWSON: Petition of 48 citizens of Davenport, Iowa, for legislation to pension members of the Telegraph Corps of the civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of A. E. Yoell, for Asiatic exclusion legislation—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. DWIGHT: Petition of Theodore C. Thorpe, favoring removal of duty from raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of H. C. Weidenbacher, of Eau Claire, Wis., for repeal of duty on sugar—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring Senate joint resolution No. 40, relative to transportation of material for the Panama Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Petition of River Improvement and Drainage Association, for the improvement of Sacramento River, California—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Asiatic Exclusion League, for the exclusion of Asiatics other than certain special classes—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of Tennie Alsberg and 71 others, citizens of Brooklyn, against S. 3940 (religious legislation in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FLOYD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John H. Gray (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOSS: Petition of citizens of Chicago, Ill., against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FULLER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William H. Young—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of J. J. Winter, of Garfield, Ill., against a parcels-post act—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Illinois Retail Jewelers' Association, of Chicago, favoring enactment of federal advertising law against fraudulent advertising—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Al F. Schoch, of National City Bank, of Ottawa, Ill., favoring tariff on zinc ore—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Albert E. Beatty (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of R. W. Fuller and 47 other citizens of Stockton, Cal., favoring an effective Asiatic exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of River Improvement and Drainage Association, of San Francisco, for appropriation to improve Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HIGGINS: Petition of J. B. Holl, of Willimantic, Conn., and Ernest C. Laboll, of Groton, Conn., against the passage of S. 3940 (proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOUSTON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Samuel S. George (H. R. 23590)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: Petition of William White, president, and E. G. Locke, secretary, of Bingham Union, No. 67, International Wood Workers, and Paul G. Smith and Al Hansen, of Bingham Local Union, No. 93, for investigation and regulation of the Treadwell Mining Company, of Douglas Island, Alaska—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, petition of Asiatic Exclusion League, for more stringent exclusion laws against Asiatics—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: Petition of citizens of New Jersey, favoring the creation of a department of education—to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of citizens of New Jersey, favoring legislation to provide pension for the United States Military Telegraph Corps of the United States Army during civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: Petitions of the Chamber of Commerce of Huntington, W. Va., and of the Board of Trade of Elkins, W. Va., praying for legislation providing for the establishment of the Appalachian-White Mountain National Forest—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Veteran Army of the Philippines, praying for the enactment of legislation recognizing August 13 as a legal holiday—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KAHN: Petition of Frank Thole and 47 other residents of Richmond, Cal., in favor of an exclusion law prohibiting entrance of all Asiatics into the United States—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KNAPP: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John T. Mott—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LAFEAN: Papers to accompany bills for relief of John Cline (H. R. 22666), Lewis I. Renaut (H. R. 22663), James Miller, William H. Zeigler (H. R. 22661), James A. Poleman (H. R. 22667), and James Spealman (H. R. 22664)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LASSITER: Petition of Veteran Army of the Philippines, for legislation making August 13 a legal holiday, to be known as "Occupation Day"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Roper & Co., of Petersburg, Va., for the removal of duty on sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: Petition of citizens of Stevens County, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of A. E. Yoell, for Asiatic exclusion law—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of citizens of New York, against enactment of the Johnston Sunday bill (S. 3940)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of River Improvement and Drainage Association, for improvement of Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LOUD: Petition of citizens of Cheboygan and Onaway, against S. 3940 (religious legislation in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MAYNARD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Martha L. De Ryder—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCALL: Petition of ladies of Physiological Institute, of Boston, favoring legislation to suppress manufacture and sale of opium—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of citizens of Reading, Mass., against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McHENRY: Petition of the Hooven Mercantile Company, of Sunbury, Pa., for removal of duty on sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McKINNEY: Petition of residents of Milan, Ill., for relief from overflow of waters of Mill Creek—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: Papers to accompany bills in re war claims of James B. Hoge; estate of William Roberts, deceased; of Abner Louder; estate of Aaron Murdock, deceased; of George W. Penny and others; and of Patrick H. Watkins, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OLCOTT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Charlotte Velle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: Petition of A. E. Yoell, for more stringent Asiatic exclusion law—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. PATTERSON: Paper to accompanying H. R. 23934, for the relief of Harmony Lodge, No. 17, Ancient Free Masons, of Barnwell, S. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. POLLARD: Petition of Omaha Bar Association, favoring increase of salaries of United States circuit judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of residents of Auburn, Nebr., favoring the pensioning of members of the Military Telegraphers' Corps in civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRAY: Petition of citizens of Bozeman, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RYAN: Petition of Chamber of Commerce of Buffalo, favoring removal of duty on barley—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Chamber of Commerce of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring creation of a nonpartisan tariff commission—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Chamber of Commerce, Buffalo, N. Y., for increase of salaries of United States district court judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of bar association of Erie County, N. Y., for legislation increasing salaries of district court judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Papers to accompany bill granting a pension to Ann Hickox—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Utica, N. Y., for the removal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: Petition of citizens of San Antonio, Tex., against the Johnston bill (S. 3940), providing for religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of David W. Hatch—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Texas: Petition of citizens of Texas, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: Petitions of citizens of Plant City, citizens of Bartow, and citizens of Manatee County, all in the State of Florida, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: Petition of citizens of Alabama, against S. 3940 (religious observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. VREELAND: Petition against S. 3940 (Sunday observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade, for S. 40, providing for transportation by sea of material and equipment for use in construction of the Panama Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Smith, Horton & Co., favoring removal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: Paper to accompany bill for relief of estate of Ann M. Meehan—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WOOD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Ellen Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOODYARD: Petition of J. S. Moore and Shattuck & Jackson Company, wholesale grocers of Parkersburg, W. Va., for removal of duty on sugar—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 15, 1908.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward Everett Hale.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BURROWS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF MONTANA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authentic copy of the certificate of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Montana, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to be filed.

PNEUMATIC-TUBE SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, stating that, pursuant to law, he had transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a report on the feasibility and desirability of the Government purchasing and installing the equipment for pneumatic-tube service, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate in compliance with its request the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restrictions or alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. LLOYD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 11733. An act punishing conspiracy to injure or intimidate any person in the exercise of a right under the Constitution or laws of the United States;

H. R. 12899. An act to provide for a disbursing officer for the Government Hospital for the Insane;

H. R. 15448. An act to amend section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901;

H. R. 16066. An act providing for the payment of an annual license tax by dealers in all forms of manufactured tobacco in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 18345. An act to fix the price of gas in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 18513. An act to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act relative to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia," approved June 6, 1896;

H. R. 20111. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," relative to gambling, bucket shops, and bucketing; and

H. R. 20247. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 78) establishing the boundary line between the States of Colorado and Oklahoma and the Territory of New Mexico, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Scotts, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called "postal savings bank and parcels post bills," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ANKENY presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Deming, Wash., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making the first day of the week a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the St. Paul Chapter, American Institute of Banking of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the present national-bank law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the States of South Dakota and Wyoming, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making the first day of the week a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Lead City Miners' Union, of Lead, S. Dak., praying that an investigation be made into the operations of the Treadwell Mining Company, on Douglas Island, Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. BURKETT presented an affidavit to accompany the bill (S. 7368) granting an increase of pension to Hortense B. Follett, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 2702) granting an increase of pension to Isaac A. Arnold, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SIMMONS presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 243) for the relief of John Wise, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Ladies' Physiological Institute of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress the importation, manufacture, and sale of opium within the jurisdiction of the United States, except for medicinal uses, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Reading and Wakefield, in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making the first day of the week a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the surviving members of the United States Military Telegraph Corps who served in the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BULKELEY presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Windsor Locks, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the East Washington Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the elimination of the present grade siding of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company on K and Canal streets, connecting the main track of that company with the navy-yard in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a petition of Henry W. Blair, of Manchester, N. H., an ex-Senator of the United States, in favor of a constitutional amendment granting the right of suffrage to the citizens of the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent that the petition be printed in the RECORD—it is brief—and that the petition and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the petition was referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives:

Your petitioner, Henry W. Blair, of Manchester, in the State of New Hampshire, a citizen of the United States, respectfully represents that the inhabitants of the District of Columbia, consisting of more than three hundred thousand souls, have been held and are now being held in legal bondage, under a despotic form of government in which they have had no representation whatever, which has thus oppressed and despoiled them of life, liberty, and property continuously for more than thirty years last past, and that it is alleged and claimed that the said despotism is so set up and exercised over the inhabitants of the District of Columbia by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. The permanent continuance of such a state of things is intolerable and impossible in a free country.

Your petitioner believes that the people of the District of Columbia are entitled to their full share in the sovereignty by which they are governed, and to equality of civil and political rights with other citizens of the United States and of the several States, including voting representation in both Houses of Congress, which has over them the combined powers of the national and state governments over other American citizens.

One drop of poison at the heart kills more surely than a shower shed on the surface of the body.

It is not well for the robust freedom which dwells on the hills and mountain ranges and in the valleys and plains of the country, which is our only real hope as a nation, to behold even a splendid slavery in their capital city and its people growing fat and magnificent and contented in their bonds, though made of hemp and iron and gold so mingled that at a little distance and to the popular eye the glisten of the latter conceals the other two.

Some who claim this to be the best form of government on earth are themselves the government which they thus naturally approve; others are apprehensive that any change will be harmful to dominant interests and to the forces and conditions which keep them so; others still are honest disbelievers in free institutions and all government republican in form, or their unrepublican environment has developed native-born foreigners under the shadow of the Capitol. But the great mass of human beings in the District of Columbia want a radical change for themselves, if possible, but chiefly for their children and the generations to come.

The population of the District of Columbia has increased fivefold during the last fifty years, and with the impetus which would come from participation in the higher franchise and general sovereignty of the country (not merely the local, subordinate, municipal franchise which Congress may now confer), before the close of the twentieth century more than 2,000,000 people will dwell within her limits.

The ordinance of 1787 and the cession of territory by Georgia in both cases required the division of the territory and its admission into the Union as States when the subdivisions had a population of only 60,000 free inhabitants.

(2) Your petitioner also alleges, as a matter of history, that in time of peace great danger has arisen to the existence of the Government of the United States by reason of deficient provisions in the Constitution for the transmission of the executive power, in that under the operation of those now existing an election of President became impossible and a deadlock in the Government and disturbance of public order, if not civil war, was only avoided by resort to a certain unconstitutional makeshift or device, entered into by agreement of parties, known as an "Electoral Commission," the practical working of which was not such as to make like agreements probable hereafter.

(3) He further respectfully alleges that in his belief the failure of the Constitution to provide for the temporary exercise of the executive power and for a new election whenever for any cause no President shall have been inaugurated at the end of the regular term of the President is a source of danger calling for immediate remedy.

Wherefore your petitioner prays the Congress to inquire, and if these things are found to be so, to formulate and submit to the legislatures of the States a joint resolution or resolutions for amendments to the Constitution substantially as follows, or in some better form which the wisdom of the Congress may prescribe:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. The District of Columbia shall be entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States by one Senator and by one or more Representatives, according to the rule of apportionment established by the Constitution, and to as many electors for President and Vice-President as it has Members of the Congress, who shall have the same qualifications and powers as other like officers, and shall be chosen, and all vacancies filled, by election of the people.

SEC. 2. The Congress shall prescribe and regulate the qualifications of voters in the District of Columbia in any manner consistent with government republican in form.

SEC. 3. When the choice of President shall devolve upon the House of Representatives, the Members of the House chosen from the District of Columbia shall vote and be counted as a State, but in no case shall the vote of a Member chosen to either House of Congress from said District be cast or counted when a choice of President or of Vice-President will thereby be prevented; and in case there is a tie in the vote for President in the delegation from the District of Columbia in the choice of President by the House of Representatives voting by States, and there is no choice without the vote of the delegation from the District, the Senator from the District shall vote as a member of the delegation to the end that a President may be chosen.

SEC. 4. The Congress may provide for the holding of a new election by the people of the United States forthwith whenever for any cause a President shall not be chosen or inaugurated before the expiration of the existing term of the President and for the temporary exercise of the executive power (during a period not exceeding ninety days) until a President is inaugurated whose term of office shall end four years from the expiration of the preceding full term.

SEC. 5. The Congress shall enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY W. BLAIR.

SUPPRESSION OF USURY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have, Mr. President, a valuable paper prepared by the chairman of the committee on social betterment of the President's homes commission on the suppression of usury in the District of Columbia, a matter that is engaging the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia, two separate bills being before the committee. I ask unanimous consent that this paper may be printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture transmitting a statement showing the travel from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia performed by officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year 1908, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which was agreed to.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 19, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian Monday, January 4, 1909.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC ISLANDS AND PORTO RICO.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. FORAKER, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be held by it during the second session of the Sixtieth Congress, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 7803) granting an increase of pension to Alanza A. Bailey, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOPKINS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 7804) for permanent consular improvement and commercial enlargement, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 7805) granting an increase of pension to William A. Ferrel, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ANKENY introduced a bill (S. 7806) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William McCutcheon, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7807) granting an increase of pension to Almeran A. Stillman, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON (for Mr. CLAPP) introduced a bill (S. 7808) to provide for the distribution of the reports of the United States circuit courts of appeals and of the United States circuit and district courts to certain officers of the United States, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 7809) granting an increase of pension to Peter Jones, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND introduced a bill (S. 7810) granting an honorable discharge to Wilbur I. Rowland, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7811) granting an increase of pension to Eugene S. Austin, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. du PONT introduced a bill (S. 7812) granting a pension to Catharine Doherty, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT introduced a bill (S. 7813) granting an increase of pension to Eleanor P. Bigler, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FLINT introduced a bill (S. 7814) to divide the southern judicial district of California into three divisions and to provide for the holding of terms of court at the cities of Fresno, Los Angeles, and San Diego, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7815) granting an increase of pension to Jacob C. Ramsey (with the accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7816) granting an increase of pension to Miles Goforth (with the accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7817) granting an increase of pension to Gaston H. Wilder; and

A bill (S. 7818) granting an increase of pension to John Monnett.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a bill (S. 7819) for the relief of the heirs of Nancy Barfield, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GARY introduced a bill (S. 7820) granting an increase of pension to Julia F. Darling, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRAZIER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 7821) for the relief of Joseph H. Thompson;

A bill (S. 7822) for the relief of E. B. McHenry (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 7823) for the relief of Thomas J. Hunt, administrator of the estate of Samuel Mosby, deceased (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 7824) for the relief of the estate of Preston Gann, deceased (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 7825) for the relief of the estate of Hampton Hudgens, deceased (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 7826) for the relief of the trustees of the University Street Primitive Baptist Church, of Nashville, Tenn.;

A bill (S. 7827) for the relief of the estate of Alexander O. Smith, deceased (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 7828) for the relief of the heirs of Simeon Graves, deceased (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. CUMMINS introduced a bill (S. 7829) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburg, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road," approved April 26, 1882, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7830) granting an increase of pension to Leonard J. Harvey, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 7831) granting an increase of pension to Martin Long, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TAYLOR introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7832) granting a pension to Michael Grace;

A bill (S. 7833) granting a pension to John Sexton; and

A bill (S. 7834) granting an increase of pension to Rodham Miller.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7835) granting an increase of pension to George Whitson;

A bill (S. 7836) granting an increase of pension to Roswell Thomas;

A bill (S. 7837) granting an increase of pension to Edward E. Houstain; and

A bill (S. 7838) granting an increase of pension to Ensign L. Calkins.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 7839) granting an increase of pension to John E. Rogers, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARNER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7840) granting an increase of pension to John Robertson;

A bill (S. 7841) granting an increase of pension to Ida L. du d'Huy;

A bill (S. 7842) granting an increase of pension to Bedford B. Hulet;

A bill (S. 7843) granting an increase of pension to John Whelan;

A bill (S. 7844) granting an increase of pension to Jennie E. Lowell;

A bill (S. 7845) granting an increase of pension to William West;

A bill (S. 7846) granting an increase of pension to Caleb Stone;

A bill (S. 7847) granting a pension to Henry Frederick Gieseke;

A bill (S. 7848) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Shields;

A bill (S. 7849) granting a pension to Charles Herold;

A bill (S. 7850) granting a pension to George W. Wells;

A bill (S. 7851) granting an increase of pension to John Mulcare; and

A bill (S. 7852) granting a pension to Samuel Robinson.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 7853) granting a pension to Margaret Barry, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DILLINGHAM introduced a bill (S. 7854) granting an increase of pension to John H. Albee, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced a bill (S. 7855) to correct the military record of Wilson Rice, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 7856) granting an increase of pension to Walter H. Morrison, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7857) granting a pension to Augusta Burchard, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 7858) granting an increase of pension to Eliza C. Clark, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 7859) for the relief of Parsey O. Burrough, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 7860) granting an increase of pension to John E. Phelps, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7861) for the relief of B. D. Crocker, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7862) to extend the privileges of the first section of the act of June 10, 1880, to the subports of Blaine and Sumas, in the State of Washington, and allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the compensation of the deputy collectors at Seattle and Tacoma, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. du PONT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 for salary of the United States attorney for the district of Delaware, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. LONG submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be held by it during the second session of the Sixtieth Congress, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Mr. CARTER. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Post-Office Department 10,000 copies of the annual report of the Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KEAN. I understand the Senator from Montana has inquired as to the cost of the publication, and it is under $500. I make no objection to the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PANAMA CANAL PURCHASE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In view of the constant reiteration of the assertion that there was some corrupt action by or on behalf of the United States Government in connection with the acquisition of the title of the French Company to the Panama Canal, and of the repetition of the story that a syndicate of American citizens owned either one or both of the Panama companies, I deem it wise to submit to the Congress all the information I have on the subject. These stories were first brought to my attention as published in a paper in Indianapolis, called "The News," edited by Mr. Delavan Smith. The stories were scurrilous and libelous in character and false in every essential particular. Mr. Smith shelters himself behind the excuse that he merely accepted the statements which had appeared in a paper published in New York, "The World," owned by Mr. Joseph Pulitzer. It is idle to say that the known character of Mr. Pulitzer and his newspaper are such that the statements in that paper will be believed by nobody; unfortunately, thousands of persons are ill informed in this respect and believe the statements they see in print, even though they appear in a newspaper published by Mr. Pulitzer. A Member of the Congress has actually introduced a resolution in reference to these charges. I therefore lay all the facts before you.

The story repeated at various times by the World and by its followers in the newspaper press is substantially as follows: That there was corruption by or on behalf of the Government of the United States in the transaction by which the Panama Canal property was acquired from its French owners; that there were improper dealings of some kind between agents of the Government and outside persons, representing or acting for an American syndicate, who had gotten possession of the French Company; that among these persons, who it was alleged made "huge profits," were Mr. Charles P. Taft, a brother of Mr. William H. Taft, then candidate for the Presidency, and Mr. Douglas Robinson, my brother-in-law; that Mr. Cromwell, the counsel for the Panama Canal Company in the negotiations, was in some way implicated with the United States governmental authorities in these improper transactions; that the Government has concealed the true facts, and has destroyed, or procured or agreed to the destruction of, certain documents; that Mr. W. H. Taft was Secretary of War at the time that by an agreement between the United States Government and the beneficiaries of the deal all traces thereof were "wiped out" by transferring all the archives and "secrets" to the American Government, just before the holding of the convention last June at which Mr. Taft was nominated.

These statements sometimes appeared in the editorials, sometimes in the news columns, sometimes in the shape of contributions from individuals either unknown or known to be of bad character. They are false in every particular from beginning to end. The wickedness of the slanders is only surpassed by their fatuity. So utterly baseless are the stories that apparently they represent in part merely material collected for campaign purposes and in part stories originally concocted with a view of possible blackmail. The inventor of the story about Mr. Charles P. Taft, for instance, evidently supposed that at some period of the Panama purchase Mr. W. H. Taft was Secretary of War, whereas in reality Mr. W. H. Taft never became Secretary of War until long after the whole transaction in question had been closed. The inventor of the story about Mr. Douglas Robinson had not taken the trouble to find out the fact that Mr. Robinson had not had the slightest connection, directly or indirectly, of any kind or sort with any phase of the Panama transaction from beginning to end. The men who attacked Mr. Root in the matter had not taken the trouble to read the public documents which would have informed them that Mr. Root had nothing to do with the purchase, which was entirely arranged through the Department of Justice under the then Attorney-General, Mr. KNOX.

Now, these stories as a matter of fact need no investigation whatever. No shadow of proof has been, or can be, produced in behalf of any of them. They consist simply of a string of infamous libels. In form, they are in part libels upon individuals, upon Mr. Taft and Mr. Robinson for instance. But they are in fact wholly, and in form partly, a libel upon the United States Government. I do not believe we should concern ourselves with the particular individuals who wrote the lying and libelous editorials, articles from correspondents, or articles in the news columns. The real offender is Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, editor and proprietor of the World. While the criminal offense of which Mr. Pulitzer has been guilty is in form a libel upon individuals, the great injury done is in blackening the good name of the American people. It should not be left to a private citizen to sue Mr. Pulitzer for libel. He should be prosecuted for libel by the governmental authorities. In point of encouragement of iniquity, in point of infamy, of wrongdoing, there is nothing to choose between a public servant who betrays his trust, a public servant who is guilty of blackmail, or theft, or financial dishonesty of any kind, and a man guilty as Mr. Joseph Pulitzer has been guilty in this instance. It is therefore a high national duty to bring to justice this vilifier of the American people, this man who wantonly and wickedly and without one shadow of justification seeks to blacken the character of reputable private citizens and to convict the Government of his own country in the eyes of the civilized world of wrongdoing of the basest and foulest kind, when he has not one shadow of justification of any sort or description for the charge he has made. The Attorney-General has under consideration the form in which the proceedings against Mr. Pulitzer shall be brought.

Meanwhile I submit to you all the accompanying papers, so that you may have before you complete information on the subject. I call your attention to my communications in my messages to the Congress of January 20, 1902, March 11, 1903, December 7, 1903, January 4, 1904, and December 17, 1906, in which I set forth at length the history of various phases of the whole transaction. I recall your attention to the report and opinion of the Attorney-General rendered to me, dated October 25, 1902, with the accompanying documents and exhibits. I call your attention to the correspondence of the officers and agents of the Panama Canal Company with the President and other officers of the United States printed in Senate Document No. 34, December 10, 1902; also to the copy of the official proceedings of the New Panama Canal Company at Paris on the 30th of December, 1903, together with a report of the Council of Administration of that company, printed in Senate Document No. 133, January 28, 1904; and to the copy of the general conveyance by the New Panama Canal Company to the United States, also copies of certain telegrams from the president of the company making an offer of sale, and Attorney-General Knox's cablegram in response printed in Senate Document No. 285, March 23, 1906. I call your attention furthermore to the exhaustive testimony recorded in public document (Sen. Doc. No. 411, 59th Cong., 2nd sess.), which contains the searching investigation into the whole transaction made by the Congress for its information and fully considered by the Congress before it took action.

In the act approved June 28, 1902, "To provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," the Congress provided as follows:

> That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and on behalf of the United States, at a cost not exceeding forty millions of dollars, the rights, privileges, franchises, concessions, grants of land, right of way, unfinished work, plants, and other property, real, personal, and mixed, of every name and nature, owned by the New Panama Canal Company, of France, on the Isthmus of Panama, and all its maps, plans, drawings, records on the Isthmus of Panama, and in Paris, including all the capital stock, not less, however, than sixty-eight thousand eight hundred and sixty-three shares of the Panama Railroad Company, owned by or held for the use of said Canal Company, provided a satisfactory title to all of said property can be obtained.

It thereupon became the duty of the President, in execution of this statute, to purchase the property specified from the New Panama Canal Company, of France, provided he could obtain a satisfactory title. The Department of Justice was instructed to examine the title, and after such an examination Attorney-General Knox reported that a satisfactory title could be obtained. Payment of the purchase price was thereupon made to the New Panama Canal Company, in accordance with the act of the Congress, and the property was conveyed by that company to the United States. It was no concern of the President, or of any officer of the Executive Department, to inquire as to what the New Panama Canal Company did with the money which it received. As a matter of fact, the New Panama Canal Company did distribute the money between its shareholders and the shareholders of the preceding Panama Canal Company in accordance with the decree of a French court, and the records of the French court show who were the shareholders who received the money; but that is no concern of ours.

I call your attention to the accompanying statement as to the attempt to form an American company in 1899 for the purpose of taking over the property of the French company. This attempt proved abortive. There was no concealment in its effort to put through this plan, its complete failure and abandonment being known to everyone.

The important points set forth in the accompanying papers, and in the papers to which I have referred you, are as follows:

The investigation of the history, physical condition, and existing value of the enterprise by the Congress, resulting in the enactment of the law of 1902 authorizing the President to acquire the property for the sum of $40,000,000 upon securing a satisfactory title and thereupon to undertake the work of construction; the failure of the Americanization of the enterprise in 1899; the transmission by me to the Congress from time to time of full information and advice as to the relations of this Government to transit across the Isthmus and under the treaties, as to the negotiations and final acquisition of the title, and later as to the progress and condition of the work of construction; the previous authorization of the sale to the United States by the stockholders of the new company and their subsequent ratification; the examination and approval of the title by Mr. Knox; the arrangements for payment through J. P. Morgan & Company as the fiscal agents of this Government, and the payment accordingly at the Bank of France upon proper official receipts to the liquidators acting under the decree of the French court, the French governmental body having jurisdiction in the matter; and, finally, the subsequent apportionment and distribution of the fund to the creditors and stockholders of the two companies under that decree.

The Panama Canal transaction was actually carried through not by either the then Secretary of State, Mr. John Hay, or the then Secretary of War, Mr. Elihu Root, both of whom, however, were cognizant of all the essential features; but by the then Attorney-General, Mr. P. C. Knox, at present Senator from Pennsylvania. I directed or approved every action, and am responsible for all that was done in carrying out the will of the Congress; and the provisions of the law, enacted by Congress after exhaustive examination and discussion, were scrupulously complied with by the Executive. While the transaction was pending I saw Mr. Cromwell but two or three times, and my communications with him were limited to the exchange of purely formal courtesies. Secretary Hay occasionally saw him, in the same manner; I doubt whether Mr. Root held any conversation with him. The Attorney-General saw him frequently, as he was counsel for the Panama Company; their communications were official, as representing the two sides. I enclose copies of my correspondence with Mr. Wm. Dudley Foulke, who first brought these scandalous stories to my attention, and with Senator Knox and Mr. Cromwell, to whom I wrote in response to the request of a gentleman who wished to know about the stockholders in the Panama Canal Company.

The title to the Panama Canal properties was vested in the New Panama Canal Company of France, which was the legal owner thereof, and the old or so-called De Lesseps Company had a large equity therein. The title was not in a New Jersey company nor in any other American company, nor did this Government have any dealings with any American company throughout the affair.

The exact legal status, to the most minute detail, appears in the exhaustive opinion of Attorney-General Knox approving the title to be given to the United States, which clearly establishes that the only party dealt with was the New Panama Canal Company of France (with the concurrence of the liquidator of the old company) and not any American corporation or syndicate.

The action of the United States Government was, of course, wholly uninfluenced by, and had nothing whatever to do with, any question as to who were, or who had been, the security-holders of either the new or the old company. Who such security-holders were was not our affair. If, as a matter of fact, the Canal companies, either or both, had been owned by American citizens or by citizens of any other nationality, it would not have altered in the slightest degree the action taken by this Government. Our concern was to get the canal property which was owned by the French Company, and to see that the title was clear. Our transactions were carried on openly, and were published in detail, and we dealt solely (so far as the interests of the old Panama Company were concerned) with the liquidator appointed by the proper French governmental body, the Civil Tribunal of the Seine, and in accordance with the decree of this same tribunal, with the New Panama Canal Company, which also went into liquidation upon the sale to the United States. All our transactions were carried on openly, and were published in detail.

The distribution of our payment of $40,000,000 follows the award of arbitrators chosen by the new company and the liquidator, authorized by the decree of this same Civil Tribunal of the Seine, and providing for a determination of the proportionate division between the new and old companies. We paid the money through the New York banking house of Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Company, acting as fiscal agents of this Government, into the Bank of France in Paris. The receipts and accounts of our Treasury Department show the payment of the money into the Bank of France and account for the money being paid over to the liquidator appointed by the Civil Tribunal of the Seine and to the New Panama Canal Company of France, the proportion of the forty million dollars being 128,600,000 francs to the liquidator of the old company and 77,400,000 francs to the New Panama Canal Company of France in liquidation. In these payments we followed to the letter the decree of the governmental tribunal of France which had the authority to make such a decree, the Civil Tribunal of the Seine. We had neither desire nor authority to go behind this decree of this proper governmental body, as all the conflicting rights of the security-holders of both companies had been settled by the decree of said court by ratification of the arbitration which resulted in that division.

I wish to make as clear as possible, and as emphatic as possible, the statement that we did not have anything to do with the distribution of a dollar of the $40,000,000 we paid as regards any stockholder or bondholder of the French Companies, save that we followed out the award of the arbitrators appointed in accordance with the decree of the French court which had dealt with the subject in awarding a certain proportion to the old company and a certain proportion to the new company. Any question concerning the stockholders, bondholders, or other beneficiaries of the proceeds of sale was purely a question for the Civil Tribunal of the Seine, the French governmental body, with which this Nation had nothing whatever to do.

Under these circumstances there was not the slightest need for Mr. Cromwell to give any information on the subject of the companies for which he had been counsel. This Government has no concern with Mr. Cromwell's relation to these companies, or either of them, or with the amount of his professional compensation; it was not the affair of this Government to inquire who were the security holders of the companies. Nevertheless, Mr. Cromwell, of his own accord, has submitted to me, together with a copy of his statement published on the 11th instant, and which I transmit herewith, a full list of the stockholders of the New Panama Canal Company of France on January 15, 1900 (numbering over 6,000), and a list of all stockholders who were present at a special meeting of the company held February 28, 1902, immediately after the cable offer of the company was made to the United States (January 9–11, 1902), to accept the appraisement of $40,000,000 made by the Isthmian Canal Commission, and to sell for said sum the Panama Canal, concessions, and other property, and the shares of the Panama Railroad Company. He has also furnished me a certified copy of the final report of the liquidator of the old company, which was filed on June 25 last and formerly approved by the Civil Tribunal of the Seine, together with a summary account prepared and signed by said liquidator as late as the 24th ultimo. I also transmit a translation of the two resolutions, with the vote upon them, adopted at the meeting of the stockholders of the new company held on April 23, 1904, for the purpose of finally ratifying the sale.

All these documents I herewith transmit as a part of this message. It appears from them that the creditors of the old company number 226,296 parties who have received dividends out of the funds in the hands of the liquidator, who, in his letter, states that in this present month of December the second and last distribution to the creditors will be begun, and that the average dividend heretofore paid to each individual was 782 francs, or $156. No payment whatever was or will be made upon the stock of the old company, as it was worthless from the day De Lesseps failed, and this cuts out from consideration all misleading statements regarding a possible purchase by anybody of the stock of the old Panama Canal Company. It has not received, and will not receive, a penny. Even upon the bonded indebtedness the dividend, I am thus informed, will amount, in the aggregate, to only about ten per centum. It likewise plainly appears that this distribution by the liquidator of the old company has been openly conducted at his office in Paris, No. 50 Rue Etienne Marcel, where all the receipts, accounts, and records of his payments are on file.

The New Panama Canal Company of France is in liquidation. As the accompanying papers set forth, this liquidated company received as its proportion of the $40,000,000 the sum of 77,400,000 francs, and this amount was distributed by the liquidation in three payments through four leading banks of Paris, covering a period of the last four years, and to shareholders numbering about 6,000. Every step of the transaction was not only taken publicly, but was, contemporaneously therewith, advertised in the legal and financial papers of France, and the banks making the payments took proper receipts from all the parties to whom payments were made, as is customary in such cases.

The capital of the New Panama Canal Company of France was 65,000,000 francs, and the distribution thus made amounted to about 130 francs on each share of 100 francs. No dividends were paid during the ten years of the company's existence. It therefore resulted that the shareholders only recovered their original investment with annual interest of about three per cent.

The accounts and records of this liquidation, which was concluded in June last, are on deposit with the Crédit Lyonnaisé of Paris as a proper custodian of the same, appointed upon such liquidation. Recently a request was made by a private individual to inspect the records of these payments, but answer was made by the custodians that they saw no proper reason for granting such request by a stranger, and, inasmuch as there is not the slightest ground for suspicion of any bad faith in the transaction, it hardly seems worth while to make the request; but if the Congress desires, I have no doubt that on the request of our Ambassador in Paris, the lists of individuals will be shown him.

As a matter of fact, there is nothing whatever, in which this Government is interested, to investigate about this transaction. So far as this Government is concerned, every step of the slightest importance has been made public by its Executive, and every step taken in France has there been made public by the proper officials.

The Congress took the action it did take after the most minute and exhaustive examination and discussion, and the Executive carried out the direction of the Congress to the letter. Every act of this Government, every act for which this Government had the slightest responsibility, was in pursuance of the act of the Congress here, and following out the decree of the Civil Tribunal of the Seine in France.

Furthermore, through the entirely voluntary act of Mr. Cromwell, I am now able to present to you full information as to these actions in France with which this Government did not have any concern, and which are set forth in the accompanying papers.

It may be well to recall that the New Panama Canal Company of France did not itself propose or fix the figure $40,000,000 as the valuation of the canal and railroad properties. That sum was first fixed by our Isthmian Canal Commission in its reports to the Congress after two years of investigation and personal inspection of all the properties and work already done, whereby the properties and the work done were in detail appraised at that sum as their value to the United States. The French company steadily refused for over two years to make any offer whatever in answer to the many written requests of the Isthmian Canal Commission; and when its president did approach the question of price, it was on the basis of $109,000,000. Later, under conditions not necessary now to rehearse, the company, by cable, accepted the appraisement of $40,000,000 made by our Commission. This Government, therefore, acquired all the properties and concessions, both of canal and railroad, at its own valuation and price, the Congress approving the price, and authorizing the expenditure of the money, after the most exhaustive examination and discussion.

I transmit herewith lists of the documents in the possession of the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and the Department of War, so that, if the Congress sees fit, it may direct that they be printed. They are, and always have been, open to the examination of any Member of the Congress. There is no object in printing them, but there is also no objection to printing them, save that it is a useless expense.

I also transmit a list of the documents furnished by Mr. Cromwell.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 15, 1908.

APPENDIX.

HOT SPRINGS, VA., November 29, 1908.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: The Indianapolis News, not only during the campaign but even after its close, has been repeatedly and continually making serious charges against your administration as well as against Mr. Taft in connection with the Panama purchase, as, for example, the following:

"THE PANAMA MATTER.

"The campaign is over and the people will have to vote to-morrow without any official knowledge concerning the Panama Canal deal. It has been charged that the United States bought from American citizens for $40,000,000 property that cost those citizens only $12,000,000. Mr. Taft was Secretary of War at the time the negotiation was closed. There is no doubt that the Government paid $40,000,000 for the property. But who got the money? We are not to know. The administration and Mr. Taft do not think it right that the people should know. The President's brother-in-law is involved in the scandal, but he has nothing to say. The candidate's brother has been charged with being a member of the syndicate. He has, it is true, denied it. But he refuses to appeal to the evidence, all of which is in the possession of the administration and wholly inaccessible to outsiders. For weeks this scandal has been before the people. The records are in Washington, and they are public records. But the people are not to see them—till after election, if then."

Even after the election this has been continued, it being said that Mr. Taft's "weakness" in Indiana (where he ran many thousands ahead of any other Republican candidate) was due in great measure to this alleged scandal, and as late as November 18th another editorial appears which I inclose. What are the facts, may I ask, in regard to these charges? Where are these "inaccessible" records? When did they come into possession of the Government, and what do they contain? If the statements of the News are true, our people ought to know it; if they are not true, they ought to have some just means of estimating what credit should be given in other matters to a journal which thus disseminates falsehoods.

Yours, faithfully, WM. DUDLEY FOULKE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 1, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. FOULKE: I have received your letter of the 29th ultimo and have read it in connection with your previous letters enclosing quotations from the Indianapolis News, a paper edited by Mr. Delavan Smith. As Mr. Smith certainly knew that all the statements he made were false, both as to this Panama matter and as to the other matters of which you enclosed me clippings, and inasmuch, therefore, as the exposure of the falsity will not affect his future statements, I am not very clear what good will result from such exposure. But inasmuch as you evidently earnestly desire some answer to be made, and inasmuch as you say that some reputable people appear to believe the falsehoods of the News and Mr. Smith, and inasmuch as you seem to think that his falsehoods as regards the Panama matter are the most prominent, I will answer them.

The News states in one of its issues that probably some of the documents dealing with the matter have been destroyed. This is false. Not one has been destroyed. It states that the last documents were sent over in June of this year, the object of this particular falsehood being, apparently, to connect the matter in some way with the nomination of Mr. Taft. As a matter of fact, the last papers that we have received of any kind were sent over to us in May, 1904, and they have been accessible to every human being who cared to look at them ever since, and are accessible now. Any reputable man within or without the Congress, Republican or Democrat, has now and always has had the opportunity to examine any of these documents. You quote the News as stating that "the people have no official knowledge concerning the Panama Canal deal." The fact is that the people have had the most minute official knowledge; that every important step in the transaction and every important document have been made public in communications to the Congress and through the daily press, and the whole matter has been threshed over in all its details again and again and again.

The News gives currency to the charge that "the United States bought from American citizens for $40,000,000 property that cost these citizens only $12,000,000." The statement is false. The United States did not pay a cent of the $40,000,000 to any American citizen. The News says that there is no doubt that the Government paid $40,000,000 for the property, and continues—"But who got the money? We are not to know. The administration and Mr. Taft do not think it right that the people should know." Really this is so ludicrous as to make one feel a little impatient at having to answer it. The fact has been officially published again and again that the Government paid $40,000,000, and that it paid this $40,000,000 direct to the French Government, getting the receipt of the liquidator appointed by the French Government to receive the same. The United States Government has not the slightest knowledge as to the particular individuals among whom the French Government distributed the sum. This was the business of the French Government. The mere supposition that any American received from the French Government a "rake off" is too absurd to be discussed. It is an abominable falsehood, and it is a slander not against the American Government, but against the French Government.

The News continues, saying that "The President's brother-in-law is involved in the scandal, but he has nothing to say." The President's brother-in-law was involved in no scandal. Mr. Delavan Smith and the other people who repeated this falsehood lied about the President's brother-in-law; but why the fact that Mr. Smith lied should be held to involve Mr. Robinson in a "scandal" is difficult to understand. The scandal affects no one but Mr. Smith; and his conduct has been not merely scandalous but infamous. Mr. Robinson had not the slightest connection of any kind, sort, or description at any time or under any circumstances with the Panama matter. Neither did Mr. Charles Taft. The News says that Mr. Taft was a member of the "syndicate." So far as I know there was no syndicate; there certainly was no syndicate in the United States that to my knowledge had any dealings with the Government, directly or indirectly; and inasmuch as there was no syndicate, Mr. Taft naturally could not belong to it. The News demands that Mr. Taft "appeal to the evidence," by which it means what it calls "the records"—that is, the mass of papers, which are stored in the War Department, save such as, because of their technical character and their usefulness in the current work of the canal, it has been found advisable to send to the Isthmus.

All of these documents that possessed any importance as illustrating any feature of the transaction have already been made public. There remains a great mass of documents of little or no importance which the administration is entirely willing to have published, but which because of their mass and pointlessness, nobody has ever cared to publish. Any reputable man can have full access to these documents. If you or Mr. Swift, or Mr. Booth Tarkington, or Mr. George Ade—in short, if any reputable man—will come on here, he shall have free access to the documents and can look over everything for himself. Congress can have them all printed if it wishes; but no Congressman has ever so far intimated any desire that this should be done; I suppose because to print such a mass of documents would be a great expense, and, moreover, an entirely useless expense, unless, which is not the case, there was some object in printing them.

Now, my dear Mr. Foulke, I have answered in detail your questions and the statements of the News. You are quite welcome to print my answer; but I must frankly add that I don't think any good will come from doing so. Mr. Delavan Smith is a conspicuous offender against the laws of honesty and truthfulness; but he does not stand alone. He occupies, for instance, the same evil eminence with such men as Mr. Laffan of the New York Sun, editorials of whose paper you or others have from time to time called to my attention, just as you have called to my attention these editorials of the Indianapolis News. I never see an editorial in any one of these or similar papers unless for some reason it is sent to me by you or by some one else; and of the editorials thus sent me there is hardly one which does not contain some willful and deliberate perversion of the truth. For example, I have just made public the following statement concerning a tissue of utterly false statements which appeared in Mr. Laffan's paper, the Sun:

"As the New York Sun story entitled 'Roosevelt and Prairie Oil' has seemed to deceive a number of people, the following statement is made public about it:

"As soon as the story was brought to President Roosevelt's attention he not only called for reports concerning the statements from the Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior, but also communicated with ex-Secretary Hitchcock so as to be sure that the President's recollection was not at fault. The story is false in every particular, from beginning to end. Not only is there no such report in the Department of Justice and never has been, but no such report was ever made. In granting the franchise of the Prairie Oil and Gas Company the President simply approved the recommendation of Secretary Hitchcock submitted to him precisely as all other recommendations were submitted. Moreover, in every case referring to the granting of franchises or the adoption of regulations as regards oil and gas franchises in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, the President approved the recommendation of Secretary Hitchcock, with the exception of one small and unimportant grant to a Delaware Indian to whom the Delaware Indians, in recognition of eight years of service to the tribe, had voted in council a fee of $50,000, which he had declined to accept, and who was given twice the usual amount of land. The statement about the alleged promise to a western Senator is as ridiculous a falsehood as the rest of the story."

The fact is that these particular newspapers, habitually and continually and as a matter of business, practice every form of mendacity known to man, from the suppression of the truth and the suggestion of the false, to the lie direct. Those who write or procure others to write these articles are engaged in the practice of mendacity for hire; and surely there can be no lower form of gaining a livelihood. Whether they are paid by outsiders to say what is false, or whether their profit comes from the circulation of the falsehoods, is a matter of small consequence. It is utterly impossible to attempt to answer all of their falsehoods. When any given falsehood is exposed, they simply repeat it and circulate another. If they were mistaken in the facts, if they possessed in their make-up any shred of honesty, it would be worth while to set them right. But there is no question at all as to any "mistake" or "misunderstanding" on their part. They state what they either know to be untrue, or could by the slightest inquiry find out to be untrue.

I doubt if they themselves remember their own falsehoods for more than a very brief period; and I doubt still more whether anybody else does. Under these circumstances it seems hardly worth while to single out for special mention one or two given falsehoods or one particular paper, the moral standard of which is as low as, but no lower than, that of certain other papers. Of course now and then I am willing to denounce a given falsehood, as, for instance, as regards this case of the Indianapolis News, or the case I have quoted of the New York Sun, simply because it appears that some worthy people are misled or puzzled by the direct shamelessness of the untruth. But ordinarily I do not and can not pay heed to these falsehoods. If I did I would not be able to do my work. My plan has been to go ahead, to do the work, and to let these people and those like them yell; and then to trust with abiding confidence to the good sense of the American people in the assured conviction that the yells will die out, the falsehoods be forgotten, and the work remain.

Therefore, as far as I am concerned, I would rather make no answer whatever in this case. But I have much confidence in your judgment, and if you feel that these men ought to be exposed, why you are welcome to publish this letter. There is no higher and more honorable calling than that of the men connected with an upright, fearless, and truthful newspaper; no calling in which a man can render greater service to his fellow-countrymen. The best and ablest editors and writers in the daily press render a service to the community which can hardly be paralleled by the service rendered by the best and ablest of the men in public life, or of the men in business. But the converse of this proposition is also true. The most corrupt financiers, the most corrupt politicians, are no greater menace to this country than the newspaper men of the type I have above discussed. Whether they belong to the yellow press or to the purchased press, whatever may be the stimulating cause of their slanderous mendacity, and whatever the cloak it may wear, matters but little. In any event they represent one of the potent forces for evil in the community.

Yours, very truly,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. WILLIAM DUDLEY FOULKE,
Richmond, Ind.

DECEMBER 8, 1908.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Mr. * * * is trying to look into that Panama Canal transaction, and he has asked me for information that I am not able to furnish. I do not know whether it can be furnished at all, but if it can be I suppose you would know more about it than anyone else. He wants to get at the stock books of the Panama Canal companies, old and new, if possible, to find out the votes by which the stockholders agreed to the various transactions with the United States Government. Did this Government obtain those stock books, or any records which would show who the stockholders were? If not, have you any idea where we could obtain any information about such records?

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. P. C. KNOX,
United States Senate.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON RULES,
December 8.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: This Government did not get the stock books of either the old or new Panama Canal company. We did not buy the corporations or their stocks; we only bought the property. We had no dealings with the old company at all. That company and the new company adjusted their equities in the French courts. All I cared for was to see that they did adjust them in such a way as to protect this Government. In the absence of any suggestion of irregularity—and there was no such suggestion—it was a matter of indifference to the United States who owned the stock of the new company. The only question was, Did we want the property at the price? Congress decided that we did, and all you had to do was to determine if you could get a good title to it and then go ahead and make the purchase. If there was any question as to our desire for the property at the price depending upon the personnel of the stockholders, that was one for the Congress, which decided that we would take it. You executed the law directing the purchase, and that is all there is to it so far as you are concerned.

My recollection is that the final ratification of the sale was almost unanimous by the stockholders of the new company; not more than four or five small dissenting votes.

Sincerely, yours,

P. C. KNOX.

DECEMBER 8, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. CROMWELL: A friend of mine has asked me for certain facts about the Panama Canal transaction, as to which I should be obliged for any information you can give me.

Is there any way of getting at the stock books of the Panama Canal Companies, old and new, or any official record of the votes of the stockholders on the different proposals made to them for entering into agreement with the United States for the sale of their rights in Panama?

Did the United States Government ever get possession of any of these data? If not, can you tell me where they can be obtained, if in private possession here in America, or where they can be looked up in France?

With regards, sincerely yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WILLIAM NELSON CROMWELL, Esq.,
49 Wall Street, New York.

(Mr. Cromwell, in reply, sent a copy of the following statement.)

Mr. William Nelson Cromwell, at his office, to-day authorized the following statement:

"My attention has been called to a statement issued by the editor of the Indianapolis News in which he attempts to reply to the charge made by President Roosevelt that certain statements made in the Indianapolis News, both before and since the recent election and relating to the purchase of the Panama Canal by the United States, were false and untrue."

The President said:

"The News gives currency to the charge that 'the United States bought from American citizens for $40,000,000 property that cost these citizens only $12,000,000.' The statement is false. The United States did not pay a cent of the $40,000,000 to any American citizen," etc.

From the statement issued in reply by the editor of the News, I quote the following:

"The only man who paid any attention to them (that is, the criticisms referred to, etc.) was Mr. Charles P. Taft, who did deny that he was in any way related to the affair. We had no word from the President or Mr. Taft. The other men, such as Cromwell and Morgan, who were believed to have full information in regard to the business, said nothing."

And he attempts to justify the publication of the false statements appearing in his paper by saying that they "were based largely on statements of the New York World, criticisms which were made over and over again during the campaign, were utterly ignored until to-day."

The reply of the editor of the News furnishes another proof of the justice of the President's characterizations, for in the very journal under whose sheets it now takes refuge, namely, in the New York World of October 3, 1908, appears an explicit and unqualified denial by me of the story referred to and in which I used the following language:

"We may expect during a heated political contest all kinds of stories which are not worthy of notice, but this one I wish to denounce in the strongest terms as a lying fabrication without a shadow of truth in it. Neither I nor anyone allied with me, either directly or indirectly, at any time or in any place in America or abroad, ever bought, sold, dealt in, or ever made a penny of profit out of any stocks, bonds, or other securities of either the old Panama Canal Company or the New Panama Canal Company, or ever received for the same a single dollar of the forty millions paid by the United States. I make this the most sweeping statement that language can convey.

"As everybody connected with the affair knows, I abstained from receiving the forty millions in my own hands at Washington or New York as the general counsel of the company, and myself arranged for the payment of the entire forty millions direct from the Treasury of the United States through the bankers of the Government into the Bank of France at Paris to the credit of the liquidators of the two companies. There it remained subject to the order of the liquidators until distributed by them to the hundreds of thousands of beneficiaries, and not one dollar of it ever came to me or anyone in anywise connected with me. Of course I do not refer to our regular compensation as counsel."

I wish to call attention to the fact that upon the first day of the hearings before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals of the Senate of the United States in February, 1906, I voluntarily made an explicit and detailed statement showing how the $40,000,000 was paid by the United States, through Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. as their agents, to the Bank of France at Paris for account of the New Panama Canal Company, and also explaining the subsequent payment of the full amount to the liquidators of the New Panama Canal Company and to the liquidator of the old Panama Canal Company, who in turn distributed the same to their respective stock and bond holders, numbering hundreds of thousands of persons.

I further submitted to the Senate committee, with the permission of the Panama Government, a detailed statement of the disposition by the Republic of Panama of the $10,000,000 paid by the United States to Panama in 1904, accounting for the payment of the whole amount and showing the investments and disposition by the Panama Government of every dollar.

Upon the same public inquiry, I further stated with reference to the proposed Americanization of the Panama Canal Company in the year 1899 and the proposed formation of a syndicate for that purpose in that year, that the proposed plan "never matured into anything. It was never consummated either by subscription or by assent, and it is obsolete and an impracticable thing—proved so to be. It has no life or force of being, did not exist and never has existed, and is as dead as a doornail. That was a fruitless suggestion of the company which came to naught and under which I acted as their counsel solely."

The testimony taken by the Senate committee is a public record and was available to the editors of the News and the World, and had either of them been as interested in publishing the truth as they were to create a political sensation, they doubtless would have taken the pains to have published the above facts which I quote.

I again denounce the statement wherever published or by whomsoever made that there was a syndicate formed by American citizens to purchase the Panama Canal and to sell it to the United States as absolutely and unqualifiedly false and untrue. The Americanization plan was an entirely different matter. It was a project proposed by the company to the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House and to President McKinley on February 27, 1899, and was formally authorized by the board of directors October 10, 1899, subject to the necessary approval of the stockholders. The initial steps were taken by me in October, November, and December, 1899, and a company formed for the purpose under the laws of New Jersey for carrying out the instructions of my client. While the certificate of incorporation of the Panama Canal Company of America was filed in New Jersey, no capital stock, except the nominal capital of $5,000 set forth in the certificate of incorporation was ever issued and nothing further was ever done by that company, as the records in the office of the secretary of state of New Jersey will show. The project adopted by the board of directors failed of approval by the stockholders in December, 1899; the board of directors in consequence resigned in a body, and the plan then and there forever ended. The period covered by this project was less than three months; not a dollar was paid in under it nor a transaction conducted by the New Jersey company for the reason stated. The plan was dead and abandoned over two years before the company finally yielded to the pressure of the American Government to sell at $40,000,000.

Now with regard to the distribution of the $40,000,000, it has been made to appear in newspaper comments that there was some mystery connected with the disposition of this money. There is no mystery and never has been. The fund in question paid into the Bank of France by the United States produced the net sum of 206,000,000 francs, the sum of 128,600,000 francs being placed to the credit of the liquidator of the old Panama Canal Company, and 77,400,000 francs to the credit of the New Panama Canal Company in liquidation, and by said bank paid over to said liquidators, respectively, pursuant to a decision of arbitration at Paris February 11, 1902, confirmed by the Civil Tribunal of the Seine.

To the Senate committee I stated that I did not know what distribution of the fund had been made and that I was in no way concerned or interested therein. That statement by me was true. I had no pecuniary interest in the canal, and it was none of my business, personally or professionally, who were the stockholders or bondholders of the company.

Since the recent publications I have made inquiries in Paris, and am informed that the distribution of these moneys is a matter of public record; that the amount received by the liquidator of the old Panama Canal Company has been distributed by him as an officer of the court to the holders of the obligations of the old company; that these persons appeared in person at the office of the liquidator to receipt for the moneys paid to them; that they numbered 226,296, the largest number of individuals probably ever appearing in person upon a single business affair, and that the average amount paid was $156. The complete and detailed record of these payments, together with the names and receipts of every person to whom payment was made and the amount of such payment, is in the hands of the liquidator at his offices at 50 Rue Etienne Marcel, Paris, which is in a prominent and frequented part of the city, near the Bourse, easily found by anyone desirous of doing so.

As to the fund paid to the New Panama Canal Company: That company at the time of the sale of its property to the United States went into liquidation, and I am likewise recently informed that the distribution of its assets amongst its shareholders was made through four leading banks of Paris, the Crédit Lyonnaisé, Société Générale, Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris, and Crédit Industriel et Commercial, in three separate payments (July 15, 1904, February 3, 1908, and June 15, 1908), covering a period of four years, and was completed in June, 1908. This liquidation took place at the regular offices of the company, 19 Rue Louis le Grand, Paris, readily found by anybody who honestly sought to find them. The facts concerning the liquidation are a matter of public report to the shareholders of the company (this company has no bond issues) and were the subject of official publications from time to time covering a period of four years in the official papers under direction of the courts. The amount so paid to the shareholders of the New Panama Canal Company, as I am informed by the liquidators, is approximately 129.78 francs on each share of the par value of 100 francs—that is, they received back only the capital originally invested with interest, less than 3 per cent per annum. I am informed by the liquidators that the shareholders to whom distribution was made numbered 6,796.

Neither I nor my law firm nor anyone connected with me ever owned, directly or indirectly, any share of stock in the New Panama Canal Company, nor any of the obligations or securities of the old Panama Canal Company, nor ever bought or sold any of the shares or securities of either one of said companies, nor were directly or indirectly interested in them.

I am also positive that not a man in public life in America, in or out of Congress, ever had the least pecuniary interest in the Panama Canal.

I do not know and never have known of any American citizen who has ever dealt in any of the shares of the New Panama Canal Company or the shares or bonds of the old company.

A further instance of the unwarranted attitude of the Indianapolis News and of other journals repeating the statements is furnished with respect to Mr. C. P. Taft and Mr. Douglas Robinson. In the same issue of the World (October 3, 1908) I said:

"The mention of the names of Mr. Taft and Mr. Douglas Robinson is another evidence that this is a fake story. No member of the Taft family or Mr. Douglas Robinson ever had the remotest connection with Panama Canal matters, directly or indirectly, and I never saw one of them on this subject before the United States acquired the canal. I never saw Mr. Douglas Robinson in my life. The names of Cæsar and Napoleon might as well have been used, for it could not be more impossible. All this except the dragging in of new names was threshed out before the United States Senate committee by the late Senator Morgan. Out of respect for the dead I refrain from comment upon that proceeding, but I feel warranted in saying that it was pursued with unparalleled energy and skill. It was, however, completely exploded and refuted by the facts in the case, and ended in complete discomfiture. There is not a word of truth in it, and I would not notice it at this time if it did not concern others."

The introduction of these gentlemen in the Panama affair is like the creation of a character in a work of fiction. They did not exist in the sense of having any relation to the canal matter. Neither of them ever had the least pecuniary interest in the business. It is a matter of public history that the President-elect never had any official connection with the canal until months after it had been acquired by this Government. He was in the Philippines as governor during all the years in question.

Equally perverted is the fact concerning the records and accounts of the two companies. They were not delivered to the United States because they were records of the companies' transactions with which the United States had no concern. But, as a matter of fact, the records and files of the liquidation of the old company are in the hands of the liquidators at 50 Rue Etienne Marcel, Paris, and those of the new company were, on the final payment in June, 1908, deposited with the Crédit Lyonnaisé, Boulevard des Italiens, to be preserved, in accordance with French custom, for a period of twenty years. That corporation has the custody of the records, as is well known to all parties in interest.

The whole story of Americans, or some American syndicate, buying up the Panama Canal securities at a low price, or at any price, and then turning them in upon liquidation at a profit is a fiction and a concoction. The money of the United States went to France and was distributed to the hundreds of thousands of foreign owners, none of whom, so far as I know, were Americans.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be printed and lie on the table; and unless the Senate otherwise orders, the accompanying documents will not be printed.

PEACE PALACE AT THE HAGUE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying dispatch from the American legation at The Hague, concerning the wish expressed by the Second Hague Conference that appropriate contribution be made by each Government toward the adornment of the peace palace at The Hague.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 15, 1908.

INDIAN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes, returned to the Senate in compliance with its request.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 12899. An act to provide for a disbursing officer for the Government Hospital for the Insane;

H. R. 15448. An act to amend section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901;

H. R. 16066. An act providing for the payment of an annual license tax by dealers in all forms of manufacture of tobacco in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 18345. An act to fix the price of gas in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 18513. An act to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act relative to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia," approved June 6, 1896;

H. R. 20111. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," relative to gambling, bucket shops, and bucketing; and

H. R. 20247. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906.

H. R. 11733. An act punishing conspiracy to injure or intimidate any person in the exercise of a right under the Constitution or laws of the United States, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I call up for consideration Senate bill 6484.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand the Chair to submit it to the Senate as a matter of unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Montana was equivalent to a request for unanimous consent. The question is, Will the Senate consent to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly I would interpose no objection to taking up the bill for the purpose the Senator from Montana has in mind, which I understand is now to address the Senate, but of course I would object to any order agreeing to a disposition of the bill or making it the regular order of business in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair finds, upon consulting the Calendar, that the bill is a special order for to-day.

Mr. BAILEY. I thought it was.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate. It was considered as in Committee of the Whole and read May 7, 1908. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the special order, made after the bill had been favorably reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, directed the attention of the country to this measure in a pronounced manner. I do not recall any instance of a bill on the Senate Calendar awaiting consideration in which the general public has manifested more intense interest.

National conventions of political parties, citizens' organizations, party candidates, the public press, and platform speakers have discussed and considered the bill and the principles it involves. In every State, congressional district, county, city, village, hamlet, and town in all this broad land the proposal to establish a system of postal-savings depositories has been debated with that intensity which is peculiar to the American people when called upon to form and express an opinion on any question involving a noteworthy departure from the routine of existing national policy. The wide range taken by the discussion is equaled by the almost universal approval accorded the measure.

The Republican party, in national convention assembled, maturely considered and sanctioned the system in these words:

We favor the establishment of a postal savings-bank system for the convenience of the people and the encouragement of thrift.

The national Democratic convention gave its primary allegiance to what is commonly known as "the guaranty of bank deposits," but accepted the postal-savings system as an alternate proposition in these words:

We favor a postal savings bank if the guaranteed bank can not be secured, and that it be constituted so as to keep the deposited money in the communities where it is established.

The Prohibition party and the Independence League each in national convention declared for postal savings banks.

These national political conventions were not only commissioned to nominate officers for the office of President and the office of Vice-President, but they were expected, in conformity with established usage, to give expression to the views of the electors they each represented on issues involving the public welfare and the administration of the National Government. State, congressional, and county conventions gave forceful expression not only to the general policies approved by the respective national conventions, but with only few exceptions the postal savings depository idea was emphatically indorsed.

In the course of the great campaign which followed the conventions the subject was discussed by the press and mentioned with approval by public speakers representing all the contending parties. If a discordant note was sounded anywhere, it was lost in the overwhelming volume of commendation. No subject was ever more squarely presented and more thoroughly and cordially approved. This statement I make as applicable to the general principle involved. Of course the task of agreeing on the details of a bill destined to carry out the public will was committed to the Congress, and in the orderly course of procedure in the Senate we are now called upon to discharge the duty imposed upon us with reference to this bill by the direct command of a large majority of the American people.

The President of the United States deemed the subject of postal savings banks of such general concern as to make mention of it in his annual message in this clear and decisive language:

I again renew my recommendation for postal savings banks for depositing savings with the security of the Government behind them. The object is to encourage thrift and economy in the wage-earner and person of moderate means. In fourteen States the deposits in savings banks, as reported to the Comptroller of the Currency, amount to $3,590,245,402, or 98.4 per cent of the entire deposits, while in the remaining thirty-two States there are only $70,308,543, or 1.6 per cent, showing conclusively that there are many localities in the United States where sufficient opportunity is not given to the people to deposit their savings. The result is that money is kept in hiding and unemployed. It is believed that in the aggregate vast sums of money would be brought into circulation through the instrumentality of the postal savings banks. While there are only 1,453 savings banks reporting to the Comptroller, there are more than 61,000 post-offices, 40,000 of which are money-order offices. Postal savings banks are now in operation in practically all the great civilized countries, with the exception of the United States.

The President-elect not only during the campaign, but since the election, announced his belief in the wisdom and beneficence of the postal savings system. After the election the National Grange, representing in a broad and liberal way the farmers of the United States, devoted much time in their national meeting in the city of Washington to the consideration of this question, and in a resolution referring directly to the bill before us employed this language:

A bill (S. 6484) providing for the establishment of postal savings banks has been reported to the Senate and is now on the Calendar of that body; and

Whereas the enactment of this bill would greatly benefit the farmers of the country, particularly in the more sparsely settled districts and sections remote from banking facilities, by providing a convenient method of deposit for their savings, with absolute security against loss: Therefore

Resolved, That we indorse Senate bill 6484 as a measure directly in the interest of the farmers, and call upon the members of the grange to write to their Senators and Representatives in Congress urging them to vote for this bill.

Labor organizations, benevolent associations, and other organizations of high respectability have taken occasion to express their faith in, and their approval of, the bill, and the great public press has given it generous support.

In this case it seems to be the clear duty of Congress to crystallize into law the expressed will of the people, and in doing so to take note of the friendly criticisms which have been offered for consideration and approval or rejection. It is a matter of common knowledge that since the November election certain individuals and associations—actuated to some extent, no doubt, by high and worthy motives, but to a much greater extent inspired by selfish regard for the dividend-paying qualities of existing concerns—instituted a campaign of so-called "education," with a view to inducing Congress to accept the responsibility of repudiating a measure which an overwhelming majority of the American people, after a full and free discussion and consideration, directed the Congress to place upon the statute books. We should not permit the signal fact to escape attention that this adverse propaganda was not directed to the public mind during the political campaign, but has been instituted only, as to time and circumstance, in such manner as to constitute an appeal to the Congress to reverse the judgment of the people. Under the established rules of judicial procedure the appellants in this case would be refused a hearing because of failure to present their case to the trial court, but in this forum, where formalities are largely dispensed with and technical rules are rarely invoked, it is incumbent upon us to patiently consider the arguments put forward by those who in silence have heretofore apparently acquiesced.

As I have intimated, criticisms advanced are of two classes: First comes the individual who favors the enactment of a law along the lines proposed, but takes exception to certain provisions of the pending bill; and, second, comes a class wholly and irreconcilably opposed to the establishment of any kind of a postal savings-bank system in this country. With the first of these two classes we at once enter into cordial relations on the basis of united purpose, not only to establish the system but to establish the best system which our common knowledge and experience can devise after full and free exchange of opinions and views. The critics who come forward to aid us in perfecting the measure by offering suggestions and objections dwell chiefly upon five features of the bill. They allege:

First. That the maximum amount allowed to the credit of any depositor, fixed by the bill at $1,000, is too large.

Second. That no person should be permitted to deposit as much as $200 in any one month, as provided in the bill.

Third. That inasmuch as we allow all persons over the age of 10 years to open accounts, no one should be permitted to open an account individually and also as a trustee in the manner provided by the bill.

Fourth. That the deposits should not be exempt from taxation.

Fifth. That the deposits should not be exempt from seizure under legal process.

In order to clear the atmosphere for a speedy adjustment of conflicting opinions, I may as well say at the outset that I expect, with the approval of the committee, to offer amendments to the bill reducing the amount to be allowed to the credit of any depositor from $1,000 to $500, and also reducing the maximum amount allowed to be deposited by any person during any calendar month from $200 to $100; and, in addition, an amendment striking out that portion of the bill allowing any person to make a deposit as a trustee.

The bill as thus amended will, I sincerely hope, meet the approval of most of its friends who have taken exception to the three points on which the amendments will be offered. As to the exemption of deposits from taxation and seizure under legal process, I indulge the hope that after mature reflection every friend of the measure will concur in the view that the exemptions specified are indispensable, unavoidable, and desirable.

Students of assessment and taxation as conducted in the respective States are well aware that persons having less than $250 in actual money in hand or in bank rarely, if ever, feel called upon to make return of such asset to the assessor.

On July 1 of the present year the stock of money in the United States was reported at $3,378,800,000, of which about 10 per cent was in the Treasury as assets and 40 per cent in banks reporting to the Comptroller of the Currency and approximately 50 per cent elsewhere. The amount of money in circulation on the day named, exclusive of coin and other money in the Treasury as assets, but including money in reporting banks, was $3,038,000,000, or $34.72 per capita. I am not prepared to state the aggregate amount of this circulation entered upon the books of assessors throughout the country, but I venture the opinion that less than 25 per cent of the total pays taxes any year.

In the presence of this state of affairs, would it not be a harsh and impolitic discrimination against the people of small means to subject their initial savings to a burden calculated to discourage thrift while extorting the revenues of Government from the class of citizens least able to pay?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber a moment ago, and I did not hear a statement I think the Senator must have made, and that is the limitation as to the amount to be deposited that shall be exempted from taxation. Is there a limitation?

Mr. CARTER. According to an amendment, which will be offered in due time, the amount allowed to the credit of any depositor, exclusive of interest accumulated, will be $500. I mentioned the sum of $250, because further on in my remarks, I shall undertake to demonstrate that the average deposit to the credit of individuals would be less than $200, and probably less than $100.

Mr. GALLINGER. The reason why I asked the question is that, taking the State of New Hampshire as an illustration, we have a very large amount of money in savings banks, $70,000,000, I think, at the present time, and almost one-half of our population are depositors.

Mr. CARTER. I think fully one-half.

Mr. GALLINGER. Fully one-half. The average deposit, I think, is less than $500, but the deposits are taxed, not as heavily as other property, because we look upon it as rather a beneficent scheme, but they are taxed three-fourths of 1 per cent, as I recall. Now, establishing postal savings banks in that State will bring those banks in direct competition with our savings banks, and in exempting them from taxation what is going to happen to the small depositors in our savings banks?

Mr. CARTER. In the State of New Hampshire the savings banks pay about three and seventy-one one-hundredths per cent interest.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; in interest.

Mr. CARTER. Even assuming that the three-quarters of 1 per cent deducted from the depositors in local or private savings banks is not charged to the postal savings depositor, it will be observed that the 2 per cent paid by the Government plus the three-quarters per cent paid by the individual patronizing private banks as taxes would, added together, be only 2¾ per cent, counting interest, together with the exemption as a return on the money, giving to the local savings bank a distinct advantage over the postal savings depositories in the matter of interest.

The assumption that each depositor would have $500 exempt from taxation is violent and unjustifiable. By reference to a table which, with the permission of the Senate, I will attach to my remarks, it will be found that the deposits in the various postal savings banks in other countries average from $5.77 per capita in Japan, which is the lowest, to $283.67 in Canada, which is the highest—all the countries showing less than $100 as the average deposit.

Fortunately our conclusions in regard to the prospective operations of this bill need not be speculative, for we are at liberty to consult a world-wide experience under all forms of government, extending from the adoption of the postal savings system in Great Britain in 1861 down to the present time. Any one who will take the pains to study the statistics contained in the report of the committee and those embraced in my remarks on this subject in the Senate during the last session, together with the tabulations which I will, with the permission of the Senate, have printed in this day's RECORD, must inevitably reach the conclusion that the average of deposits in the United States will never exceed $200 per capita, and probably a much less amount. Deposits are not made in the post-offices where this class of banks exists, as a rule, by investors and active men in business, but chiefly by persons seeking to save small sums which may prove useful in an emergency or form the basis for the purchase of a home or the establishment of some small business enterprise. Postal-bank depositors the world over are made up of people of small incomes with few or no commercial connections. The accumulation made of small sums deposited from time to time tend to enable such depositors to ultimately reach a point where they can make investments, and in exempting these small beginnings from taxation, we are, I submit, inaugurating a policy of the highest order of wisdom.

It must be borne in mind that we are not relieving money from taxation which is now being taxed, because it is obvious to everyone that 99 per cent of the money which the small depositors will place to their credit in the post-offices never yields one farthing of revenue through taxation anywhere. But it may be suggested by some one that designing persons would avail themselves of the postal depository as a refuge from the assessor, although an examination of the bill, as we propose to amend it, will show that it will take an individual five months to reach the maximum of $500, and an active business man would lose more by way of interest on his money during that period than the taxes would amount to. It is not pretended that the private savings banks of the country furnish to the assessors statements of the accounts of their depositors, and I doubt very much if any considerable percentage of such deposits is returned for taxation by anyone. I am informed that in Massachusetts the savings banks pay one-fourth of 1 per cent on their deposits to the State by way of a franchise tax. I presume the same is true in the State of New Hampshire and doubtless in other States, where what are called "mutual savings banks" obtain. But within the range of my knowledge and observation no banker furnishes any assessor with a statement of balances to the credit of the patrons of the bank.

There are two classes of savings banks. Those of New England are what are called "the old-style banks," organized generally by retired men of benevolent purpose, who serve as directors without pay, the bank being conducted without capital and wholly and solely conducted in the interest of depositors.

Another style of savings bank is the joint stock company, which exists chiefly in the far West, in the country beyond the Mississippi. These stock banks, so-called "savings banks," are conducted for the profit the stock may be made to yield. There is no more evidence of benevolence in the management or the purpose than in the management or purpose of a railroad company or any class of commercial enterprise conducted under corporation form.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana, if he has investigated the matter, whether or not the officers of these mutual savings banks of the New England States do not receive very large compensation for the services they render?

Mr. CARTER. I am informed that only the necessary clerical and administrative force is paid.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all.

Mr. FLINT. I have been advised that there have been very large salaries paid to some officers of the larger mutual savings banks throughout the New England States, far in excess of the dividends of what are known as stock banks in the Western States.

Mr. CARTER. I imagine that the stock bank probably pays as good a salary as the mutual savings bank.

I wish it distinctly understood that in so far as my study and observation have extended, the mutual savings bank, beginning in England and adopted quite universally throughout New England, has proven a beneficent institution for the struggling poor in all the States where it has been adopted. This postal savings bank of which I speak is not needed so much in New England, where, as stated by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], every other person—man, woman, and child—has a savings deposit. It is not needed to such an extent, I suggest, as is the case in the 32 States where 1 person in 250 only has a savings account or any facility for establishing a savings account.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. BULKELEY. I want to say, Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will permit me, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], that in my own State, where we probably have as large and as successful savings banks conducted on the New England plan as exist anywhere, the salaries of the officers who conduct the banks are of a very limited character. The president of the bank is generally, as the Senator from Montana has described, a retired business man, who performs the duties of that office without any compensation, and the executive officer who receives a compensation is usually the treasurer.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. FLINT. I will ask the Senator from Connecticut whether he knows what is the largest amount paid one of the trustees or officers of a mutual savings bank in his State?

Mr. BULKELEY. We have in the city where I reside one of the largest savings banks, if not the largest, in our State, with deposits amounting probably to from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000. I will venture to say, without an exact knowledge of the condition, that no officer of that savings bank receives a compensation in excess of $5,000, and that but one officer receives as large a compensation as that. The clerical force necessary to conduct the business usually receives compensation of the ordinary character attached to positions of that kind. I venture the assertion now that no business of the magnitude of the savings banks of Connecticut—and I might say as well of New England—is conducted with such economical expense as are the savings banks to which the Senator from Montana has referred as existing in the New England States. We have no savings banks with capital.

Mr. CARTER. I am thankful to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] for his lucid explanation of the point raised by the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT]. The existence in New England and New York——

Mr. KEAN. And New Jersey.

Mr. CARTER. And New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and California of reasonably adequate savings facilities through savings banks is at the basis of the great financial power of the respective States referred to. Through the agency of these widely scattered savings banks, conducted under rigid laws and by benevolently inclined gentlemen, all the available current cash in the States referred to is kept in circulation; but there are whole States in this Union, and a large number of congressional districts, in which no savings institution of any kind, character, or description exists. It is to this long-neglected section of country that this bill will come as a boon. The stock savings bank is established only at such favorable points as will promise large deposits and consequent profit on the stock. Beyond such favored points the stock company will not go, because the primary purpose is profit on the stock.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. But the benevolent institutions can not well be managed in new and sparsely settled districts with that degree of success which has marked them in the older States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. FLINT. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that in the State of California we have stock savings banks, known as "capital stock banks" and "mutual savings banks," and that the interest paid depositors in stock savings banks is the same as that paid to depositors in mutual savings banks.

Mr. CARTER. That is true the country over.

I propose to submit some figures showing that in the main the interest paid in the mutual banks and in the stock banks is substantially the same, with slight shades of difference here and there.

But I was proceeding to address myself to the question of exemption from taxation. In addition to what I have heretofore offered in that behalf, I make this final statement, that to impose such a task on the Postmaster-General as to all postal depositors and assessors in the United States would import an element of destruction into the system, and therefore the committee deemed it wise and in harmony with good, sound public policy to distinctly state that these deposits should be exempt from taxation. The same argument applies in a great measure to the provision exempting the savings deposits from seizure under legal process directed against a depositor. In the absence of such a provision, it is doubtful if the Government could be compelled to respond to a demand for a statement of the account of a person at any given post-office, but it was deemed prudent to make the fact clear that it was not the intention of Congress to involve the Government in a multiplicity of garnishment proceedings. On principle there is no objection to the exemption, for it is in harmony with enlightened legislative policy the world over to protect the struggling poor in the enjoyment of the fruits of toil to a limited extent. By a statute of the United States, passed long ago, a homestead conveyed by the Government to an individual by patent is exempt from seizure for debt, except where the land has been voluntarily incumbered by the homesteader.

Nearly every State in the Union exempts the library of the professional man, the tools of the mechanic, and the home in which the family lives. These exemptions are of varying extent in the different States. The exemption laws have occasionally been the refuge of dishonest men, but in the main they have proven beneficent shields for struggling men and women pursued by heartless creditors, who would prostrate the debtor by taking "the pound of flesh." The man who is never encouraged to save anything is less liable to pay his debts than the individual who, under the protection of a beneficent law, is induced to save and thus to become imbued with a higher sense of self-respect and responsibility.

The policy which tends to keep struggling men at the bottom of the ladder is ill advised and pernicious. The best and highest interests of civilization command those in power to maintain open avenues for the worthy and ambitious poor to secure a substantial start in life. Everyone who has been called upon to encounter the obstacles thrown in the way of the small beginner fully realizes that the pinch is hardest in the effort made to accumulate the first few hundred dollars. When such accumulation is made a sense of self-confidence and an increased sense of responsibility comes to the individual, and the disposition to evade the payment of honest debts disappears just in proportion as the sense of self-respect and responsibility increases. A thrifty, saving people will always be found patriotic, law-abiding, and self-respecting. The man, the woman, or the child having a deposit, be it ever so small, in the postal savings department of the United States will surely be better disposed toward the Government and all that good government means for our common country.

But I fear that I am consuming the time of the Senate to emphasize the virtues of a policy already approved, as I have said, by an overwhelming majority of the American people in all parties at the last election. I submit with candor and confidence to my fellow-Senators the amendments which I think may be profitably made to the pending bill, and my reasons for opposing any retreat from the committee position on the question of exemptions.

To the second class to whom I have heretofore referred—that is, the organized institutions and the individuals who find fault only and solely with a view to the utter defeat of the people's will—I am inclined to throw down the gage of battle. Having stood mute when the question at issue was being discussed before the great jury of American electors, these opponents should in truth and in fact not now be heard by the representatives of States and districts commissioned to carry out the people's will. But since the verdict was rendered at the election this organized opposition has concentrated its assault on Congress.

A few days ago I received from a banker in the State of Indiana a circular which had been mailed to him by the recruiting service of a central organization. This selfsame circular has since come in from so many directions as to leave no doubt of the national scope of the organized crusade against the bill. The circular is self-explanatory, and at this point I will ask the Secretary to read it. Before the reading, however, I wish to acquit the body of the membership of that distinguished organization, the American Bankers' Association, from responsibility for the statements made or the methods employed to spread them before the people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS,
AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, November 24, 1908.

GENTLEMEN: At the convention of the American Bankers' Association held in Denver September 28, the sentiment of the savings-bank section, subsequently confirmed by the general convention, was strongly opposed to the establishment of postal savings banks.

We are inclosing for your serious consideration the following documents bearing on the subject:

1. Copy of the Carter postal savings-bank bill, which is indorsed by the administration, and which comes up for a hearing early in the coming session.
2. Copy of the report indorsed by the convention at Denver.
3. Copy of an address delivered by George E. Roberts, formerly Director of the Mint.
4. Copy of an address by E. R. Gurney, vice-president of the First National Bank of Fremont.
5. A condensed synopsis of the arguments against postal savings-bank legislation, to be used as a basis for newspaper articles.

We would especially call your attention to the latter, and would strongly urge the advisability of your using your best endeavors to have the newspapers in your section of the country give proper publicity to our side of the question.

We moreover believe it to be of the utmost importance to have you use your influence with the Members of Congress from your district, and to this end would suggest that you have your directors and others interested personally write to Members of Congress whom they know, voicing their protest against the bill.

We will be pleased to receive any suggestions from you and will appreciate your prompt and careful consideration of this entire proposition.

Yours, respectfully, LUCIUS TETER, Chairman.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the speeches of Mr. Roberts and the banker referred to were very appropriate arguments, conducted with a view to combating this bill, but the circular is unique, and this is the heading:

Each banker receiving these press suggestions is requested to present them to the publisher of the local newspaper, with the request that editorials and write ups be prepared setting forth the arguments showing the real tendency and effects of postal saving bank legislation.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANK COMMITTEE,
American Bankers' Association.

And in small type the following:

(Please remove this slip when handing to newspaper.)

[Laughter.]

The circular of suggestions to local editors can scarcely be regarded as complimentary to the gentlemen who are expected to make editorial comments along the lines indicated. A high order of prudence dictated the phrase "Please remove this slip before handing to the newspaper." The slip was signed by a committee of the American Bankers' Association, but manifestly that committee had two points in view in directing removal of the slip from the head of the circular—the first a design to approach the editor from the blind side, and the second idea was to avoid responsibility for the many loose and indefensible statements an unsophisticated editor might be induced to make under the inspiration of the circular suggestions.

With the permission of the Senate, I will incorporate that circular in the RECORD, to the end that it may get open, bold, and free circulation without any surreptitious work being necessary to reach the country editor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The circular referred to is as follows:

Each banker receiving these press suggestions is requested to present them to the publisher of the local newspapers with the request that editorials or write ups be prepared setting forth the arguments showing the real tendency and effects of postal savings bank legislation.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANK COMMITTEE,
American Bankers' Association.

(Please remove this slip before handing to newspaper.)

THE FUNCTIONS OF THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

The National Government has functions which are distinct from those of the state and local governments. In matters such as interstate commerce, waterways, the raising of national revenue, and other matters which depend for their efficiency in any one part of the country upon conditions and management in other parts of the country should be controlled by the Federal Government; but the operation of a savings bank, being purely local, requiring no assistance from distant points, does not come within the pale of the Federal Government. How savings shall be deposited and invested is a question for the States to settle.

GOVERNMENT INCONSISTENCY.

The establishment of postal savings banks by the National Government would develop an inconsistency which can scarcely be overlooked. The Comptroller of the Currency examines national banks and publicly declares that those passing under his scrutiny are worthy of public confidence, yet in the same community where the national bank thus commended to the people is located the postal savings bank bids for the deposits, effecting a government guaranty and certain other inducements.

THE CARTER BILL.

The doctrine of the Postmaster-General concerning postal savings banks has been embodied in a law known as the "Senate bill 6484," introduced by Senator CARTER, from Montana.

When this bill is studied with care it manifests the objections to postal savings banks in a striking manner.

1. It provides for the exemption of deposits from legal processes, which is made necessary by reason of the fact that the United States Government has never submitted to attachment as an aid in execution. It is improbable therefore that a provision can be made in any legislature making attachment possible. The fact that deposits are exempt from execution would enable dishonest and designing people to secrete an undue amount of money, keeping it beyond the reach of creditors. Inasmuch as this law provides that each individual may have an account of $1,000 and that any child of 10 years or older may also have an account of $1,000, a man or woman who has a family of four children can deposit a thousand dollars for each member of his family, and therefore control $5,000 which is beyond the reach of the law. Thus by a little maneuvering a dishonest person could outwit his creditors in the matter of collecting honest debts. This feature of the postal savings bank law for the United States is so vicious that it would unhinge the commercial world, resulting in confusion and financial disaster.

2. This law provides for the establishment of interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, and on the supposition that all of the money deposited in savings banks during the past year had been transferred to the postal savings banks under the provisions of the proposed law with interest at 2 per cent the savings depositors of the country would have been deprived of more than $50,000,000 in interest during the year.

3. This bill provides for the Government depositing money coming into its possession through the postal savings depositories in national banks with interest at the rate of 2¼ per cent per annum. The money deposited with government depositories becomes a first lien upon the assets of the bank, so that those national banks which have savings departments must place their savings depositors in jeopardy in order to protect the postal savings bank deposits from loss.

This situation develops practical difficulties which are insurmountable objections to the proposed legislation. In this connection it is the policy of the Postmaster-General to have the receipts of the postal savings banks deposited in those national banks located nearest the place of deposit, but there might appear two practical difficulties in the path of the postal savings bank which are insurmountable objections to it.

(a) Those national banks located nearest the place where money has been deposited in postal savings banks may not accept government funds at the stipulated rate of interest.

(b) The depositories located in the vicinity of the postal savings banks which collect the funds may not be willing to jeopardize their own savings depositors by accepting large consignments of government funds upon which interest must be paid.

4. The Carter bill requires no notice for the withdrawal of deposits, so that the Government might at times be seriously embarrassed, either being forced to default in payment or deplete its gold reserve, to the detriment of the Nation's credit and the business interests of the entire country.

ERRONEOUS STATISTICS.

In presenting the claims of the postal savings bank idea upon the attention of lawmakers, there have appeared a number of erroneous statistics. For example, it has been represented that the State of Ohio has ten stock savings banks with deposits amounting to $9,000,000 and four mutual banks with deposits amounting to $19,000,000, making a total of $28,000,000 in savings deposits. Now, the fact is that aside from savings deposits in national banks in the State of Ohio, there are savings deposits aggregating $379,000,000, and, making a fair estimate of the savings deposits in national banks, the aggregate amount of savings in the State of Ohio will reach $450,000,000. This instance illustrates the lack of thoroughness with which the enthusiasm of postal savings bank advocates has been tempered, and many of the extravagant expressions which they have made when subjected to minute scrutiny have revealed the greatest inconsistency and want of fidelity to existing facts.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

A few enthusiastic men, notably Postmaster-General Von L. Meyer, have espoused the cause of postal savings banks, urging that foreign governments afford security for the savings of their peoples; and they point to the apparent success of government savings banks in foreign lands as a good reason for the establishment of postal savings banks in this country. They argue, moreover, that there are many foreign-obrn people in this country who miss the postal savings-bank accommodations when they come to America, and it is reported that many of them persistently go to the post-office and buy postal money orders, payable to themselves, in order to provide safety for their money.

PLEADS FOR IGNORANCE OF FOREIGNERS.

The advocates of postal savings banks in the United States, moreover, claim that these foreign people distrust American banking institutions by reason of their ignorance concerning American customs. It is not held by postal savings bank advocates that the banks in the United States are untrustworthy, but simply that many people do not intrust their money to the safe-keeping of banks because of their lack of knowledge. Indeed, the entire basis of argument upon which the postal savings bank idea rests is very unstable, and when compared with the arguments against postal savings banks appears very meager and illogical. The facts are, however, that people who come to this country from foreign lands readily take up with American customs and in the second generation become thoroughly Americanized. It seems, therefore, far more preferable to educate the newly arrived foreigner in regard to American institutions than to adopt old-country customs to comply with his previous experience.

PRESENT BANKING FACILITIES.

The majority of the States are at present furnished with savings systems, consisting of banks equipped with modern facilities for the transaction of a savings-bank business, which, taken together with the banking-by-mail privileges afforded by practically all financial institutions, are fully adequate for the needs of the people and the safeguarding of their deposits.

The bankers are a progressive, substantial class of men, always identified with the best interests of the community in which they live. They are always ready to adopt any modern method which will prove of service to the public. A sound bank is an honor to any town; it is a conservator of the community's resources, the worthy agent of local enterprise. How different, indeed, must be the local post-office as a depository for the savings of citizens.

GROWTH OF NEW SECTIONS IMPAIRED.

It will also be observed that the savings bank has followed the course of population and every town of any considerable size has adequate banking facilities. The bank, moreover, when planted naturally in a town capable of properly supporting it, in turn becomes the means by which the town and vicinity are built up and developed. The programme contemplated by the postal savings bank advocates means stagnation in every new section of the country; it means that business will be at a standstill by reason of the fact that the money which should be circulating locally will be transferred to other points, as the proposed savings-bank legislation provides for taking the deposits out of the local community and placing them in designated national depositories, of necessity at the large centers of population. This is manifestly against the best interests of our country, for it is in the newly developed States that the greatest growth of this country must be looked for in the future. The small savings of those sturdy people who make their homes in frontier towns, when gathered in the local bank and combined into what is known as "capital," become the sinews of business prosperity for those settlements. The money is invested in first mortgages to build homes, business blocks, factories, and other industrial enterprises. This money is invested in municipal bonds and commercial paper, all of which investments greatly assist in building up a local community. If deposited in postal savings banks, however, these savings could not be available for local purposes.

THE ORGANIZATION OF NEW BANKS MADE IMPRACTICABLE.

The proposed postal savings bank bill, if enacted by Congress, means that fewer banks will be established after the law goes into effect. It means that many and many a town, which will perforce grow up in the future, will be practically without those modern banking facilities which have proved to be the backbone of older States, towns, villages, and even rural districts. Those communities which have become accustomed to modern bank methods will not give them up; but the frontier deprived of the incentive to organize strong, sound banks, will continue for long periods to struggle against the disadvantages imposed by postal savings bank laws. The bank which has always been proudly numbered among the first establishments of growing towns will no longer be among the first institutions; but will be forced to delay its appearance by reason of the presence of its rival, the United States Post-Office, doing away with the organization of new banks.

THE GOVERNMENT'S PART IN BANKING.

It has, moreover, been pointed out that the previous experiences of the United States Government in conducting banks do not encourage us to believe that the proposed postal savings bank system would be managed with any greater degree of wisdom or success than the existing savings banks and savings departments of national banks. The proposed law places the Government in the light of a solicitor for bank deposits—a solicitor which stipulates just what rate of interest the depository shall pay. It may be found impracticable many times to force national depositors to accept postal savings bank funds at the stipulated interest rate.

In view of the facts, the Government can render the best service to the people by strengthening the established banking institutions by amended laws, such as are being considered by the finance commissions and the rulings of the Comptroller of the Currency.

STATE BANKING LAWS.

The laws regulating state banks are rapidly being amended, by the efforts of the bankers themselves, in such a way as to render the highest degree of safety for depositors. The American Bankers' Association, representing banks in all parts of the country, is making every effort to see that the depositors are afforded every safeguard which safe and sane laws can assure. One of the most active committees of this association is the standing law committee, the members of which are devoting a great deal of time and energy in making the various state laws as nearly uniform as possible, taking as a basis the laws of those States which from the standpoint of security for savings are regarded as models by conservative financiers, both in this country and abroad.

Mr. CARTER. If the function of the National Government as defined by the circular had been insisted upon from the beginning, we would not enjoy the privilege of registering a letter or of sending money by a post-office order.

The comments of the circular with reference to the bill generally are ridiculous, so ridiculous as not to be even entitled to the denomination of unfair. I will not undertake to go over that circular in detail, but in the circular they deal with one fact which I think should be mentioned here. It is stated that the national banks in the locality where the money is received at the post-office may not be willing to accept the deposit from the postmaster. A slight explanation to those who have not read the bill carefully may be desirable at this point. It is provided that the money received at the respective post-office depositories shall be by the postmasters, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, deposited in the national bank nearest the place of receipt. The Government pays 2 per cent interest to the depositor, and the bill provides that the bank shall be required to pay 2¼ per cent interest.

The circular is gravely apprehensive of the disposition of the banks to accept this, which will be a most desirable and constantly increasing deposit, a deposit which will become larger in proportion as fear and panic spread broader in the country, a deposit which will, of course, increase in time of doubt and uncertainty, and thus tend to repair the depleted deposits of the banks at the close of the day.

In case of a panicky feeling throughout the country it is known that the small depositors, claiming amounts that do not enable them to ask for collateral security from banks or the indorsement of a director, generally withdraw their money; and those bankers who have had to encounter runs will bear free witness to the fact that the runs have often been precipitated and always aggravated by the appearance upon the street in front of the bank of a large number of persons, each claiming a small amount of money.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at this point?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to ask for information whether the banks to receive these deposits from the Government are required to give security for them?

Mr. CARTER. Instead of requiring security we make the postal deposit in a national bank a prior lien on its resources. But I will reach that point a little later and elucidate it somewhat more at length.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. HOPKINS. That in the judgment of the committee is ample security, is it not?

Mr. CARTER. That is ample security, most undoubtedly, in view of the fact that the Government, through the Treasury Department, has access to these national banks and keeps constantly advised of their condition.

In the case of panic the money which is taken out by the small depositor is under present conditions placed in safety deposit vaults, holes in the ground, between the covers of the bed, in old stockings, in tin cans, and in every conceivable receptacle where a man thinks it may be safe. But, Mr. President, if the individuals could bring their money to the postmaster, they would do so, because the post-office depository has the faith and credit of the Government pledged to repayment. The postmaster, in turn, would that same afternoon deposit the funds in the bank, and thus we would have a panic preventive which would be effective.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana, for information, what provision is there in this bill that would cover the case of a bank declining to receive a deposit accompanied by the obligation to pay interest upon it?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in that respect the bill provides that if the bank in the neighborhood refuses to pay the interest required by law, the Postmaster-General may then deposit in some bank more remote than the place of receipt which is willing to pay the interest. If, in the last analysis, all banks refuse to pay interest, then the Postmaster-General may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General, invest these postal savings funds in municipal, State, and other bonds to be approved.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will indulge me a little further, it was developed on a recent occasion that the amount of the securities of the class suggested by the Senator would not be sufficient to absorb, perhaps, more than 10 to 15 per cent of the deposits of this class. Then where would the Government find a use for this money that would justify it in paying interest?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, where the national-bank reserve agents are now, and have been for all the years, paying at least 2 per cent interest on daily balances on money subject to check and liable to be withdrawn when most needed by the reserve banks, I think it is purely speculative to suggest a contingency based upon a supposition that the banks of the country will not take a reliable deposit which is sure to increase in time of financial stringency and distress, rather than diminish.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. At this point I desire to ask the Senator whether he has given any attention to the question of the permanency of these deposits? Is it not true that in Europe, where the postal-savings banks are established, the funds on deposit have accumulated permanently, and in many cases there are millions and millions of dollars that have never been called for at all by the depositors; and do not such deposits, after all, constitute one of the most profitable and one of the most reliable and least vexatious of the deposits of banks?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in putting the question the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has stated substantially my approved answer. As I took occasion to remark some moments ago, we are not pioneers in putting this system forward. It has been in operation in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland since 1861, and there the experience is that the account constantly and regularly increases in aggregate amount until, I believe, in 1907 the United Kingdom postal savings deposits amounted to $950,000,000, and the average to the credit of the depositor respectively was only $72 and a fraction.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. With much pleasure.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana whether there is any country which receives this class of deposits for the purpose of loaning them out under any circumstances?

Mr. CARTER. This bill makes a departure with reference to the use of the deposits. As a rule these deposits are used by the respective governments for public purposes. In England they are invested in government securities, and I believe that practice generally obtains in the various countries where the system has been adopted. But the committee was confronted with the important fact that the concentration at the national capital or at any or all of the great financial centers of the country of the small, accumulated savings of the people would result in impoverishing the circulation at extremities, to the enduring injury of remote sections. Therefore we concluded that it would be sounder and better policy to make a provision which would insure not only the extending of saving facilities to the people, but the circulation of the money of the people in the respective communities.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I ask the Senator from Montana a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does it not result in the Government guaranteeing the loans of this money made by the national banks?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, that suggests another thought, which I will interject at this time. As I have stated, the postal savings deposits in the banks are made by the bill a prior lien upon the resources of the banks. With the loaning of the postal money by the banks we have not to do, but the agents of the Treasury Department are permitted at any time to examine national banks, and we think that with such examination as a safeguard, with knowledge of the interior conditions of the bank possessed by the Government through the examination, the postal savings fund will be amply secured by the lien. We took this course because of an earnest desire to avoid a concentration of these sums in the financial centers, to the impoverishment, as I stated, of the circulation throughout the country.

It was suggested that we require collateral from the banks in the form of bonds, to be deposited as security for the postal funds. But it at once became apparent on slight reflection that in purchasing the bonds the banks would be compelled to go to the bondholding centers, where that class of securities are generally held, and that by indirection we would thus cause the money of the people to be concentrated at the capital or in the financial centers in a manner that we did not desire should be done.

It has been suggested that state banks should likewise be made depositories. If that departure should obtain, we will then of necessity be compelled to make a provision for the acceptance from such banks of collateral security, because we will be denied the privilege of making direct examination of such institutions.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I trust the Senator from Montana will not conclude from my interruptions that I am antagonizing this legislation. I am simply seeking light to the end that we may avoid difficulties which would militate against the usefulness of the legislation.

I should like to make a suggestion. Would it not seriously detract from the credit of national banks in their ordinary business if you gave preference to this class of deposits where this class of deposits might perhaps exceed the general deposits of the bank? Would depositors submit to being placed in a position subject to a preferential creditor?

Mr. CARTER. I have not observed that persons who deposit in national depositories lose faith or have their confidence impaired because the money placed there by the United States Treasury on temporary deposit is specially secured. What is the essential difference between the banks taking the funds of the bank or the funds of depositors and buying bonds and placing them in the Treasury of the United States to secure the United States Government deposits and saying that the United States postal deposit is a preferred claim?

Indeed, I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that when collateral security is put up by the local bank it is well known that the market value of the bonds required always exceeds the amount of the deposit by a fair margin, to make up for fluctuations.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest to the Senator that there are not enough of that class of securities in existence to meet so large a business transaction as is proposed by this legislation.

Mr. CARTER. We realize that; and then, I presume, the tendency would be to inflate the value of bonds, should we require collateral security. But I submit to the Senator that with this widely scattered business of the Post-Office Department, making these deposits in the banks, with the stable character of the deposits constantly increasing and never diminishing, except in exceptional cases, with the assurance that the deposits will increase when fear and panic appear, rather than diminish, it is a very desirable thing for the local banks to have the privilege of doing business with the post-office. I imagine that if there are two banks in a given town in our western country and the Postmaster-General should approve one as a place in which to put postal deposits and decline to approve the other, his acceptance of the bank for postal business would be advertised upon the window just as we see advertised everywhere the words "United States depository" on the window of a bank in which the Government elects to place its money.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask the Senator if the committee considered, or if he has considered, the advisability of permitting these deposits to be placed in state banks. One of the complaints that is urged against the bill is that no such provision is contained in it.

Mr. CARTER. In reply to the question of the Senator from Kansas I can speak only individually. The matter to which he refers was considered by the committee, and it at once appeared that inasmuch as the United States would have no right or authority whatever to make any examination of the business or solvency of a private bank, it could not with that degree of confidence which would obtain in the case of a national bank enter into business relations with it. But since the subject has been more thoroughly discussed throughout the country, a disposition has been manifested by some Senators, and on the initiative of many citizens who are friendly to the postal savings banks, that some provision be made whereby deposits may be made in banks organized under state laws. I doubt if we could go far enough to make any provision which would allow a deposit in a purely private bank, but where the laws of a State are sufficiently rigid to secure sound banking, where collateral security could be provided in addition to the known solvency of the banks, I believe an amendment could be attached to the bill permitting the transaction of business with such state banks. But I am not prepared to offer that.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to ask the Senator from Montana if it would not be better in these small places to have the state banks take out national charters. Under the national banking act a capital of $25,000 is sufficient to organize a national bank. Then there would be throughout the entire country one system, and we would have one set of bank examiners to control the examination of the small banks as well as the large ones.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Illinois that there may be advantages under the state law which a state savings bank would not willingly forego. For instance, a national bank is not free to invest its deposits in real estate, whereas a state bank may do so.

I desire also further to suggest to the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from Montana as well, that it might be possible, wherever a state bank submitted itself to an examination by the federal authorities with reference to its soundness, that it would be sufficiently attractive to get some of these funds. Take, for instance, a post-office in a community where there is no national bank. It would seem a little unfortunate if the deposits should be made in the post-office and then taken away from that community entirely because of the absence of a national bank in the immediate neighborhood, whereas a state bank there might be equally secure.

Take it in the State of Michigan, for instance. The state banks are under examination as thorough and as effective and as complete as that of the national banks. I think a better system of examination prevails in the state banks of Michigan than in the national banks, because of this fact: The state bank examiner gets a salary for his services, and he can spend as much time in a state bank as is necessary to ascertain its soundness, whereas under the federal system the national bank pays a fixed sum for each examination, no matter how little time is consumed in making it, and oftentimes it is hurried and incomplete and unsatisfactory. Indeed, I know of national banks which have protested against the unsatisfactory examinations conducted by the national authority.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would suggest the necessity for considering not only the examination of the state bank, but the control of the state bank by the National Government.

For instance, if the condition of a state bank suggested a suspicion that it was not doing business upon a safe basis, the Government of the United States would have no power, either through the appointment of a receiver or otherwise, to make it change its method of doing business. While a state bank might stand the examination to-day, it might be suggested to the Government to-morrow that the bank had changed its method and was no longer safe. On the other hand, the national bank is subject to control as well as to examination by the federal authority.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Montana will pardon me for just a moment, I dislike very much to think of any legislation which would seriously interfere with the conduct of the banking business in the various States, because it is convenient, it is safe, and it is generally under proper control. If there are no objections more serious than those I have heard against a provision in this bill, which will permit the deposits to be made under certain conditions in state banks, I think it ought to be done. The fund is a large, permanent, satisfactory fund. I do not agree with the Senator from Idaho that there will be any danger at all, but that the banks will desire this money and that they will make liberal bids for it. I can not imagine a fund so permanent in its character as will be the funds accumulated under this system not being desired by banking institutions.

But I do hope that there may be some provision attached to this bill which will not discriminate unfairly and unjustly against the state organizations that are under proper control, and which have been authorized by proper and appropriate legislation.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, before the Senator from Michigan takes his seat I desire to call his attention to the fact that the policy controlling national banks is entirely different from that controlling state banks, and one of those points is that suggested by the Senator himself, that no national bank can take real estate security for a loan. That has been the policy of the Government always.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator from Illinois will recall that the House of Representatives passed a bill several years ago permitting in certain Southern States national banks to take real estate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Ah! but that does not interfere with the general policy which has always prevailed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is what I am speaking of. That principle distinguishes national banks from state banks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Exactly. The state banks of Michigan are required to invest largely in real-estate security.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yet the Senator wants state banks which invest in such securities to have the same privileges and benefits with respect to this money taken in at the post-offices that are given national banks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No. I think the Senator misunderstands me. I do not want the state banks discriminated against unfairly. If it is possible under the Constitution, and under sound limitations consistent with safe banking, to have a portion of these deposits left with the local bank, whether state or national, I would like to see it done. This is an important step, and it should be undertaken with deliberation and care. As I said a moment ago, I can conceive of communities—indeed, I know of communities in my own State—prosperous and progressive where there is not a single national bank. I dislike to think that farmers and laborers and business men will deposit their money in post-offices in such a community and have it carted away a great distance to be deposited in a national bank, perhaps entirely out of sympathy with the community from which the fund is drawn.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to suggest, in answer to what was said by the Senator from Illinois, that in some communities the conditions will not justify the organization of a $25,000 national bank, but they are such as to justify the organization of a $10,000 state bank. Therefore state banks of that size ought not to be deprived of the benefit of the deposits that might be made in the post-office.

Mr. CARTER. The statement made by the Senator that the bill would be improved by some provision which would permit the deposit of these postal funds in state banks will receive careful consideration from the committee, and if it is deemed proper and wise to liberalize the bill in that particular an amendment will be presented. I hope we may be able to reach a more liberal range of bank deposits than the bill now provides.

We have wandered far from the circular to which I called attention, and I will conclude my respects to the circular now by saying that its underlying idea in opposition to this bill seems to be conveyed in the lines near its close. It says:

> In view of the facts, the Government can render the best service to the people by strengthening the established banking institutions by amended laws, such as are being considered by the finance commissions and the rulings of the Comptroller of the Currency.

It does not appear that the author of the circular was in any manner advised of what the Committee on Finance would recommend nor what the Currency Commission would recommend, but on general principles accepted that source as the source of all wisdom on this and kindred questions. Or, in other words, the people of the United States are henceforth and forever to be confined to such saving facilities as may be provided by individual initiative or by national banking concerns. The old style savings bank, organized without capital and conducted by directors without compensation and solely for the benefit of the depositors, is confined to a very limited part of the United States.

Of the savings banks reported to the Comptroller of the Currency 676 are mutual institutions such as I have named and 777 are stock savings banks, the latter being operated for the benefit of both the shareholder and the depositor. According to the report of the comptroller, one-third of all the savings deposits of the United States is in the banks of New York and one-fifth in the savings banks of Massachusetts, or more than one-half of all the savings deposits of the United States is in the savings banks of these two States, which attract money from the people who patronize savings banks because of the rigid laws which give a feeling of confidence and security to the people.

New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, and California have 92 per cent of all the savings deposits in this country, and the remaining 8 per cent is divided among the 34 remaining States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia, and yet the committee on postal savings banks of the American Bankers' Association has the effrontery to assert that facilities for the people's savings are ample throughout this entire country when it is known of all men that there are whole congressional districts and States without any savings institutions at all. This is but natural, because in the West, the Middle West, and the South the stock company is generally organized to furnish savings facilities, and as dividends on stock are the primary purpose, it follows, as a matter of course, that such institutions are only organized at such favorable places as may promise large deposits, and consequently large dividends. The joint-stock company has never been noted for philanthropic design, and the orginizers of such a company under the name of savings bank are as keenly bent on earning profit on the investment in their stock as are the organizers of any commercial or industrial corporation.

The advocates of the pending bill insist that enlightened public policy dictates such use of the agencies of government as will encourage thrift and a saving disposition among the people. If a man remote from any banking center can, without cost or injury to the Government or perversion of its functions, be afforded as good facilities for saving his earnings as the resident of a great center of population enjoys, why should such opportunity not be extended? Why are citizens of the United States residing in sparsely settled regions remote from banks not entitled to as good treatment from their Government as residents of Siberia or Canada enjoy, through the use of an arm of the Government specially adapted to extend to them savings facilities? But it is asserted that the Government would, through postal savings depositories, invade the domain of legitimate banking. Those who make such assertions are manifestly wanting in knowledge of the provisions of the bill and ignorant of the operations of the postal savings bank system in the foreign countries in which it has been in successful operation for many years. In no just sense does the bill propose to establish a banking system. It is true that deposits are received and returned on demand to the depositor, with such interest as may have accumulated, and it is also true that moneys received will be deposited in the national banks nearest the place of receipt at a stipulated rate of interest. At this point all analogy to banking ceases; checks will not be cashed, exchange will not be bought or sold, notes will not be discounted, collections will not be made, nor will any of the customary functions and activities of a bank be invaded. The limitations provided by the bill will necessarily confine the patrons of the postal savings bank very largely to persons who rarely, if ever, have any dealings with a commercial banking concern, nor can there be injurious competition with well-conducted savings banks where such exist. The Government will pay 2 per cent on deposits, computations to be made semiannually rather than quarterly, whereas the average rate of interest paid by mutual savings banks in the New England States is 3.72 per cent, in the Eastern States 3.49 per cent, in the Middle Western States 3.75 per cent. The average interest paid by mutual savings banks is 3.70 per cent and by stock savings banks 3.53 per cent.

To the allegation that exemption from taxation would be a premium in addition to the interest on postal savings it is quite sufficient to say that only on a very limited proportion of the deposits in either stock or mutual savings banks are any taxes paid.

It is only fair to say that the utterances of the committee on postal savings banks of the American Bankers' Association do not represent the voice of all the members of that great association, for I have been personally advised by many of its members that they had given no consideration to the subject of postal savings banks, and by many others who, having considered the subject, freely announced the conclusion that the system would result, as I believe it will, in drawing forth from innumerable hiding places and turning into the active channels of commerce and trade hundreds of millions of dollars now dormant and useless. Within the last two weeks a prominent officer of one of the leading banks of the country, who had been before the Finance Committee to give his views on currency reform, candidly stated to me that he had never read the pending bill and had not studied any aspect of the proposed postal savings system. His frank statement leads me to believe that many of the busy men who have been called upon to unite in an organized effort to defeat this proposed legislation are proceeding with much zeal and little knowledge, and for their benefit I will again tersely state what this bill as it will be amended is intended to accomplish.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 6484, known as the "postal savings banks bill."

Mr. GALLINGER. The unfinished business, I believe, has not been disposed of. I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. I object. I insist on my motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not understand that the Senator had made a motion which would dispose of the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has made a motion which will supersede the unfinished business if it prevails. The Senator from Montana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire, Will that give this bill a status that would give it preference over the special order for to-morrow?

Mr. CARTER. I will state to the Senator that my understanding is it would have no more preference over the special order than does the unfinished business which I ask to have displaced.

Mr. FORAKER. It can be laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. CARTER. Under the provisions of the bill every post-office in the United States authorized to issue a money order, together with such other offices as the Postmaster-General may designate, will become postal savings depositories, at which any person may open an account by the deposit of not less than $1 nor more than $100 during any calendar month. Upon the opening of an account a pass book will be delivered to the depositor, and the balance may thereafter be increased by a deposit of 10 cents or the multiples thereof, each deposit to be entered by the postmaster in the depositor's book. No deposit can at any time exceed $500, exclusive of accumulated interest. A depositor desiring the return of any part of his money must make a written application to the postmaster, who will forward the same to the Postmaster-General, and in due time a check on some bank or an order on the postmaster will be forwarded to the depositor for the amount for which the application is made, if the amount is found to be due. Interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum will be paid on the average deposit, computed every six months. No person can have more than one account, and any person over the age of 10 years may open an account. The postmasters will be required to deposit postal savings in the national banks nearest the place of receipt, and the banks will be required to pay interest at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum for the use of the money.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. May I interrupt the Senator just at that point to ask him whether he does not think it would be an advantage to the bill to make it mandatory under the terms of the bill for the Postmaster-General to deposit the money pro rata among the banks in the various localities nearest the post-offices; in other words, not leaving it discretionary with the Postmaster-General to deposit in this bank or that bank, but to provide that he must deposit the money as near as possible pro rata among all the national banks in the locality?

Mr. CARTER. It is assumed that a Postmaster-General administering the law would seek to so administer it as to meet the approval of the people, and particularly approval for fair dealing with the respective banks in which deposits were made. There would be some limitations which would have to be specified if we arbitrarily commanded the Postmaster-General to deposit in all banks, irrespective of their condition. I think it will grow to be a recognized fact that the deposit of the postal savings in a national bank will be regarded as an evidence of the confidence of the Postmaster-General in the administration of the affairs of that bank, and inasmuch as that thought will prevail the Postmaster-General would of necessity be very loath to discriminate against any solvent bank.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield further to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. With much pleasure.

Mr. FLINT. The point I am making is that the very fact that these deposits will be desired by the banks will lead to placing the banks in politics, a bank being desirous to be designated as the depository, and for that reason it should be eliminated from that criticism and be made mandatory, provided the Secretary of the Treasury states that the bank is solvent.

Mr. CARTER. I think if the Senator will read that portion of the bill referring to the topic we are discussing he will find that the Postmaster-General is not left with unrestricted latitude to discriminate for or against any bank. I think by fair intendment and reasonable construction the language of the bill would require that these deposits be made without partiality or discrimination in the banks in each locality.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana whether any provision is made by which deposits can be made in state banks. In my State there are many places where there are no banks except those chartered by the State, and I wish to know if some provision can not be inserted in the bill by which upon giving proper security a deposit can not be made there.

Mr. CARTER. In reference to that, I will say to the Senator from Alabama that the bill in its present form makes no provision for deposits in any bank save only national banks, but the propriety of making some provision for deposits in state banks where national banks do not exist in the neighborhood has been pressed with much force upon the attention of the committee, and at some later day the committee's position on that question will be announced in the form of a proposed amendment or the reasons for failing to propose such an amendment will be stated.

Aside from details and administrative features, I have stated the sum and substance of the proposed legislation. Of course, if the bank nearest the post-office where the money is received declines to pay the rate of interest required by law, the Postmaster-General will be authorized to deposit the same in the next nearest bank willing to pay the interest, and if no bank in the State is willing to pay the rate stipulated the Postmaster-General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and Attorney-General, may invest the idle money in municipal, county, or state bonds. The provision with reference to depositing the money in banks differs radically from any of the European or Japanese or the colonial government systems, as in substantially all other countries the postal savings are invested in government securities. It was deemed unwise to pursue that policy in this country, because of the concentration of the peoples' savings at the national capital or the great financial centers which would inevitably follow. The design is to keep the money among the people in the respective localities where deposited. Postal savings on deposit in a national bank are made a prior lien on its resources. This means of securing the deposits was approved in preference to requiring collateral security, as is done with moneys placed in national-bank depositories by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the reason that the purchase of the necessary collateral to secure postal deposits would require all the banks to resort to the money centers for the purchase of the bonds, and thus, by indirection, the deposits of the post-office would be concentrated at the financial centers.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to section 9 of the bill, which seems intended to cover the manner of withdrawing the money by the depositor. I notice a provision that—

All withdrawals of deposits must be made in even dollars unless the account shall be closed.

I would suggest to the Senator that inasmuch as we allow deposits of 10 cents and multiples thereof, a depositor might want to withdraw only 50 cents. Why should he be compelled to withdraw a dollar and then redeposit the surplus?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it is very desirable, as the Senator will appreciate, to simplify the book accounts as much as possible. I will venture the opinion now that the bill could be improved by providing that no deposit should be made for less than 50 cents and that initial savings might be accumulated through a stamp system or cards up to the amount of 50 cents.

After the bill was reported I took occasion, through the Post-Office Department—and I wish to extend my thanks to that department for continuous courtesy and great helpfulness in gathering data in connection with this matter. I have taken occasion to look up the smallest deposit allowed by the various savings banks, and I find that the franc or the mark or the equivalent is about the smallest amount allowed to be deposited anywhere. The great amount of bookkeeping which would attach would be a difficulty that the Senator will readily perceive in the computation of the very small or trifling amounts if allowed to be withdrawn in fractional sums.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wish to ask a further question in connection with that. There seems to be no provision as to the manner of withdrawing money. Section 9 simply says that a depositor may withdraw his deposits. I would inquire whether he is to withdraw by check or to go in person and withdraw it, or may he give an order for the payment of an obligation upon the post-office for it?

Mr. CARTER. A later section of the bill provides that the Postmaster-General may make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the bill. We purposely avoided going into minute details for the purpose of directing the course of clerical work. I assume an application will have to be made in writing.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, this idea occurred in connection with the provision that the depositor could withdraw only in even dollars. If he is to withdraw it by receiving a check or order upon the post-office for the money, he would naturally want to receive the order for the exact amount or draw the check for the exact amount which he intends to pay. Suppose he owed a bill of $6.25. He must withdraw $7. Are you to give a check for $7? In that event he could not send the check to his creditor.

Mr. CARTER. Under the bill it is not contemplated that any order on the postmaster or Postmaster-General will be honored. It is expected that the depositor will make a formal application for the repayment of his deposit.

Mr. HEYBURN. To whom?

Mr. CARTER. To the postmaster, who will forward the same to the Postmaster-General, where the entire matter will be examined; and if the amount is due to the individual, it will be sent back in the form of a check on a bank, as I have stated, or by an order on the local postmaster.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit a further interruption in this connection, it was just to develop that position that I was making some inquiry. Then a depositor must wait until his application to withdraw the sum of $5 is made in form to the postmaster, sent to Washington City, there approved in the routine of business, and an order sent back. Suppose a depositor wanted the money more quickly than could be done in that way? Is there no alternative provision? Must he disconnect himself with his money so that he could not use it, say, without a two weeks' notice?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the individual who desires his money for ready use in active business will have no dealings with the postal savings depository. The primary purpose of this institution will be to extend facilities as broad as the money-order department of the post-office service for those desiring to save. We do not wish to have it understood that in any sense checks can ever be issued against the postmaster or the Postmaster-General. We expect within a few days to present a bill for the consideration of the Senate looking to the decentralization of the Postal Service, so that we think, through the organization of field districts—some fifteen in number—the post-office business may be conducted more expeditiously for the various localities than under the present effort to conduct it from the central office in Washington.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me a little further, I should like to submit this question: By the express provisions of this bill the money received by the Government is made public funds. That puts it on a par with any other money in the Treasury of the United States, does it not?

Mr. CARTER. Except as disposition is made of it by the express terms of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. How, under the Constitution, can public funds be paid out except pursuant to a direct appropriation for the purpose for which they are paid?

Mr. CARTER. I think the Senator, taking the bill as a whole, will find that this is a special fund.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. du PONT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether the bill does not contemplate that a depositor in one post-office can draw out his funds from any other post-office?

Mr. CARTER. The bill does not contemplate that proceeding.

Mr. du PONT. It seems to me that is a very important provision for the large number of people who earn their money away from their homes and who, when they return home, would like to draw their money and deposit it in a regular savings bank, so as to get a higher rate of interest. I know that is the system which prevails in France, where a depositor can take his little book and draw his money from any post-office in the whole country.

Mr. CARTER. I think the Senator will find that no postmaster will pay upon the face of the book, but that it is necessary that the book should be sent to the central office before payment of the full amount is made, there to be balanced and the amount due to be ascertained, not from the pass book held by the individual, but from the central books of the postal system.

Mr. du PONT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether, under the provisions of the bill, it would not be possible for the Postmaster-General to make such regulations as would enable the funds to be drawn from a post-office other than the post-office in which they were originally deposited?

Mr. CARTER. I answer that it was not the intention that that should be done.

Mr. du PONT. It seems to me that that is a very important feature which ought to be covered by the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. That can be considered when the bill is open to amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I trust the Senator will bear in mind the point he makes, so that when the bill is taken up by sections for amendment attention may be given directly to that question.

Mr. BURKETT. While the Senator is on that point, I wish to say, although the whole matter is left very largely in detail to the Postmaster-General, that I have not observed anything in the bill that would preclude the Postmaster-General from making provision for the withdrawal of deposits in more than one office. It may not have been the intention of the Postmaster-General or of the committee in any of these recommendations, but certainly there is not anything in the bill to prevent the Postmaster-General from making any arrangement for withdrawal, whether it be wise or not.

Mr. CARTER. I shall be glad to consider that matter with the Senator when the Senator from Delaware [Mr. du PONT] presents his amendment. The whole subject can then be gone over with more profit than at present.

Before passing, I desire to make a suggestion in further reply to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. It appears from the face of the statement to be a great hardship to require a person to wait a few days after making an application for the return of a check from a central place where the accounts of the postal savings will be kept, but that is indispensable. Payment can not be made upon the mere showing of pass books. It would be perilous, as the Senator will perceive, to authorize postmasters all over the United States to pay upon the mere showing of a pass book. Such payment is not made at any bank save and except upon comparison of the entries contained in the pass book with the books of the bank.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And then only upon identification.

Mr. CARTER. And then identification, as the Senator from Michigan very aptly suggests, is another important matter. The hardship is not so great as compared with regular savings banks when we reflect that all the savings banks in every State reserve the right to demand thirty days' notice, and in some cases as much as ninety days' notice of the intention of the depositor to withdraw his deposit or any part of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is a rule of the bank, a by-law.

Mr. CARTER. Of course the law authorizes the rule, and the rule, or the by-law of the bank, may be changed from time to time.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is merely a contract.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; a contract between depositor and depositary.

Mr. HEYBURN. A contract between the depositor and the savings bank. When he deposits in a savings bank he does it under a contract that he will give so much notice.

Mr. CARTER. Whenever a depositor makes a deposit at a post-office he will be presumed to know the law under which he is making the deposit, and therefore will enter into a contract.

Mr. HEYBURN. Probably less than 5 per cent of them will.

Mr. CARTER. They will soon become very familiar with the general provisions of the law. It is believed that through the confidence inspired by absolute assurance of repayment, for which the faith and credit of the Government will be pledged, by the extension of facilities to the people, such as the extended arms of the Postal Service can supply, hundreds of millions of dollars now in hiding will soon be placed in active circulation to the great and enduring benefit of the whole country.

Those inclined to conjure up visions of difficulty and disaster will profit by studying the history of postal savings banks in England, extending over a period of more than forty-seven years, and then, for shorter periods of time, the experience of all the British colonies, together with Russia, Sweden, Austria, Belgium, Finland, France, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Japan, the Philippine Islands, and so forth, to the end of a most interesting chapter of unbroken success.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. It occurred to me to inquire, Mr. President, of the Senator from Montana whether or not anything except actual lawful money could be deposited in the postal savings banks?

Mr. CARTER. I can not conceive, Mr. President, that the Postmaster-General would authorize any postmaster to receive checks or bills of exchange of any kind or character. Money only would be receivable, of course.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I had supposed that was the intention of the bill, and it occurred to me that there are not many hundred million dollars of actual money in the United States. There is about 25 per cent, or probably 20 per cent, of the actual money that is in the pocket of somebody and not in any bank at all. About 75 per cent of the money would be available to do business in the postal savings banks, and when a man got his pay check at the end of the month, or the week, or the day, as the case might be, he would have to go to some bank and get the money for it before he could do business with the government postal savings bank. He would have to cash his check. I merely make these suggestions.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the law is that the officers of the United States commissioned and authorized to receive money are not now anywhere authorized to receive checks or substitutes for money save at their own peril, and in some instances, I believe, they are prohibited by law from receiving anybody's check.

It will be perceived that the banking power and activity of the respective countries have increased rather than diminished since the advent of the postal savings bank, and most meager reflection will convince any inquiring mind that such increase in banking power and activity is traceable to a system which, by establishing absolute confidence and extending broad facilities, has kept in active use all the available coin and currency of the respective jurisdictions.

In this country financial disaster has occurred periodically with distressing regularity since the foundation of the Government, and all observers and students agree that panic has generally been produced by widespread distrust and often by groundless fears, resulting in the sudden withdrawal of money from the banks. Merchants and large business operators are usually borrowers, through the banks, from the small depositors, and when the small depositors become frightened the bank reserves are quickly depleted by the withdrawal of money, which is straightway hidden and withheld until confidence is restored again. The interval between the loss and restoration of confidence is marked by liquidation and sacrifice. Allow these small frightened bank depositors to place their money in the postal savings banks, and thus insure its prompt return for services in the commercial world through the national banks, and you will, with almost unerring certainty, avert violent contraction of the circulation and the consequent results which follow.

It will not answer to say that the existence of postal depositories would be a menace rather than an aid in the presence of a financial scare, because if the post-office is not open to receive a deposit withdrawn from the bank the frightened owner of the money will in the future, as in the past, have recourse to a safety-deposit box or a hole in the ground.

The postal savings bank is not an innovation, nor is the opposition presented in any sense novel. From 1807 to 1861, the banking interests of England persistently urged substantially the same objections being urged by the committee of the American Bankers' Association to-day against the establishment of postal savings banks in the United Kingdom. This question precipitated one of the most stubbornly contested parliamentary battles ever waged in the British Parliament, and when finally in 1861 a bill providing for postal savings banks passed, under the leadership of Mr. Gladstone, the prophets of evil predicted dire disaster to banks, bankers, commerce, and trade, but none of these predictions were verified by experience, but on the contrary such satisfactory results obtained that to-day no British statesman can be found to question the wisdom of the adoption or the continuance of the system. In regular order every British colony established and is now maintaining postal savings banks. Belgium, the Netherlands, Austria-Hungary, Italy, France, Russia, Switzerland, Sweden, Japan, the Philippines, and the colonies to which I have referred have postal savings banks, and no backward step has ever been taken on this question by any country.

The United States and Germany alone of all of the great governments are without postal savings facilities. In Germany the need is not so keenly felt as here, because there they have a substitute in the form of the municipal savings banks, conducted under the direct supervision of the Government in the interest of the people in every considerable city and town in the Empire.

From the fears of those who believe that the passage of this bill will impair the credit or the banking power of the country I appeal to the experience of the people, the banks, and the governments of the mighty galaxy of great nations, through whose satisfactory experience the soundness of the postal savings bank system has been established beyond the shadow of a doubt.

For the convenience of Senators desiring to investigate the subject I will, with the permission of the Senate, insert in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, certain tables, statements, and letters bearing on the subject under consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

Mr. CARTER. As I stated in the beginning, Mr. President, a large majority of the American people, speaking through their usual channels of expression and by their votes cast at the November election, have commanded us, as their representatives, to enact a law establishing postal savings banks, and we are not at liberty to disregard that command. The measure is not partisan, because all parties stand committed to it; it is not sectional, because all sections are interested in and will be affected by it; nor will it be a burden on the Post-Office Department, because under the provisions of the bill the system will be more than self-sustaining. It is not class legislation, because its provisions will be available for all the people, and surely it will prove a special boon to struggling men, women, and children all over this broad land.

[The tables and letters referred to follow on next page.]

APPENDIX A.

Postal savings statistics.

Country, year of establishment, etc.	1907.	1906.	1905.	1904.	1903.	1902.	1901.	1900.	1899.	1898.
EUROPE.
Austria, 1883:
Deposits	$44,434,421	$43,019,788	$42,536,832	$39,937,633	$36,568,590	$32,870,084	$30,355,244	$28,599,030	$26,612,972	$24,076,951
Number of accounts	2,064,403	2,004,487	1,900,194	1,798,018	1,694,702	1,610,530	1,547,541	1,484,607	1,415,348	1,318,626
Average holding	$21.52	$21.46	$22.39	$22.21	$21.58	$20.40	$19.62	$19.26	$18.80	$18.26
Belgium, 1869:
Deposits	162,840,157	$156,733,934	$151,640,100	$147,452,000	$141,851,419	$140,986,500	$141,912,900	$127,669,500	$117,421,200	$109,006,400
Number of accounts	2,528,207	2,419,710	2,312,000	2,205,000	2,038,448	1,973,000	1,863,000	1,758,000	1,643,000	1,515,000
Average holding	$64.41	$64.77	$65.59	$66.87	$67.92	$71.46	$76.17	$70.98	$71.47	$71.95
Finland, 1887:
Deposits	(a)	$1,213,973	$1,004,488	$1,034,184	$981,280	$[illegible]65,367	$789,014	$720,013	$589,722	$509,536
Number of accounts	(a)	57,555	53,455	56,462	53,303	47,451	42,965	40,188	35,347	30,208
Average holding	(a)	$21.09	$18.79	$18.32	$18.34	$17.60	$18.36	$17.92	$16.68	$16.87
France, 1882:
Deposits	(a)	$258,374,735	$246,703,726	$229,158,291	$215,766,859	$213,603,320	$208,515,240	$194,989,796	$179,384,676	$168,879,128
Number of accounts	(a)	4,794,874	4,577,390	4,345,446	4,143,888	3,991,412	3,895,881	3,564,464	3,318,461	3,010,198
Average holding	(a)	$53.89	$53.90	$52.74	$52.07	$53.51	$54.78	$54.70	$54.08	$56.10
Hungary, 1886:
Deposits	$18,044,220	$15,903,796	$13,975,300	$12,457,866	$10,713,366	$10,309,416	$7,579,625	$6,632,944	$5,983,623	$5,368,784
Number of accounts	648,652	607,456	563,973	525,818	484,834	446,695	416,328	389,083	364,775	337,936
Average holding	$27.82	$26.28	$24.78	$23.69	$22.10	$23.08	$18.21	$17.05	$16.40	$15.89
Italy, 1876:
Deposits	$273,702,695	$233,735,421	$206,224,600	$194,278,656	$167,785,138	$156,248,204	$138,913,421	$131,652,255	$121,301,196	$110,072,639
Number of accounts	4,904,714	4,689,669	5,527,322	5,402,497	4,951,971	4,854,519	4,318,612	3,990,983	3,633,063	3,302,064
Average holding	$55.80	$49.84	$37.31	$35.96	$33.87	$32.19	$32.16	$32.99	$33.39	$33.33
Netherlands, 1881:
Deposits	$58,489,392	$56,153,000	$52,231,689	$48,414,706	$44,828,527	$40,839,011	$37,696,208	$34,048,200	$31,494,544	$28,144,884
Number of accounts	1,336,846	1,259,681	1,184,316	1,111,590	1,035,527	966,433	896,761	829,131	764,201	693,228
Average holding	$43.75	$44.58	$44.10	$43.55	$42.52	$42.26	$42.03	$41.06	$41.21	$40.60
Russia, 1889:
Deposits	[b]$130,721,935	$99,649,925	$88,613,475	$89,647,684	$88,425,386	$77,043,466	$67,441,000	$59,214,720	$52,003,765	$42,800,963
Number of accounts	(a)	1,488,432	1,413,448	1,469,910	1,337,680	1,163,310	1,018,735	897,618	757,770	653,470
Average holding	(a)	$66.95	$62.69	$60.99	$65.36	$66.23	$66.20	$65.97	$68.63	$65.47
Sweden, 1884:
Deposits	(a)	$14,498,185	$14,648,559	$14,849,881	$14,601,238	$14,449,594	$14,532,662	$15,131,653	[d]$16,062,354	$17,161,001
Number of accounts	(a)	569,155	567,032	570,203	570,686	577,627	573,800	566,805	[d] 556,544	535,305
Average holding	(a)	$25.47	$25.83	$26.04	$25.59	$25.01	$25.32	$26.70	[d] $28.86	$32.06
United Kingdom, 1861:
Deposits	$766,474,125	$759,156,704	$740,248,862	$721,893,466	$711,166,692	$703,720,660	$683,222,126	$659,652,347	$633,222,191	$599,280,758
Number of accounts	10,692,555	10,332,784	9,963,049	9,673,717	9,403,852	9,133,161	8,787,675	8,439,983	8,046,680	7,630,502
Average holding	$71.68	$73.47	$74.30	$74.62	$75.62	$77.05	$77.75	$78.16	$78.69	$78.53
NORTH AND SOUTH AMERICA.
Bahamas, 1885:
Deposits	(a)	$122,621	$114,027	$96,299	$93,933	$80,823	$79,976	$74,156	$63,600	$50,689
Number of accounts	(a)	1,971	1,864	1,700	1,610	1,489	1,421	1,350	1,240	1,107
Average holding	(a)	$62.21	$61.17	$56.65	$58.34	$54.61	$56.28	$54.93	$51.29	$45.79
Canada, 1868:
Deposits	$47,452,957	$45,736,489	$45,368,321	$45,419,706	$44,255,326	$42,320,209	$39,950,813	$37,507,456	$34,771,605	$34,489,938
Number of accounts	167,285	164,542	165,518	168,572	167,023	162,761	157,308	150,987	142,141	142,289
Average holding	$283.67	$277.96	$275.10	$269.44	$264.96	$260.01	$253.87	$248.81	$244.62	$242.47
British Guiana, 1889:
Deposits	(a)	$369,522	$324,075	$266,996	$263,506	$261,847	$238,327	$225,699	$212,252	$210,598
Number of accounts	(a)	11,192	9,966	9,158	9,189	8,678	8,202	8,263	7,853	7,225
Average holding	(a)	$33.01	$32.52	$29.15	$28.68	$30.17	$28.84	$27.31	$27.08	$29.15
Dutch Guiana, 1904:
Deposits	(a)	$261,405	$230,222	$205,876	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------
Number of accounts	(a)	6,525	5,785	4,967	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------
Average holding	(a)	$40.06	$39.80	$41.45	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------
ASIA.
British India, 1882:
Deposits	$47,902,582	$45,396,741	$43,496,821	$40,014,543	$37,055,287	$34,656,365	$32,583,673	$31,296,257	$35,010,220	$34,249,528
Number of accounts	1,190,220	1,115,758	1,058,813	987,635	922,353	866,693	816,651	785,729	783,559	755,426
Average holding	$40.25	$38.98	$41.08	$40.52	$40.17	$39.99	$39.90	$39.83	$44.68	$45.34
Ceylon, 1885:
Deposits	$683,890	$615,717	$567,147	$548,425	$518,318	$472,004	$426,782	$407,907	$378,957	$355,984
Number of accounts	71,018	66,949	63,850	60,884	58,121	57,007	54,426	51,837	48,816	46,133
Average holding	$9.67	$9.20	$8.88	$9.01	$8.92	$8.28	$7.84	$7.83	$7.76	$7.72
Straits Settlements, 1876:
Deposits	$339,855	$330,840	$317,208	$320,420	$331,482	$223,986	$227,169	$211,493	$204,044	$191,641
Number of accounts	(a)	3,571	3,310	3,109	3,078	2,951	2,745	2,504	2,404	2,244
Average holding	(a)	$92.65	$95.83	$103.06	$107.69	$75.90	$82.76	$84.46	$84.88	$85.45
Dutch East Indies, 1898:
Deposits	$2,845,860	$2,841,535	$2,643,050	$2,379,437	$1,920,370	$1,576,290	$1,367,540	$1,140,871	$836,710	[c] $308,200
Number of accounts	56,464	49,566	46,478	38,424	33,550	30,058	26,535	22,327	17,010	[c] 6,114
Average holding	$50.40	$57.33	$56.87	$61.83	$57.24	$52.44	$51.54	$51.10	$49.19	[c] $50.41
Formosa, 1875:
Deposits	$685,657	$552,408	$430,972	$141,340	$451,709	$380,230	$316,060	$321,323	$278,371	$241,935
Number of accounts	61,586	63,332	56,833	53,835	50,836	41,145	33,836	27,639	22,520	14,697
Average holding	$0.98	$8.72	$7.58	$8.20	$8.89	$9.24	$9.31	$11.61	$12.36	$16.46
Japan, 1875:
Deposits	$46,275,300	$33,713,037	$27,015,890	$20,582,387	$15,758,653	$15,167,047	$13,544,007	$11,984,688	$11,658,747	$10,940,327
Number of accounts	8,013,193	6,658,758	5,848,498	4,907,561	3,501,353	2,906,899	2,363,355	1,979,640	1,396,147	1,239,657
Average holding	$5.77	$5.06	$4.62	$4.19	$4.50	$5.30	$5.73	$6.03	$8.35	$8.91
The Philippines, 1906:
Deposits	$255,050	(a)	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------
Number of accounts	2,676	(a)	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------
Average holding	$111.77	(a)	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------	----------

[a] No report available. [b] June 30, 1908. [c] First year.

[d] Extract from an official report entitled "Post-Office Savings Bank of Sweden in 1899:"

"Whereas in each of the fifteen previous financial years the amount of deposits exceeded that of the withdrawals, in 1899, on the contrary, the latter exceeded the former by not less than 6,132,286 crowns (a crown being equal to 26.8 cents). This unfavorable result is due on the one hand to the fact that the rate of interest granted by private banks has been considerably increased during the year under review, and on the other hand to the fact that private banks now also accept small deposits on terms much more advantageous than those of the post-office savings bank, as they allow depositors to withdraw higher sums without giving notice in advance. Accordingly a number of depositors who had invested their savings in the post-office savings bank when the rate of interest was higher than in private banks withdrew their capital to invest in the latter banks."

Postal savings statistics—Continued.

Country, year of establishment, etc.	1907.	1906.	1905.	1904.	1903.	1902.	1901.	1900.	1899.	1898.
AFRICA.
Cape Colony, 1884:
Deposits	$10,722,984	$11,052,566	$11,062,093	$11,911,791	$12,401,837	$13,266,439	$12,218,628	$9,003,313	$8,440,252	$8,452,001
Number of accounts	101,553	100,699	98,328	99,421	95,590	92,413	82,753	70,812	62,356	58,953
Average holding	$105.50	$109.75	$112.20	$119.81	$129.74	$143.56	$147.65	$139.85	$135.36	$143.37
Egypt, 1901:
Deposits	$1,928,749	$1,581,613	$1,168,624	$889,147	$336,707	$425,541	$233,466
Number of accounts	74,178	59,084	31,411	29,151	20,199	13,295	6,740
Average holding	$26.00	$26.77	$37.20	$30.50	$31.52	$32.01	$34.64
Gold Coast, 1838:
Deposits	(a)	$62,369	$43,774	$34,095	$28,172	$25,890	$21,711	$21,685	$24,187	$24,371
Number of accounts	(a)	890	648	505	615	431	341	271	458	469
Average holding	(a)	$70.08	$67.55	$84.19	$45.81	$60.07	$63.67	$80.02	$52.81	$51.96
Orange River Colony, 1897:
Deposits	(a)	$771,340	$828,439	$764,916	$547,861	$327,842	(a)	(a)	$33,506	$95,865
Number of accounts	(a)	6,120	5,645	4,931	3,721	2,272	(a)	(a)	904	1,231
Average holding	(a)	$126.04	$146.76	$155.12	$147.23	$144.29	(a)	(a)	$37.03	$77.88
Sierra Leone, 1899:
Deposits	(a)	$334,840	$303,081	$302,268	$280,388	$240,026	$238,094	$238,079	$232,765	$210,739
Number of accounts	(a)	4,991	5,623	5,368	5,307	4,570	4,116	3,950	3,581	4,562
Average holding	(a)	$67.09	$53.90	$56.31	$52.83	$52.52	$57.84	$60.27	$65.00	$46.19
Transvaal, 1898:
Deposits	$6,548,844	$6,263,769	$5,224,635	$4,363,484	$3,298,859	$720,651	$537,539	$288,783	$345,312	$1,614,267
Number of accounts	51,022	47,092	40,844	35,059	27,940	12,020	11,515	9,672	9,945	12,544
Average holding	$128.35	$133.01	$127.94	$124.46	$118.07	$59.95	$46.68	$29.86	$34.72	$128.69
New South Wales, 1871:
Deposits	(a)	$43,232,288	$38,702,715	$36,377,370	$34,155,165	$34,552,676	$32,349,032	$29,421,019	$26,692,923	$24,459,365
Number of accounts	(a)	270,982	254,331	243,794	237,389	230,755	216,947	198,014	179,526	163,552
Average holding	(a)	$159.54	$152.17	$149.21	$143.88	$149.74	$149.11	$148.58	$148.69	$149.55
Tasmania, 1882:
Deposits	(a)	$2,336,173	$2,216,107	$2,007,971	$1,952,608	$1,840,690	$1,623,348	$1,432,226	$1,208,717	$909,928
Number of accounts	(a)	17,813	17,045	16,665	16,159	15,736	14,881	14,008	12,710	10,607
Average holding	(a)	$131.15	$130.02	$120.49	$120.84	$116.99	$109.09	$102.24	$95.10	$85.79
Western Australia, 1833:
Deposits	(a)	$11,271,598	$10,741,806	$10,121,167	$9,677,644	$9,193,218	$7,875,744	$6,322,284	$5,431,880	$5,217,270
Number of accounts	(a)	63,574	59,764	54,873	48,008	45,108	39,318	33,646	29,371	29,791
Average holding	(a)	$177.30	$179.74	$184.45	$201.58	$203.80	$200.31	$187.91	$184.94	$175.13
New Zealand, 1867:
Deposits	$53,077,799	$48,437,564	$42,153,735	$37,770,766	$35,957,021	$33,499,950	$30,902,343	$28,272,185	$25,891,585	$24,123,993
Number of accounts	319,733	298,746	276,066	259,164	243,675	227,465	212,436	197,408	183,046	169,968
Average holding	$175.39	$162.14	$152.69	$145.75	$146.56	$147.28	$145.47	$143.22	$141.45	$141.95

(a) No report available.

APPENDIX B.

LETTER OF SYDNEY BUXTON, OF THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE, LONDON.

NOVEMBER 13, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. MEYER: I duly received your letter of the 3d of October about post-office savings banks, and I have much pleasure in supplying you with some particulars of the British system.

I may say at the outset that the assertion to which you refer, that the post-office savings bank has been a failure in the United Kingdom and that the expense is a drain upon the Government, is quite misleading. As you will see from the profit and loss statement which I inclose, the bank has paid into the exchequer since 1876 a net gain of £1,117,381.

The deficiency during the years 1896–1899 was due to a rapid increase in the price of consols, and when the price dropped in 1900 the balance of the year's business was again in favor of the State. It so continued until 1903, when the rate of interest on the nominal value of consols was reduced to 2½ per cent, the same rate which the bank was paying and still continues to pay to its customers.

It must be remembered that although consols, at their present price, can be bought to yield more than 2½ per cent, a great part of the savings-bank money was invested when the price was a long way above par and the stock was a 2¾ per cent stock.

The change in the rate of interest had of course a considerable effect on the finances of the bank, and the expenses of management have each year since exceeded the margin of profit accruing to the Government, but the deficit could be put an end to at any time, if the Government so desired, by a slight reduction in the rate of interest allowed to depositors or even by some modification of the period during which money must remain undisturbed in the bank in order to earn interest.

Your proposal to pay depositors 2 per cent only, while you receive from the national banks 2½ per cent, certainly has the appearance of a scheme which ought, as you say, to "board itself," especially if the usual savings-bank practice of not allowing interest on broken amounts or on amounts left on deposit for less than a fixed minimum period is adopted.

I send you copies of the annual accounts of the British post-office savings bank for the last seven years and also a copy of the report of a select committee of the House of Commons appointed in 1902 to inquire into the general conditions of savings-bank funds in the United Kingdom. Perhaps you may find some details which will be of use to you in the evidence taken before the committee and in the report itself, which deals as much with private (trustee) savings banks as with the post-office savings bank.

I need hardly add that I shall be happy to give you any further particulars which you may wish to have about our system here.

Believe me, sincerely, yours,

SYDNEY BUXTON.

HON. G. VON L. MEYER.

Post-office savings bank.

	Loss.	Gain.
	£	£
1876		126,279
1877		147,116
1878		77,787
1879		125,345

Post-office savings bank—Continued.

	Loss.	Gain.
	£	£
1880		144,879
1881		145,799
1882		123,139
1883		93,794
1884		93,040
1885		64,608
1886		67,001
1887		78,805
1888		72,495
1889		36,050
1890		65,662
1891		51,117
1892		29,922
1893		35,100
1894		3,836
1895		16,983
1896	6,162
1897	9,231
1898	7,019
1899	11,711
1900		10,465
1901		26,177
1902		29,809
1903	107,403
1904	112,090
1905	88,094
1906	119,870
1907	83,247
	547,827	1,665,208
Net gain		1,117,381

APPENDIX C.

HONOLULU CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Honolulu, Hawaii, November 27, 1908.

HON. GEORGE VON LENGERKE MEYER,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith find copy of a report submitted to the trustees of the Honolulu Chamber of Commerce by its committee on commerce, manufacture, and agriculture at the last meeting of the board. Upon motion, duly made and carried, the report was adopted and the recommendations therein contained approved.

Yours, very truly,

H. P. WOOD, Secretary.

HONOLULU, HAWAII, November 4, 1908.

To the president and trustees of the Honolulu Chamber of Commerce, Honolulu.

GENTLEMEN: On September 10 this committee was requested by your president to look into the suggestion made by Mr. J. G. Pratt, postmaster, that your chamber pass resolutions favoring the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, in regard to establishing postal savings banks and extending the parcel-post system.

Since said request was issued the subcommittee on postal laws and transportation of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, held at San Francisco last month, brought forward a resolution recommending, for stated reasons, the disapproval by the congress of the proposal to increase the limit of packages by mail. The recommendation was supported by a vote of 140 to 60, the Hawaiian delegate voting with the majority. Under these circumstances it seems unnecessary for your committee to take any action on Mr. Pratt's suggestion so far as parcel post is concerned.

Regarding postal savings depositories, your committee believes that the establishment of branch postal savings banks in country post-offices throughout these islands would do much to promote thrift among our poorer classes, as it would afford them an opportunity of placing in a safe place their money (from 10 cents upward), for which they had no immediate use; and as many country post-offices are in the immediate vicinity of the plantation offices from which large sums are paid out in wages, a fairly good business would no doubt be done in many such branch postal savings banks.

At present Japanese laborers send large amounts of their savings by postal orders to Japan. If confidence was established among these people—which it would be as soon as they fully realized that the local post-office was as safe a depository as though it were the Treasury of the United States itself—it is quite possible that they would not send their money away in such quantities and would keep it more in the country. If the establishment of country postal savings bank had this effect, it would be a good thing for our Territory.

Since the abolishment of the government postal savings bank, which flourished before annexation, the four local American banks and the Japanese bank have established savings departments, so the needs of the city of Honolulu seem to be well provided for in the way of savings depositories; but the country districts are not provided for except in certain centers not always readily accessible to wage-earners.

It is quite clear to your committee that the general principle of postal savings depositories is an excellent one; and although it is hardly probable that any recommendation from your chamber will have effect in either precipitating or retarding legislation on a matter of such importance, your committee believes it would be proper for your chamber to lend its support to the measure as set forth in the Senate bill 6484, Sixtieth Congress, first session, entitled "A bill to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes."

In this bill the rate of interest which it is provided shall be allowed depositors is 2 per cent per annum; and as this is considerably less rate than that which is allowed by the private banks in this city, there would be little chance of the postal savings bank competing to the disadvantage of the private banks. On the other hand, the probability is it might act as a feeder for these private banks.

We are, gentlemen, yours, respectfully,

F. M. SWANZY,
E. D. TENNEY,
Committee on Commerce, Manufacture, and Agriculture.

Mr. Richard Ivers, the third member of this committee, is absent from the Territory.

APPENDIX D.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1908.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am sending you herewith interesting extracts relating to the postal savings banks of other countries.

I shall endeavor to demonstrate herein that large numbers of immigrants to our country systematically bank their savings in the postal savings depositories of their native countries. Figures for Italy alone are given, but the practice is by no means confined to arrivals from that country. American bankers certainly can not get this business, except, perhaps, through the agency of the postal savings bank, nor are they likely to reach the hosts of school children and very poor people who would delight in the opportunities which could be given them by a wisely planned system of postal savings depositories. Furthermore, the experience of other nations has shown that well-managed private savings institutions have nothing to fear from a conservatively conducted postal savings system.

The following is summarized from a book on the Italian post-office savings bank, by Alberto Gaviani, published in 1902:

"Measures must be taken to induce the numerous Italians abroad to invest their savings in the Italian post-office savings bank. The steps taken in this direction are insufficient. Small savings banks must be opened abroad, these banks to be managed free by honorable and solvent Italians and placed under the supervision of the nearest Italian consul or of the manager of the nearest branch of the Bank of Naples, as this bank is already authorized now by the Government to collect the savings of Italians abroad and invest them in the domestic post-office savings bank."

During the last fiscal year 488,564 money orders were sent to Italy from this country, amounting to $21,292,938.57, an increase of $2,306,418.96 over the previous year. The foregoing, however, sufficiently shows that these form but a small part of the total amount sent out of the country annually by Italian residents of the United States.

I have on my desk a paper published in the Swedish language at Chicago. Prominently displayed therein is an advertisement of the Swedish postal savings bank, and throughout its columns not less than 50 displayed advertisements of private Swedish banks appear. These advertisements indicate that a considerable business is transacted with Swedish banks by the Swedish element of our population.

The following is part of a reading before a scientific society of Paris, April 16, 1898, by Mr. A. de Malarce, political economist:

"It is worth mentioning in this connection that in a good many of the aforesaid countries the other well-administered savings banks have not ceased to prosper and to show steady progress especially among the town populations; for instance, in France, where the number of clients of private savings banks has risen from 4,199,228 to over six and one-half millions since the opening of the post-office savings bank in 1882."

In Hungary, out of depositors to the number of 389,083, 95,351 are shown to be school children and 23,014 domestic servants.

I take pleasure in forwarding to you under separate cover a copy of the last annual report of the Secretary of War, just issued, on page 67, of which reference is made to the postal savings banks of the Philippine Islands.

Believe me, faithfully, yours, G. V. L. MEYER.

Hon. THOMAS H. CARTER,
United States Senate.

[From L'Union Postale, July, 1899.]

HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE POST-OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS.

On April 16, 1898, Mr. A. de Malarce, the political economist well known to our readers, and at the same time the indefatigable champion of benevolent institutions, read at the academie des sciences morales et politiques in Paris the first chapter of his work "Histoire generale des Caisses d'epargne," the material for which he had gathered on his travels and official missions. This lecture contains in brief exposition such a series of interesting information on the origin and development of the post-office savings banks that we feel impelled to bring before our readers the most important features of it.

The first idea of using the post-office as a savings institution for the benefit of the people at large dates, according to the inquiries of Mr. de Malarce, as far back as the year 1807. In that year a member of the British Parliament, Mr. Whitbread, laid before the House of Commons a bill the object of which was to improve the condition of the lower classes of the population by means of self-help and not alms. In a noteworthy speech which kept the audience in rapt attention for three consecutive hours, he gave a detailed account of his scheme for a general savings bank to be worked by the post-offices of the Kingdom. Mr. Whitbread was unlucky with his well-thought-out and far-seeing scheme. The most influential newspapers were against the bill, and even one of the most renowned magazines covered the idea with scorn. At the close of the session the bill was rejected. Great Britain possessed at that time two savings banks only, one at Tottenham, opened in 1798, and the other at Wendover, opened in 1799. Both were private, local, and limited institutions, the moral, economical, and social importance of which was even put into question. In 1807 there were throughout the civilized world but eleven savings banks, viz, in Hamburg, the first to exist, opened in 1778; Oldenburg, opened in 1786; Berne, opened in 1787; Coire, opened in 1790; Kiel, opened in 1796; Tottenham, opened in 1798; Wendover, opened in 1799; Gottingen and Altona, opened in 1801; Zurich, opened in 1805; Lauf, in Central Franconio, opened in 1806.

People in England were the more inclined to call Mr. Whitbread's idea of connecting the little-known saving-bank system with the post a strange project, since in 1807 the English post only transacted letter-post business. The money-order service, which in 1859 was made a chief argument for the establishment of a post-office savings bank, did not exist at that time. The transmission of money by means of orders had been effected since 1792 by a private enterprise unconnected with the post, and it was not until the 6th of December, 1838, that this service was organized and made a branch of the post-office.

It was not until fifty-two years later, in 1859, that the plan of Mr. Whitbread, M. P., was resuscitated. Charles W. Sikes, a bookkeeper of the Joint Stock Bank, at Huddersfield (Yorkshire), who had been studying popular institutions for a long time, presented the then chancellor of the exchequer, W. E. Gladstone, with a memorial in which he showed by proofs the incontestible usefulness and success of the money-order service which had been worked by the State for twenty years, the great practicalness of a savings bank managed by the post-office, and especially pointed out that deposits made to the post-office were nothing else than money-orders drawn by a private person on the postmaster-general, and withdrawals of deposits nothing more than money-orders drawn by the postmaster-general on a private person.

Mr. Sikes further added that from the promulgation of the organic law of 1817 on the savings banks the number of these institutions had, it is true, increased in England to 625 and their participants to over one and one-half millions, but that they had not come within the reach of country people. The latter object could be attained by post-offices only. From the very moment the latter were authorized to receive deposits every workman in the United Kingdom would be able to make use of the savings bank.

Mr. Sikes's plan, fortunately, met with the approval of the English postal reformer, Mr. Rowland Hill, who had been appointed general secretary of the post-office for life by Sir Robert Peel. Thanks to the valuable support of this eminent man, both Government and Parliament decided in favor of the establishment of a post-office savings bank.

The bill presented and eloquently supported by Mr. W. E. Gladstone was passed and became law on May 17, 1861. On September 1, 1861, the British post-office savings bank came into operation.

The institution at once took a firm hold in the British colonies—i. e., in western Australia in 1863, Victoria in 1865, New Zealand in 1867, Canada in 1868, New South Wales in 1871, South Australia in 1872, Queensland in 1872, British India in 1882, Tasmania in 1882, Cape Colony in 1884, Ceylon in 1885, Bahama Islands in 1886, Jamaica in 1888, British Guiana in 1889; as also in Belgium in 1870, through Mr. Frere-Orban, minister of the Government; in Japan in 1875; in Italy in 1875, through Deputy Quintino Sella, former minister of finance, and Prime Minister Marco Minghetti; in the Netherlands in 1881, through Deputy Bruyn Kops; in France in 1882, upon the proposal of Deputy Arthur Legrand and the bill of Adolphe Cochery, minister for the post; in Austria in 1883, through Otto Haussner, member of the Reichsrath; in Sweden in 1884, through Mr. Themptander, then minister of finance and later prime minister; in Hungary in 1886; in Hawaii in 1886; in Finland in 1887; in the other parts of Russia in 1889; in the South African Republic in 1893; in Bulgaria in 1896.

Post-office savings banks now exist in 11 European states, in 14 British colonies, in 2 French colonies, in Japan, Hawaii, and the South African Republic—i. e., in 30 countries of the civilized world. The total number of depositors amounts to over 21,000,000.

It is worth mentioning in this connection that in a good many of the aforesaid countries the other well-administered savings banks have not ceased to prosper and to show steady progress, especially among the town populations, for instance, in France, where the number of clients of private savings banks has risen from 4,199,228 to over six and one-half millions since the opening of the post-office savings bank in 1882.

[From L'Union Postale, August, 1899.]

The organizations of the 30 post-office savings banks of the world have many features in common. For instance, in the majority of these countries the smallest deposit is 1 franc or 1½ francs, according to the currency. In the Netherlands it is one-fourth gulden, or 52 centimes, in British India 4 annas, or 60 centimes, in Victoria one-half shilling, or 62 centimes.

It is, however, almost everywhere permitted to deposit in the post-office savings banks sums of 10 and even 5 centimes, consisting of postage stamps, by means of the so-called "savings cards" introduced into England in 1881 by Postmaster-General Henry Fawcett.

In two countries the minimum amount of a deposit is surprisingly high, viz, in Japan, where it is fixed at 1 yen, or 5 francs 10 centimes, and in Canada, at $1, or 5 francs 18 centimes.

The highest sum which can be invested by one and the same person in a post-office savings bank differs very much in the various countries. It amounts to 1,500 francs in France (2,000 from 1882 to 1895), 2,500 in Austria-Hungary and British India, 4,000 in Russia, 5,000 in England and Canada, 25,000 in Victoria.

In a great number of countries the lawful maximum of a deposit is fixed by the post-office according to circumstances. The rate of interest is also fixed accordingly; the interest in some countries ceases to be added to the capital as soon as the deposits exceed a certain sum, for instance, in Sweden for a deposit of more than 1,400 francs, in the Netherlands for more than 1,650 francs, in Italy for more than 2,000 francs, in Victoria for more than 6,250 francs, in New Zealand for more than 12,500 francs.

A comparison between the sums invested in the post-office savings banks can not be made on account of the variety existing in the maximum amounts allowed for deposits; a comparison is only possible on the basis of the number of depositors and deposit books. The British post-office savings bank has the greatest number of clients, 6,862,035; next comes the Italian with 3,013,004 depositors, the French with 2,892,307, the Austrian (Hungary not included) with 1,241,562.

The rate of interest of the post-office savings banks is, as a rule, fixed according to the rates of interest of the safest investments. It amounts in England and France to 2.5 per cent; in the Netherlands to 2.64 per cent; in Austria and Finland to 3 per cent; in Hungary and Sweden to 3.6 per cent; in Belgium to 3 per cent for deposits not exceeding 3,000 francs in amount and 2 per cent only for deposits exceeding that sum; in Italy to 3.25 per cent; in the British colonies to 3.50 to 3.75 per cent, except Canada, where the rate of interest is 4 per cent, and Victoria as much as 5 per cent; in Russia 4 per cent up to the year 1895, and 3.6 per cent from that year.

Almost all the laws made for post-office savings banks contain the stipulation, in force in France since 1845 for all savings banks without exception, that government stocks for depositors may be bought cost free through the medium of savings banks.

This legal stipulation is of great value and has contributed immensely in France, where it has been in force for more than half a century, to the purchase of government stocks by the lower classes.

The benevolent institution of the post-office savings bank only made its way in France after long and hard struggles.

The attention of French statesmen and heads of administrations was for the first time drawn to the success of post-office savings banks when Mr. A. de Malarce, who had been sent abroad in 1865 by the French minister for commerce to study the foreign benevolent institutions, reported on the usefulness of the English post-office savings bank. In 1869 the idea of the adoption of a similar institution on French soil found a quite unexpected supporter in the person of Mr. Agathon Prevost, the director of the Paris Savings Bank, who was regarded as the greatest authority in France on savings-bank questions. Having returned from a journey to England, where he had studied the post-office savings-bank system, that gentleman not only abandoned his original objections against the union of a savings bank with the post, but became even a convinced friend and promoter of post-office savings banks. Petitions for the foundation of a post-office savings bank in France were then sent to the Senate, and its committee, after a first refusal, finally decided, at the proposal of their reporter, Mr. E. de Parieu, vice-president of the council of state, that at every place where there was no receiving office of the savings bank tax collectors and postmasters should be bound to act as agents for savings banks. The war of 1870–71 interrupted the negotiations.

In June, 1872, the Revue des Deux-Mondes contained an article from the pen of Mr. de Malarce, in which, referring to a crisis in French savings banks in the year 1870, the proposal was renewed of making use of the post and tax offices for savings-bank purposes in so far as the latter should require their assistance. This proposal, which was at last accepted by the legislative bodies and sanctioned by a decree of August 23, 1875, was much less effective than the resolution passed by the committee of the Senate in 1869. The mover of the proposal had wisely reflected on the necessity of this restriction. Since he had been studying the question he had come to the conviction that a bill for the direct foundation of a post-office savings bank in France would have little chance of being passed by the legislative powers. Mr. de Malarce therefore considered it advisable to attain his end, so to say, in a roundabout manner, and for this purpose to propose a less radical measure. He thus addressed the parliamentary commission at Versailles:

"If the majority of the savings banks accept the postal service offered them, much good will result to the working classes and thrifty country people. Should the savings banks decline the cooperation of the post-office, one would be justified in retorting: 'Since you will not have the services of the post-office, nothing can at least hinder the post-office from offering its services to that part of the population which is distant from the great center of traffic and unable to make use of the usual savings banks.' The State will thus call into life a post-office savings bank on the excellent English model."

The second of these assumptions was realized. In 1878 it was proved clearly that until that date the savings banks had made no use of the post-office. The question was brought forward at the Paris Universal Congress for Beneficent Institutions, at which Mr. de Malarce energetically proposed the immediate foundation of a French post-office savings bank.

Deputy Arthur Legrand introduced to the Chamber a bill, based on Mr. Malarce's work, for the foundation of a post-office savings bank, which was followed in 1880 by a bill introduced by Mr. Adolphe Cochery, minister for posts. In the debates on this bill by the committee of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate the opposition of those deputies and senators who, as directors of private savings banks, would not hear of such a thing as the foundation of a government savings bank, was rendered futile by the simple fact that the private savings banks had made no use of the assistance of the post-office offered in 1875, and that they, in consequence, had no right to oppose the foundation of a post-office savings bank.

The directors of private savings banks were at the same time obliged to acknowledge the economical and social value of post-office savings banks. The bill was passed on April 9, 1881, and became law on January 1, 1882. Its beneficent results have already been spoken of in a former paragraph.

We will give in conclusion the judgment of Mr. W. E. Gladstone, the statesman to whom belongs the honor of having first cleared the way for the post-office savings bank.

Speaking in the House of Commons in the year 1888, Mr. Gladstone said, amid the applause of all parties, "The post-office savings bank is the most important institution which has been created in the last fifty years for the welfare of the people and the state. I consider the act of 1861, which called the institution into existence, as the most useful and fruitful of my long career."

Charles Sikes, from whom the proposal for the founding of post-office savings banks first emanated, was knighted in 1881 on the proposal of Mr. Gladstone, then premier. Soon afterwards he was appointed deputy lieutenant of the county of York, and by means of public subscriptions a considerable national gift was made him.

[From L'Union Postale for 1905, p. 29.]

FRANCE.

With respect to the ship savings banks, the report states that every sailor on board, either officer or seaman, may, at the post-office savings bank on board his ship, invest part of his pay, withdraw the balance standing to his credit either partly or entirely, send money to his family, or buy stocks. He may also receive money from France, the necessary measures having been taken to enable any person to invest at a post-office any sum whatever in favor of the owner of a deposit book of the naval series. In 1904 the transactions connected with the ship savings banks amounted to 39,618 deposits for 2,168,937.54 francs, and 16,305 withdrawals for 1,607,944 francs. On December 31 the number of accounts of the naval series amounted to 19,601, with a total balance to their credit of 2,233,572.27 francs.

[See L'Union Postale for 1890, No. 3, pp. 40–51.]

THE FRENCH NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK (POST-OFFICE) IN 1892.

From the report dated November 1, 1893, on the results of the National (Post-Office) Savings Bank in the year 1892, presented by the French minister of commerce, industry, and the colonies to the President of the Republic, we extract the following particulars of general interest:

The report announces that the business done in the National Savings Bank in 1892 exceeds considerably that of the preceding years, and has given proof of the vitality of the institution in all parts of the country. Since the period mentioned, namely, in the early part of 1893, a temporary crisis has, it is true, taken place, the origin of which must be sought solely in the political state of affairs, since, on the one hand, the absolute guaranty which the national bank offers its depositors has in no way altered, and, on the other hand, because the reduction of interest, which was considered necessary, had been foreseen and announced long before.

But, remarks the report further, if unfounded and vehement attacks were able for a time to disquiet certain minds, this unwarranted and unjustifiable uneasiness soon disappeared. Since several months the deposits again exceed the withdrawals, business is gradually increasing in all departments, and the situation has become normal. There is, therefore, no cause for uneasiness as to the future of the post-office savings bank.

[From L'Union Postale, March, 1894.]

FRANCE.

In the international service an agreement (of the 31st of May, 1882) exists with Belgium according to which depositors in the French National Savings Bank who have removed to Belgium can demand the transfer of their book, free of charge, to the Belgian Caisse generale de'epargne et de retraite.

Depositors are also permitted, in anticipation of their return to France, to retain their French book, and during their sojourn in Belgium to withdraw their savings, partly or entirely, through the medium of the Belgian post-offices.

The same privileges are enjoyed in France by the possessors of Belgian books.

[From L'Union Postale, September, 1894.]

AUSTRIA.

If the depositors are classed according to social position and profession, the largest participation is by children, school children, and students, who form 44 (1890, 48) per cent of all the depositors, which agrees with the above-mentioned preponderance of depositors below the age of 30. Artisans and laborers, with 14.3 (1890, 13) per cent, are more numerously represented than any other calling. Domestic servants, also with 8 per cent (as in 1890), form a not inconsiderable fraction of the clientele of the savings bank. Four and five-tenths per cent of the deposit books belong to married women and widows; 2.1 per cent of the depositors are military men. State and parochial officers represent 1.5 per cent. The remaining 25.6 per cent are distributed among the members of a great variety of professions and callings, none of which, however, are especially predominant.

These statistics prove that the savings bank finds special favor with the young. The number of children and school children who in 1893 made request for deposit books was 54,713.

Of the above-mentioned books issued to youthful depositors, 432,839 were still in use at the end of 1893. The percentage among these books of accounts closed (39 per cent) is less than the usual percentage of accounts closed (46 per cent), a fact which shows the favorable influence which the impulse to save given in youth exerts in promoting constant habits of saving. The gratifying participation of youthful depositors, which gives promise of good results in the future, is ascribed in no small degree to the thankworthy efforts of the teachers and post-office officials, namely, the rural letter carriers collect deposits when on their rounds. In 1893 they collected 42,452 separate sums, with a total value of 1,294,041.60 florins; in 1890, 27,762 sums, value 962,376 florins.

[See the Union Postale for 1902, p. 68.]

HUNGARY.

With respect to the professions, the depositors are distributed as follows:

Profession.	Number.
Clerks and soldiers	45,780
Clergymen, professors, teachers, authors, etc	14,250
Agriculture and forests:
(a) Owners	5,674
(b) Clerks, farmers, and workmen	13,951
Industry:
(a) Manufacturers	394
(b) Employees and factory hands	8,281
Artisans:
(a) Masters	35,688
(b) Employees and workmen	36,716
Commerce:
(a) Managers	9,169
(b) Employees and workmen	11,126
Independent persons	11,768
Domestic servants	23,014
Day laborers	9,776
Other vocations	58,940
School children	64,473
Other children	30,878
Corporations	9,205
Total	389,083

APPENDIX E.

[Extracts from the platforms of political parties re postal savings banks.]

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

We favor the establishment of a postal savings-bank system for the convenience of the people and the encouragement of thrift.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

We favor a postal savings bank if the guaranteed bank can not be secured, and that it be constituted so as to keep the deposited money in the communities where it is established. But we condemn the policy of the Republican party in proposing postal savings banks under a plan of conduct by which they will aggregate the deposits of rural communities and redeposit the same, while under government charge, in the hands of Wall Street, thus depleting the circulating medium of the producing regions, and unjustly favoring the speculative markets.

THE INDEPENDENCE LEAGUE.

The Independence League advocates the establishment of the parcels post and government postal savings banks where the people's deposits will be secure.

[From the Boston Morning Globe of January 13, 1908.]

Ex-Governor N. J. Bachelder, of New Hampshire, master of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, is in Washington to urge upon Congress the legislation advocated by Postmaster-General Meyer for the establishment of a parcels post and savings banks and also for a liberal appropriation for improvement of industrial highways.

* * * * * * *

"We believe," said Mr. Bachelder, "that the Government could afford to pay depositors in the postal savings banks interest at the rate of 2 per cent. The money received by these banks could be redeposited in national banks and secured in the same way that national-bank notes or government deposits are secured, the banks paying, perhaps, the same rate of 2 per cent. We do not think the Government should go into the general banking business, of course, and the plan of postal savings banks should not contemplate that the Government would make any money out of it. This is the simplest, and would be the most popular way of having the Government guarantee bank deposits. Within a few years the people would wonder how they ever got along without these banks, just as they marvel how they ever did without rural free delivery."

[From the Washington Post of November 12, 1908.]

Grand master of the National Grange, former Governor Bachelder, of New Hampshire, at the opening session of the grange yesterday made a strong appeal for the parcels post, postal savings banks, and the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people. Grand Master Bachelder also spoke of the importance of good roads and automobile legislation.

In relation to postal savings banks he said:

"The unusual financial conditions which prevailed during five or six months at the end of 1907 and the beginning of this year, when banks in all sections of the country either failed or suspended cash payments, served to direct public attention to the necessity for reforms in our banking system and to show the importance of the grange proposition for postal savings banks.

HOPES FOR LAW.

"That a method by which the savings of the people can be deposited in the post-offices of the country with absolute security, drawing approximately the same rate of interest realized on government bonds, will be of great advantage to the farmers in districts remote from banking institutions is self-evident. The enactment of legislation providing for this extension of the post-office will be actively urged upon Congress at the coming session by the Postmaster-General, and in view of the favorable attitude of prominent Senators and Representatives of both political parties a bill for this purpose assuredly will become law in the near future."

[From the Baltimore News of November 9, 1908.]

* * * * * * *

NEEDS OF RURAL LIFE.

Secretary Allen sent 600,000 circulars to persons of all classes making inquiries which would assist the commission in its work. Of these, 40,000 went to rural free-delivery carriers and 50,000 to country ministers and physicians. He has received 60,000 of these circulars properly filled out. The answers indicate that the most essential needs of the rural districts are—

1. Better school and educational facilities.
2. Good roads under individual state laws.
3. Cooperative organization of farmers to fix the prices of the products in market.
4. A parcels-post system to reach the same territory contemplated in rural free delivery.
5. A postal savings bank which will give government guaranty to small savings of farmers.
6. General sanitary supervision, which will increase the comforts of living and reduce physical menaces.

[From the Philadelphia North American of November 18, 1908.]

WASHINGTON, November 17.

Progress throughout the country in lines of agricultural activity was reflected in to-day's sessions of the National Grange, the Society for the Promotion of Agricultural Science, and the Association of Farmers' Institute Workers.

The members of these organizations also held a joint meeting with the President's country life commission.

The meeting developed that among the farmers' paramount needs were the parcels post and postal savings banks. The economic handling of farm products, the inability of the farmer to obtain money as easily as the manufacturer, and other problems were discussed. Proposed legislation for the parcels post and postal savings bank received hearty indorsement, and committees were appointed to urge the passage of such bills before Congress.

APPENDIX F.

Data relating to the postal savings banks of foreign countries.

Country.	Rate of interest.	Minimum deposit.	Maximum drawing interest.	Maximum of one account.
EUROPE.
Austria	3 per cent	[a] $0.203	$406.00	$406.00
Belgium	3 per cent up to $386; 2 per cent on excess	.193	No limit.	[b] No limit.
Bulgaria	4 per cent	.193	Individuals 386.00; Institutions 965.00	Individuals 386.00; Institutions 965.00
France	2½ per cent	.193	Individuals 289.50; Institutions 2,895.00	Individuals 289.50; Institutions 2,895.00
Hungary	3 per cent	.203	Individuals 812.00; Institutions 1,624.00	Individuals 812.00; Institutions 1,624.00
Italy	2.04 per cent [c]	.193	386.00	No limit.
Netherlands	2.64 per cent	[a] .1005	Individuals 482.40; Institutions 964.80	Individuals 482.40; Institutions 964.80
Sweden	3.6 per cent	.268	536.00	536.00
United Kingdom	2½ per cent	.243	[d] 973.30	973.30
NORTH AND SOUTH AMERICA.
Bahamas	2½ per cent	.243	973.30	973.30
British Guiana	2.40 per cent	(f)	1,500.00	1,500.00
Canada	3 per cent	1.00	[e] 3,000.00	3,000.00

[a] This may consist of stamps of small denominations.
[b] Not more than $965 may be deposited in any period of two weeks by one person.
[c] In 1905. From 1876 to 1878 the interest rate was 3 per cent; 1879 to 1886, 3½ per cent; 1887 to 1895, 3¾ per cent; 1896 and 1897, 3 per cent; 1898 to 1901, 2.88 per cent; 1902 to 1904, 2.76 per cent.
[d] Not more than $243.32 may be deposited in any one year by any person.
[e] Not more than $1,000 may be deposited in any one year by any person.
[f] Minimum deposit not stated. The smallest amount upon which interest is paid is $5.

Data relating to the postal savings banks of foreign countries—Continued.

Country.	Rate of interest.	Minimum deposit.	Maximum drawing interest.	Maximum of one account.
ASIA.
British India	3 per cent and 3½ per cent [a]	$0.081	{ Adults $648.86 / Minors 324.43	Adults $1,622.16 / [b] Minors 1,297.73
Ceylon	2.4 per cent	.507	648.86	[c]
Straits Settlements	3 per cent	.487	731.27	731.27
Dutch East Indies	2.4 per cent	.1005	964.80	964.80
Japan	4.8 per cent	.05	249.00	[d]
AFRICA.
Cape Colony	3 per cent	.243	2,919.90	2,919.90
Egypt	2½ per cent	{Initial .989 / Later .247	988.60	988.60
Orange River Colony	3 per cent	.243	2,433.25	2,919.90
Sierra Leone	2½ per cent	.243	2,433.25	2,433.25
Transvaal	3½ per cent	.243	2,433.25	2,919.90
AUSTRALASIA.
New South Wales	3 per cent	.243	2,433.25	Not given.
New Zealand	3½ per cent up to $1,459.95 / 3 per cent on excess	.243	2,433.25	2,919.90

[a] Interest at the rate of 3 per cent is paid on deposits "at call;" at the rate of 3½ per cent on those requiring six months' notice of withdrawal.
[b] Not more than $389.32 may be deposited in any one year by one person.
[c] $324.43 yearly, or $973.30 in all, may be deposited by one person for investment in government bonds.
[d] Should more than $249 be deposited, the excess is invested in government bonds.

APPENDIX G.

Data relating to the postal savings banks of foreign countries.

EUROPE.

Austria.—The rate of interest may not exceed 3 per cent, and is declared every year by the minister of commerce. The minimum deposit accepted is 1 crown, which may be made up of postage stamps of small denominations. No interest is paid on any sum less than 2 crowns nor over 2,000 crowns. The maximum amount which may be deposited to the credit of any one account is 2,000 crowns. The rate of interest has been 3 per cent for some years past.

Belgium.—Three per cent interest is paid on accounts amounting to 2,000 francs or less, and 2 per cent on all sums in excess of 2,000 francs. The minimum deposit accepted is 1 franc, and not more than 5,000 francs may be deposited in any fortnightly (two weeks') period. If the restrictions shown be complied with, there is no limit to which an account may grow.

Bulgaria.—Four per cent interest is paid. The minimum deposit accepted is 1 franc. No account of an individual may grow beyond 2,000 francs; and of an institution beyond 5,000 francs, but full interest is paid up to the amounts stated.

France.—The rate of interest is fixed jointly by the minister of commerce and the minister of finance, and has been 2½ per cent for some years past. The minimum deposit is 1 franc. Not more than 1,500 francs may be deposited in any one year, and no more than that sum will be allowed to be deposited to the credit of any account of an individual. Beneficent institutions, however, may deposit 15,000 francs in any one year, and may have an account showing a maximum credit of that amount. Interest is paid on all sums deposited.

Hungary.—The rate of interest may not exceed 3 per cent, and is declared yearly by the minister of commerce. It has been 3 per cent for some time past. The minimum deposit is 1 crown, and no amount less than 2 crowns is permitted to draw interest. A maximum credit of 4,000 crowns is allowed to individual accounts, and of 8,000 crowns to beneficent institutions. Interest is paid on all deposits. Deposits in excess of the maxima shown are invested in state bonds.

Italy.—The rate of interest paid in 1905 was 2.04 per cent per annum. The rate is determined yearly by the minister of finance, and varies so greatly that a table is given showing same in every year since the establishment of the system. The minimum deposit accepted is 1 franc. There is no limit placed upon the size of an account, but no interest is paid on any sum in excess of 2,000 lire.

	Per cent.
1876 to 1878, both inclusive	3
1879 to 1886, both inclusive	3½
1887 to 1895, both inclusive	3¼
1896 and 1897	3
1898 to 1901, both inclusive	2.88
1902 to 1904, both inclusive	2.76
1905	2.04

Netherlands.—The rate of interest paid is 2.64 per cent. The minimum deposit accepted is 25 cents, which may be made by means of postage stamps. Interest is paid upon all deposits, which may not exceed 1,200 florins for an individual, or 2,400 florins for a public, religious, or mutual institutions.

Sweden.—The rate of interest is fixed by royal decree, and is now 3.6 per cent per annum. The minimum deposit accepted is 1 (Swedish) crown. The maximum upon which interest is paid is 2,000 crowns, and the maximum which an account may reach is the same.

United Kingdom.—The rate of interest paid is 2½ per cent per annum. The minimum deposit accepted is 1 shilling. Not more than £50 may be deposited in any one year. The maximum upon which interest is paid is £200, and the total which an account may reach is also £200.

NORTH AND SOUTH AMERICA.

Canada.—The rate of interest was reduced on July 1, 1897, from 3½ per cent to 3 per cent, which is the present rate. The minimum deposit accepted is $1. Interest is paid upon deposits up to the maximum amount which may be placed to the credit of any one account—$3,000. However, not more than $1,000 may be deposited in any one year to the credit of any one account.

Bahamas.—The rate of interest paid is 2½ per cent. The minimum deposit accepted is 1 shilling. The maximum to which an account may grow is £200, and interest is paid on all sums up to that amount.

British Guiana.—The rate of interest paid is 2.40 per cent. Interest is paid on all sums not less than $5 and up to and including $1,500, the maximum which may stand to the credit of any one account.

ASIA.

British India.—Three per cent interest is paid upon deposits which are "at call;" 3½ per cent is paid upon accounts requiring that six months' notice of withdrawal be given. The minimum deposit accepted is 4 annas. Not more than 1,200 rupees may be deposited to the credit of any one account in any one year. Interest is paid to adults on deposits which they may make up to and including 2,000 rupees. Interest is paid to minors on their deposits up to and including 1,000 rupees. The account of an adult is permitted to reach a maximum of 5,000 rupees; that of a minor 4,000 rupees.

Ceylon.—Interest is paid at the rate of 2.40 per cent per annum on deposits of 10 rupees or multiples thereof. The minimum deposit accepted is 25 cents. Interest is paid on deposits up to and including 2,000 rupees. One thousand rupees in any one year, or 3,000 rupees in all, may be deposited by one person for investment in government bonds.

Straits Settlements.—The rate of interest paid is 3 per cent per annum. The minimum deposit accepted is $1. Not more than $500 may be deposited in any one year. The maximum upon which interest is paid is $1,500, which is also the total which any account is permitted to reach.

Dutch East Indies.—The rate of interest paid is 2.4 per cent per annum. The minimum deposit accepted is 25 cents. The maximum upon which interest is paid is 2,400 florins, which is also the total to which any account may grow. It is interesting to note that this amount is just twice that permitted in the "mother" country—the Netherlands.

Japan.—The rate of interest paid is 4.8 per cent per annum. "Any sum from 10 sen upward can be deposited by any person at any one time: Provided, that a fraction of 1 rin, or a sum more than 50 yen on any one day, can not be deposited." Interest is paid on deposits up to and including 500 yen. Should more be deposited, the excess is invested in government bonds.

AFRICA.

Cape Colony.—The rate of interest paid is 3 per cent per annum. The minimum deposit accepted is 1s. Not more than £100 may be deposited in any one year. Interest is paid on deposits up to and including £600, which is also the total amount which an account may reach.

Egypt.—A dividend is declared yearly; the last of which information has been received was 2½ per cent. The minimum deposit accepted is 50 mills. Not more than £50 may be deposited in any one year, nor more than £200 in all. The minimum initial deposit accepted is 200 mills. These are Egyptian pounds.

Orange River Colony.—The rate of interest paid is 3 per cent. The minimum deposit accepted is 1s. Not more than £100 may be deposited in any one year. An account may grow to £500, exclusive of interest, and, with interest included, to £600.

Sierra Leone.—Interest at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum is paid. The minimum deposit accepted is 1s. Not more than £130 may be deposited in any one year. Interest is not allowed upon sums less than £1 or more than £500. The maximum which may be deposited to the credit of one account is £500.

Transvaal.—The rate of interest paid is 3.75 per cent. The minimum deposit accepted is 1s. Not more than £100 may be deposited in any one year. Not more than £500 may be deposited to the credit of any one account, but an account may reach £600, inclusive of interest.

AUSTRALASIA.

New South Wales.—The rate of interest paid is 3 per cent per annum. The minimum deposit accepted is 1s. Interest is paid on all deposits up to and including £500.

New Zealand.—Interest is paid at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum on sums up to and including £300. On sums in excess of £300 the interest rate is 3 per cent per annum. Deposits of 1s. or multiples thereof are accepted. The maximum which any account may reach, inclusive of interest, is £600.

Mr. DEPEW obtained the floor.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DEPEW. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in the absence of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], a member of the Committee on Commerce——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that, under the rule, morning business is not in order. The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] has the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask leave, out of order, to offer a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the resolution is not in order under the rule of the Senate.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, it is hardly——

Mr. FORAKER. May I ask on what ground it is out of order to offer a resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is out of order under the rule which prevents the interruption of a Senator having the floor by another Senator for the purpose of introducing morning business.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from New York had merely been recognized. He had not commenced to address the Senate. I did not compete with him in undertaking to secure recognition of the Chair, because he told me he would yield to me as soon as he got the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will read the rule. It is as follows:

> It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor, for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I am familiar with the rule, but always as heretofore enforced it has been after a Senator was addressing the Senate and there was an interruption of the Senator. The Senator from New York had only been recognized. He had not commenced to address the Senate; he had not presented any business to the Senate, and, being merely recognized, I supposed I was not interrupting. But, of course, I acquiesce in the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that if a Senator is recognized, he has the floor and that an interruption for the purpose indicated would be in contravention of the rule.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly he has the floor, but I am not interrupting him or any address he is making to the Senate. I only want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a precedent is being made by this ruling.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, it is difficult to add anything to the exhaustive and illuminating speech of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], to whom we have listened with so much pleasure. But I want to record my approval of this measure for a government postal savings bank system. Early in my life I was connected with a savings bank and have always been deeply interested in them.

It is surprising that this work has not been given to the Post-Office Department before. The record shows that a postal savings bank system has been recommended by nearly every Postmaster-General for thirty-five years. Bills have been repeatedly introduced in one or the other House of Congress representing the desire of the administration of the time on this subject, but none of them has received any consideration. It requires about forty years of agitation to bring about the adoption of any radical change in government procedure or activities. We are the most conservative people in the world, though having the reputation of being the most radical. It is our dual system of federal and state powers which accounts for the slow pace of reforms or improvements in the service or demonstrated beneficence because of devotion to state rights and fear of federal encroachment upon them, which is the bogy that is ever distracting the legislative mind. This is not a new or untried proposition. It was adopted by Great Britain in 1861 and its success and popularity were immediate. Within a few years every continental nation, except Germany, had followed the British example. In Germany, largely because of the wide difference between federal government and independent states, the matter was taken up and successfully carried out by municipalities. The table which I here present is a remarkable exhibit of the working of the postal savings banks in these countries. I find it in the annual report of the Postmaster-General.

Postal savings banks, 1904–1906.

Country.	Date.	Number of depositors.	Deposits.	Average deposit.
Europe:
Austria—
Savings accounts	Dec., 1905	1,900,194	$42,536,862	$22.59
Banking accounts	Dec., 1905	67,804	62,225,584	917.73
Belgium	Dec., 1905	2,316,633	155,646,121	67.19
Bulgaria	Dec., 1904	124,007	2,723,182	21.96
Finland	Dec., 1905	53,455	1,004,488	18.79
France	Dec., 1905	4,577,390	246,703,726	53.90
Great Britain	Dec., 1904	9,673,717	721,819,296	74.62
Hungary—
Savings accounts	Dec., 1905	563,973	13,975,800	24.78
Banking accounts	Dec., 1905	13,581	13,031,159	957.51
Italy	Dec., 1903	4,6 ,689	233,735,421	49.84
Netherlands	Dec., 1903	1,259,681	56,153,000	44.50
Russia	June, 1903	1,488,432	59,649,925	66.95
Sweden	June, 1905	567,032	14,648,559	25.83
North and South America:
Bahamas	June, 1905	1,864	114,027	61.17
Canada	June, 1906	164,542	45,736,489	277.96
Guiana—
British	Dec., 1905	9,966	324,075	32.52
Dutch	Dec., 1905	5,785	230,222	39.80
Asia:
British East Indies—
British India	Mar., 1906	1,115,758	45,396,741	38.98
Ceylon	Dec., 1905	63,850	567,147	8.88
Straits Settlements	Dec., 1905	3,310	317,208	95.83
Dutch East Indies	Dec., 1906	49,566	2,841,535	57.33
Formosa	Mar., 1906	63,332	552,408	8.72
Japan	Dec., 1906	6,658,758	33,713,037	5.06
The Philippines	June, 1907	2,676	255,050	111.77
Africa:
Cape Colony	June, 1905	98,328	11,032,093	112.20
Egypt	Dec., 1906	50,084	1,581,613	26.77
Gold Coast	Dec., 1905	862	43,774	50.78
Orange River Colony	June, 1905	5,645	828,439	146.76
Sierra Leone	Dec., 1905	5,223	303,081	53.90
Transvaal	June, 1905	40,844	5,224,635	127.94
Australia:
New South Wales	June, 1905	254,331	38,702,715	152.17
Tasmania	Dec., 1905	17,045	2,216,107	130.02
Western Australia	June, 1906	63,574	11,271,598	177.30
New Zealand	Dec., 1905	276,066	42,158,735	152.69

The most curious and striking feature of this exhibit is that government postal savings banks are in successful operation in Europe, in Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Finland, France, Great Britain, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Russia and Sweden; in Asia, in the British East Indies, British India, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, Dutch East Indies, Formósa, Japan, and the Philippines before we acquired them; in Africa, in Cape Colony, Egypt, Gold Coast, Orange River Colony, Sierra Leone, and Transvaal; in Australia, in New South Wales, Tasmania, Western Australia, and New Zealand; in North and South America, in the Bahama Islands, British Guiana, Dutch Guiana, and Canada, and none in the United States.

The operation of the system in Canada is especially significant for us. In European countries like Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, and Switzerland the populations are compact, almost congested, in small areas compared with the territory of the United States, but every subdivision of population large enough to support a post-office presents the opportunity to the thrifty to save their earnings. Our own statistics are startling. No one now disputes the benefits of savings institutions to any community. On the contrary, they are one of the best cultivators of good citizenship, good morals, and healthy and independent homes.

I recall an instance in my own experience which illustrates the situation. In the village where I was born and which had many prosperous industries there never had been a savings bank. The artisans in the foundries earned good wages, but the shops were shut down during the winter and also when there was a depression in the trade. All of the workmen lived up to their wages, with the result that in these times of depression there was the greatest distress among them and their families. Thrift is not a natural gift, but an acquired habit. Self-indulgence is according to nature. An astonishing number of people must be placed upon their feet by agencies out of themselves and kept there and kept moving by extraneous help. That accounts for the wonderful and increasing movement for the prohibition in the sale of liquor in the various States. All temperance laws were carried largely through the influence of the women. In one of the great conventions of the ladies of Georgia, one of the orators said:

> The reason why we want and must have this legislation is that our men are temperamentally so constituted that they can not resist temptation.

There settled among us in the early years of my practice at the bar a savings-bank man from New York. He called together the citizens and organized an institution. As an example and to start it, all who could deposited a hundred dollars. The hundred which I put in, and which represented the extent of my capital, I have never touched to this day, though nearly fifty years have elapsed. Its influence as an anchorage in all crises of a long life has been incalculable. It required eight or ten years to cultivate among the people the saving habit, but when success was assured for the bank, distress disappeared among the artisans and workingmen of the town. The money for the rainy day was in the savings bank and hard times were tided over without suffering, though a greater gain was that in these deposits were the beginnings of the purchase of homes. Before that time for an artisan or workingman to own his home was exceedingly rare, but afterwards it became the rule and not the exception. Good citizenship, a keen interest in public affairs, the prosperity of the church and the school, were all incalculably promoted by the independence and self-respect in the ownership of homes.

The savings-bank system in the various States is admirable, the laws governing them are excellent, and they are safeguarded in every way. There are no better managed or safer institutions in the world. But under private management they are established only where there is a large enough population to support the machinery of a bank out of the surplus, after paying interest to depositors. That machinery means banking rooms, officers, clerks, and other expenses, which increase with the magnitude of the business. In fact, it would be impossible to maintain a savings bank in isolated communities. When a savings bank is established the expense of its maintenance and administration is supported for the first few years by the philanthropists who have originated it. The deposits must be very considerable before there will be, after 3 or 4 per cent has been paid the depositors, a balance sufficient to run the bank and to lay up a surplus against the accidents of banking, such as depreciation of securities and defalcations. The result is that 14 States have virtually all the savings institutions and 32 States and the Territories have practically none. The deposits in 14 States aggregate three thousand five hundred and ninety millions of dollars, in round numbers, while in the other 32 States and all the Territories the deposits are only seventy thousand. The 6 New England States and New York have twice as many deposits as all the other States put together. This demonstrates that a savings bank, which is the greatest encouragement to industry and thrift, exists and can exist only in crowded communities, but industry and thrift are important everywhere. The only agency which can make these opportunities universal is the post-office. There are less than fifteen hundred savings banks in the United States, and there are 68,000 post-offices. Those figures tell the whole story.

Nearly every day in the newspapers are accounts of crimes of murder and arson committed upon isolated farms, at coal mines, mining camps, and lumber camps, and all of them for robbery. The fact that farmers too distant to avail themselves of savings banks hide their money in the house, and that this is true among the thrifty in coal and iron mines and with the men who are working upon the construction of railways or in the digging of canals, has created a class of criminals whose specialty is ascertaining the thrifty and preying upon them either by threats or violence. There is no doubt if the post-offices in these neighborhoods could receive, as this bill suggests, deposits from $1 up with the confidence which exists everywhere in the Government, that the temptation for thieves and murderers would be removed and criminal conspiracies broken up. The deadly dullness of department figures is seldom relieved by anything of human interest, but a pathetic incident in the routine of the Treasury was the statement made recently that the work of the bureau which endeavors to make out the numbers and denominations of burned bank bills which have been returned in order that new ones may be issued in their place is very much greater at the beginning of the winter than at any other season of the year, because the farmer or his wife have hidden their money in the stove and when the fires are started this risky safe deposit has been forgotten and the savings of years are raked out from the embers of the fire in the hopes of some recovery by the care of the examiners of the Treasury Department.

In industrial crises, which will continue to be common with us so long as our present unscientific system of currency exists, the acuteness of the difficulty is accentuated by the hoarding of money, but this would no longer be practiced if the people who are distant from populous centers where savings banks can be supported had a place for deposit. Judging from the example of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, and Canada it is safe to calculate that there would be on deposit in the postal savings banks in the United States at least $500,000,000. This would be money in possession of the Government available to prevent and minimize financial troubles. It would be money which otherwise could not be reached by any process. Fear leads depositors to make runs upon the banks in times of panics, but confidence would cause every depositor with the Government to leave his money in the Treasury and all who had money hidden to take advantage of this solid security. Our Post-Office Department, which began so humbly, has now reached enormous proportions. Its receipts for 1908 were, in round numbers, $191,500,000, and its expenditures $208,351,000. At first its workings covered only letters. Then by reductions of postage and new methods an enormous impetus was given to the education which can be derived by the largest possible circulation of newspapers and magazines. Then to make it easy, safe, and cheap for the people to send money to different parts of the country, or to their relatives abroad, the money-order system was adopted and is now in successful operation in about 38,000 post-offices. Through this medium, which is an awkward one, it is estimated that nearly $20,000,000 are annually transmitted.

Ten years ago we entered with many misgivings upon the rural free delivery. This now takes 16,000,000 farmers out of their isolation and brings them in daily contact with the affairs and markets of the world. Here we have an illustration of the very gradual and conservative expansion of our post-office facilities during a century.

Postal savings banks would not have been feasible years ago, but now it will be a natural and expressive adjunct to the post-offices of the country. The Government allows 2 per cent interest, and the postmaster deposits the money at the nearest bank at 2½ per cent. The extra one-half per cent will pay all the expenses of the administration and leave a surplus. This rate of interest prevents the postal savings bank being brought in competition with existing institutions. With only 1,500 savings banks, and those in 14 States, with 32 States and the Territories practically deficient, and with 68,000 post-offices, the figures demonstrate that it is a new business outside of existing savings-bank business and can not interfere with it to any appreciable extent. We have already enlarged the power of the Secretary of the Treasury in the acceptance of bonds for deposits, and there is no question but that Congress can authorize the Secretary, if there is no use for these moneys in the national banks, to invest them in interest-paying securities. The principal objection that I have heard to the postal savings bank is the old cry of paternalism, with a suggestion, as usual, of constitutional limitation, but we are already, in the development of our resources, a paternalistic government in fields which promote instead of weaken individual enterprise and independence. Our whole scheme of internal improvements is based upon this consideration. The Rivers and Harbors Congress, recently in session here, was composed of able and patriotic men from every State in the Union. Among them were many of the greatest statesmen for states rights as against the enlargement of the powers of the Federal Government, but under a proposition to issue five hundred millions of bonds for the improvement of our waterways the congress unanimously and enthusiastically arose and cheered an appropriation under the old flag. We are spending two thousand millions a year for our navy, our army, our rivers and harbors, our Reclamation Service, and our civil service. The fruits of these expenditures are largely protection against what may never happen, but in this proposition we are adding to the solid wealth of the country, we are protecting the thrifty in localities where now they are helpless, we are encouraging the careless and extravagant to become thrifty, and we are promoting the general welfare and good citizenship and adding substantially to the national credit.

Mr. BURKETT. I rose to ask that the unfinished business be laid aside, but I see the Senator from Montana is now present.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside at the request of the Senator from Montana.

ST. PAUL BRIDGE AND TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. NELSON. On behalf of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], from the Committee on Commerce, I report the bill (S. 7777) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn. I submit a report thereon (No. 697). It is a simple bridge bill, which has been favorably reported upon by the War Department. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERBERT J. BROWNE AND W. G. BALDWIN.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg leave to submit a resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate when Herbert J. Browne and W. G. Baldwin, mentioned in the President's message of December 14, 1908, relating to the Brownsville shooting affray, were employed by the War Department to investigate what happened at Brownsville on the 13th and 14th of August, 1906, the terms of that employment, and whether any others, and, if so, who, were, or at any time have been, employed to assist them or to render a like service, and whether white or colored, with full names and residence of same; and whether the said Herbert J. Browne and W. G. Baldwin and any others who may have been so employed are still in such employment, and under what instructions they have been acting; and if such instructions are in writing, to send to the Senate a copy of the same; and what has been paid said parties, or any of them, on such account either as compensation for services rendered or on account of expenses by them incurred in connection with said employment; and also by what authority such persons were employed and by what authority they, or any expenses they may have incurred, were paid, and out of what fund, or funds, giving such account item by item.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. I was out of the Chamber for a moment. I should like to hear the resolution read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WARREN. I ask that it may lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," was made a special order for this time. But I see it will be impracticable to take it up and proceed with it, as a great many who are interested in it have already left and will not return for some days, probably not until after the holidays. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be made a special order for Wednesday, the 6th day of January, to be taken up for consideration at the expiration of the routine morning business, and its consideration proceeded with until it shall have been disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," be taken up for consideration following the routine morning business Wednesday, January 6 next, the consideration thereof to proceed until the bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. FULTON. Not to interfere, of course——

Mr. KEAN. With appropriation bills.

Mr. FULTON. Not to interfere with the postal savings bank bill.

Mr. KEAN. Or with appropriation bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Such consideration not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. FULTON. Or with the postal savings bank bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Or any other special order.

Mr. FULTON. I am not disposed to limit it to any such special order. There is not one that I am aware of.

Mr. FORAKER. We have a special order for to-morrow, and we may not get through with it before we adjourn, and in that event I suppose it would continue the special order until in some manner disposed of.

Mr. FULTON. I do not so understand. I understand where a measure is simply made a special order for a special day——

Mr. FORAKER. I think we can accommodate any differences we may have about it. I have no disposition to stand in the way of the Senator's bill.

Mr. FULTON. I will say that if, when the claims bill comes up for consideration, there is any measure that a Senator specially wishes to have disposed of, I will agree to lay aside the special order.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS. I would make no objection to having this bill made a special order, but I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he put it at a later date. It will be impossible for a number of us to return here before the 10th of January, and if he will fix it for the 10th it will be more satisfactory than the 6th. I trust he will yield to that suggestion.

Mr. FULTON. The situation in regard to the measure is this: It was reported at the last session, and it should have been considered then. It involves a vast number of items proposed to be placed in the bill by way of amendment. If the bill goes back to the other House, it will take probably several weeks for its consideration there, and unless it is sent by the Senate to the House very early it will not be considered at this session. Therefore I must ask that the Senate indulge me in the request that it be made the special order, as stated, for Wednesday, the 6th of January.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SMITH OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of the Hon. GEORGE W. SMITH be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
April 19, 1908.

Resolved, That in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted, the House now proceed to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. GEORGE W. SMITH, late a Member of this House from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That as a special mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House at the conclusion of the exercises to-day shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Illinois will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its sorrow on account of the death of Hon. GEORGE W. SMITH, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be suspended in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the widow and family of the deceased.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate while I submit some remarks appropriate to the occasion, suggested by the resolutions just read.

We are called upon, according to the usual custom in the Senate, to pay our tribute of respect to the memory of a deceased colleague of the other House, GEORGE W. SMITH, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Illinois.

The death roll in Congress during the past few years has been unusually large, and we are again reminded that—

In the midst of life we are in death.

GEORGE W. SMITH was born in Putnam County, Ohio, on August 18, 1846. When but a child he came with his parents to Illinois and settled on a farm in Wayne County, in the southern portion of the State. His early life was the ordinary hard life of a farm boy whose parents were in the most moderate circumstances.

In his early years he learned the trade of a blacksmith, and at the same time attended the common country school. Being ambitious to advance to the higher walks of life, and realizing early the value of education, on his own initiative he commenced his studies in the literary department of McKendree College at Lebanon, Ill., from which he graduated in 1868. Determining to have a profession, to rise above his humble trade as a blacksmith, he took to the law, and entered the law department of the university at Bloomington, one of the earliest and best law institutions in the State, from which he was graduated with honors in 1870 and was admitted to the bar during that year. Like the majority of the young lawyers in that portion of the State, he early took an interest in politics, and was a presidential elector and voted for Garfield in 1880. He was always an uncompromising Republican, and was ready at all times to defend and fight for his party, its principles and policies. For years he devoted close attention to the practice of the law, and as a lawyer possessed far more than ordinary ability, and when elected to Congress his firm enjoyed one of the largest law practices in that portion of Illinois.

GEORGE W. SMITH served in Congress continually from March 4, 1889, until his death, having been elected to the Fifty-first Congress, and reelected to the Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, Fifty-seventh, Fifty-eighth, Fifty-ninth, and Sixtieth, and had he lived he could have continued to represent his district as long as he wished to serve. His district was an interesting one. It was the district so long the home of that foremost volunteer soldier and officer of the civil war—Gen. John A. Logan, than whom there was no braver and better soldier, and himself a politician of no mean order. The Logan district, the district represented by Mr. SMITH for so many years, I suppose contains more ambitious politicians than any district in the State. That he was able to retain his place in Congress for so many years proves that he was a shrewd, astute politician. I regarded him as one of the shrewdest politicians in that portion of Illinois. He was a great judge of men and was rarely mistaken in his friends. He had a splendid organization, composed of the best men and politicians in the district, and although he had a sharp contest every time he came up for reelection no one was ever successful in defeating him. He had been unusually successful in his district in securing the nomination from term to term, and ambitious men desirous to represent the district in Congress had become disinclined to become candidates of late years, feeling that Mr. SMITH could and would defeat any man who should become a candidate. As the years went by he seemed to grow stronger among the people of his district, and he was devoted to their interests, never tiring, always ready to respond to the call of a constituent, and the calls were many and frequent, that portion of the State being filled with the gallant survivors of the civil war.

The old soldiers who fought for the country and the flag know and appreciate the men who most sympathize with them, and veterans in his district never failed to manifest their appreciation of Mr. SMITH'S friendship for them.

Under our constitutional form of government, the Senators and Representatives bring from their several States and districts the sentiments and desires of the people they represent touching national affairs and legislation, and by so doing a consensus of public opinion of every section is voiced in our legislative action as nearly as may be, and this is more true in the House, whose Members come closer to and represent the people directly, than it is in the Senate, representing, as we do, the sovereign States. In his legislative action Mr. SMITH always sought to represent as nearly as he could the views of his people, and this made him strong at home. In a popular form of government such as ours it is the duty of Representatives and Senators to represent and carry out the wishes of the people, so far as the Constitution will permit. Mr. SMITH'S service in Congress was at a time when the country had just passed through a great civil war, when only earnest and determined men were most active in political affairs.

GEORGE W. SMITH was my warm, personal friend for many years, and I am indebted to him for years of loyal and active support. He was a man of much power when aroused, and demonstrated his power when goaded and pressed hard by his enemies. He was true to his friends, honest and generous in his sentiments, sincere in his convictions, and strong in his adherence to what he believed to be right.

On the 30th of November, 1907, after a brief illness, attended by a beloved wife and surrounded by devoted friends, he passed away at his old home in Murphysboro. His labors, struggles, and conflicts ended; his work was done; he had finished his course.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to add a word or two as a tribute to the memory of GEORGE W. SMITH. I knew him well, not only having served with him from the Fifty-third to Fifty-ninth Congress, inclusive, but a few years ago made a trip to the Philippines with a party of which he and his good wife were also members, and on this trip I became intimately acquainted with him and learned of his many good qualities.

He was a successful man on the farm, in the blacksmith shop, in the legal profession, and he was a faithful, hardworking, and successful Member of the House of Representatives. That his people had faith in him is evidenced by the fact that they kept him in Congress for nearly twenty years, and had he lived, he no doubt would have continued to represent them for many more years. He was well equipped for the service in the House; he knew his district well; he loved the people who had honored him, and was ever ready to aid and assist them. He served in the House long enough to be understood by those who were in the public service; he earned high regard by his earnest study of great questions and by the independence and wisdom he displayed.

No taint of corruption or dishonor ever stained his name, and it is therefore befitting that we should record here our affection for him and our appreciation for his honorable and useful life.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, among the public men from Illinois whom death has claimed in recent years no one has held a better place in the affections of his constituents than GEORGE W. SMITH, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the twenty-fifth district of Illinois.

My acquaintance with Mr. SMITH began when he came to the House of Representatives as a Member of the Fifty-first Congress. I had preceded him as a Member of the House by several years, and I shall never forget the favorable impression that he made upon me as he took his place among the Members of that great legislative body. He was a picture of manly beauty and was well endowed mentally. He was representing a constituency that once had been honored by the service of Gen. John A. Logan, a constituency that demanded much from their Representative. He continued to represent his district in the House of Representatives for twenty years, and during that entire period steadily grew in the affections and esteem of the good people of southern Illinois.

Mr. SMITH was a lawyer by profession, and for many years prior to his entering political life had made his home at Murphysboro, Ill., and had attained by his ability and industry a leading position among the lawyers of his section of the State. He was a ready and eloquent speaker, a logical reasoner, and a careful student of the law. Had he not been diverted from his profession into political life he would have undoubtedly been ranked as one of the leading lawyers of the State. He had a natural aptitude, however, for politics. Murphysboro was once the home of Gen. John A. Logan and the center of political life. Mr. SMITH thus early was brought in contact with the leading men politically in his section of the State. The favorable impression that he made upon them made it very easy for him to become their Representative in Congress.

He had a few fierce battles to maintain his position during his twenty years of service in Congress, but on each of those occasions he displayed the ability, the nerve, and the dash that not only overcame all opposition but strengthened him in the love and esteem of his constituents. I think at the time of his death he was never held in higher regard by those who had followed his fortunes for twenty years. His work in Congress was marked by a steady growth. He served on many of the important committees of the House of Representatives and on each of them displayed the industry and ability that had marked his early career as a lawyer.

Mr. SMITH was a lover of good literature and a man who had traveled extensively in his own and foreign countries. His reading and his travels had made him a broad-minded, cultured gentleman. In private life he was a genial and companionable man. His loss is deplored not only by his personal friends, but by a constituency that will long remember his services and honor his name.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions submitted by my colleague.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. As a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. SMITH, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 16, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 15, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by Rev. S. H. Woodrow, D. D., pastor of the First Congregational Church of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RULES.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I move to discharge the Committee on Foreign Affairs from the further consideration of House resolution 447 and that the same be considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please send the resolution to the Clerk's desk. The gentleman moves, as a question of privilege, to discharge the Committee on Foreign Affairs from further consideration of the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the House of Representatives whether he has in his possession any information as to whether or not the House of Commons of Great Britain has recently adopted a resolution to the effect that a committee of 8 Members of the House be immediately appointed, 5 to be selected by the Speaker and 3 by the leader of the minority, to consider the existing rules of the House, and to report not later than February 1, 1909, what changes, if any, it is desirable to make.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, what is the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is just trying to ascertain. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs on December 8. The question is on the motion to discharge the committee. That is a proper motion and is privileged, and is to be decided without debate. As many as favor the motion——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I should like, for the information of the House, to have that resolution read again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the Speaker to state that that motion can not be debated?

The SPEAKER. The motion to discharge the committee is not subject to debate. After the committee is discharged, if it shall be discharged, then the resolution is, under the rules of the House, subject to any disposition that the House sees proper to make of it. The question is on the motion to discharge the committee.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 79.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 134, answered "present" 3, not voting 107, as follows:

YEAS—146.

Adair	Ferris	James, Ollie M.	Richardson
Adamson	Finley	Johnson, S. C.	Riordan
Alexander, Mo.	Fitzgerald	Kimball	Robinson
Ashbrook	Floyd	Kipp	Rothermel
Barnhart	Foster, Ill.	Kitchin, Claude	Rucker
Bartlett, Ga.	Fowler	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Russell, Mo.
Bartlett, Nev.	Fulton	Lamb	Russell, Tex.
Beall, Tex.	Gaines, Tenn.	Leake	Ryan
Booher	Gardner, Mass.	Lee	Sabath
Bowers	Garner	Lenahan	Scott
Boyd	Garrett	Lindbergh	Shackleford
Brodhead	Gill	Lindsay	Sheppard
Brundidge	Gillespie	Livingston	Sherley
Burgess	Glass	Lloyd	Sherwood
Burleson	Godwin	Lovering	Sims
Burnett	Gordon	McDermott	Slayden
Caldwell	Goulden	McKinlay, Cal.	Small
Campbell	Gronna	Madison	Smith, Mo.
Candler	Hamilton, Iowa	Maynard	Smith, Tex.
Carlin	Hamlin	Moon, Tenn.	Sparkman
Carter	Hammond	Moore, Tex.	Stanley
Caulfield	Hardwick	Morse	Stephens, Tex.
Clark, Mo.	Hardy	Murdock	Sturgiss
Clayton	Harrison	Murphy	Talbott
Cockran	Hay	Nelson	Taylor, Ala.
Cooper, Tex.	Hayes	Nicholls	Thomas, N. C.
Cooper, Wis.	Heflin	Nye	Underwood
Cox, Ind.	Helm	Padgett	Volstead
Craig	Henry, Tex.	Page	Wallace
Cravens	Hepburn	Patterson	Watkins
Davenport	Houston	Pearre	Webb
Davis, Minn.	Howland	Peters	Weisse
De Armond	Hubbard, Iowa	Pollard	Wiley
Denver	Hubbard, W. Va.	Pujo	Williams
Dixon	Hughes, N. J.	Rainey	Wilson, Pa.
Ellerbe	Hull, Tenn.	Randell, Tex.
Ellis, Mo.	Humphreys, Miss.	Rauch

NAYS—134.

Alexander, N. Y.	Cushman	Gilhams	Kennedy, Ohio
Allen	Dalzell	Graff	Knapp
Ames	Darragh	Graham	Knopf
Andrus	Dawson	Greene	Knowland
Anthony	Denby	Haggott	Küstermann
Bannon	Douglas	Hale	Langley
Barchfeld	Draper	Hamilton, Mich.	Law
Bates	Driscoll	Harding	Lawrence
Beale, Pa.	Durey	Haskins	Longworth
Bonynge	Dwight	Haugen	Loudenslager
Bradley	Edwards, Ky.	Hawley	Lowden
Brownlow	Ellis, Oreg.	Henry, Conn.	McCall
Burton, Del.	Englebright	Higgins	McCreary
Butler	Esch	Howard	McGavin
Capron	Fairchild	Howell, N. J.	McGuire
Cassel	Fassett	Howell, Utah	McKinley, Ill.
Chaney	Foss	Hughes, W. Va.	McLachlan, Cal.
Chapman	Foster, Ind.	Hull, Iowa	McLaughlin, Mich.
Cocks, N. Y.	Foster, Vt.	Humphrey, Wash.	McMillan
Cook, Colo.	Foulkrod	Jenkins	McMorran
Cook, Pa.	French	Jones, Wash.	Madden
Cooper, Pa.	Fuller	Kahn	Mann
Crumpacker	Gaines, W. Va.	Keifer	Martin
Currier	Gardner, Mich.	Kennedy, Iowa	Miller
Moon, Pa.	Reynolds	Steenerson	Vreeland
Moore, Pa.	Rodenberg	Sterling	Wanger
Mudd	Sherman	Stevens, Minn.	Washburn
Needham	Slemp	Sulloway	Watson
Olmsted	Smith, Cal.	Tawney	Wheeler
Overstreet	Smith, Iowa	Taylor, Ohio	Wilson, Ill.
Parker	Smith, Mich.	Thistlewood	Woodyard
Payne	Snapp	Thomas, Ohio	Young
Perkins	Sperry	Tirrell
Pray	Stafford	Townsend

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Bennet, N. Y.	Macon	Reid

NOT VOTING—107.

Acheson	Davey, La.	Hitchcock	Mondell
Aiken	Davidson	Hobson	Mouser
Ansberry	Dawes	Holliday	Norris
Barclay	Diekema	Huff	O'Connell
Bartholdt	Edwards, Ga.	Jackson	Olcott
Bede	Estopinal	James, Addison D.	Parsons
Bell, Ga.	Favrot	Johnson, Ky.	Porter
Bennett, Ky.	Flood	Jones, Va.	Pou
Bingham	Focht	Keliher	Pratt
Birdsall	Foelker	Kinkaid	Prince
Boutell	Fordney	Lafean	Ransdell, La.
Brantley	Fornes	Lamar, Fla.	Reeder
Broussard	Gardner, N. J.	Lamar, Mo.	Rhinock
Brumm	Gillett	Landis	Roberts
Burke	Goebel	Laning	Saunders
Burleigh	Goldfogle	Lassiter	Southwick
Burton, Ohio	Granger	Legare	Spight
Byrd	Gregg	Lever	Sulzer
Calder	Griggs	Lewis	Swasey
Calderhead	Guernsey	Lilley	Tou Velle
Cary	Hackett	Lorimer	Waldo
Clark, Fla.	Hackney	Loud	Weeks
Cole	Hall	McHenry	Weems
Conner	Hamill	McKinney	Willett
Coudrey	Hill, Conn.	McLain	Wolf
Cousins	Hill, Miss.	Malby	Wood
Crawford	Hinshaw	Marshall

So the motion was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

For the session:

Mr. BENNET of New York with Mr. FORNES.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Until further notice:

Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. REID.

Mr. CONNER with Mr. LEGARE.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. KELIHER.

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. BYRD.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. DIEKEMA with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. CALDER with Mr. FAVROT.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. COUDREY with Mr. LAMAR of Missouri.

Mr. MOUSER with Mr. MCLAIN.

Mr. WALDO with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. MCKINNEY with Mr. ANSBERRY.

Mr. CARY with Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. PRATT.

Mr. BIRDSALL with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. BURKE with Mr. BELL of Georgia.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. MACON.

Mr. COLE with Mr. CRAWFORD.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. DAWES with Mr. ESTOPINAL.

Mr. FOELKER with Mr. GRANGER.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. GREGG.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey with Mr. HACKETT.

Mr. GILLETT with Mr. HACKNEY.

Mr. GOEBEL with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. GUERNSEY with Mr. HITCHCOCK.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut with Mr. HOBSON.

Mr. HINSHAW with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. HOLLIDAY with Mr. JONES of Virginia.

Mr. HUFF with Mr. LAMAR of Florida.

Mr. LAFEAN with Mr. LASSITER.

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. LEVER.

Mr. LOUD with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. MALBY with Mr. MCHENRY.

Mr. MONDELL with Mr. O'CONNELL.

Mr. NORRIS with Mr. POU.

Mr. OLCOTT with Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana.

Mr. PARSONS with Mr. RHINOCK.

Mr. PORTER with Mr. SAUNDERS.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. SPIGHT.

Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. TOU VELLE.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. WILLETT.

Mr. WOOD with Mr. WOLF.

For this day:

Mr. LORIMER with Mr. HILL of Mississippi.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, am I entitled to vote?

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. COLE. I have just arrived.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not entitled to vote.

The vote as above recorded was announced by the Speaker.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all the words beginning with "that," in line 1, and ending with the word "effect," in line 6.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman wait until we find out what the amendment is?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as it will read if the amendment is adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all the words beginning with "that," in line 1, and ending with the word "effect," in line 6, so as to read as follows:
"Resolved, That a committee of 8 Members of the House be immediately appointed, 5 to be selected by the Speaker and 3 by the leader of the minority, to consider the existing rules of the House, and to report not later than February 1, 1909, what changes, if any, it is desirable to make."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not germane.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, it is in order to strike out the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, the gentleman knows——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman knows too. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that it destroys the privilege of the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The privilege of the resolution is to discharge the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. The committee has been discharged.

The SPEAKER. Upon the point of order suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], that this amendment destroys the privilege of the resolution, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It is customary to state all points of order at once, and I desire to address myself to the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], unless it is withdrawn, as well as to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to hear from the gentleman on the point of order suggested by the gentleman from New York if the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to be heard.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And the Chair is unwilling to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts on the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts on that point of order, but the Chair does desire, if the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to be heard, to hear him briefly upon the point of order suggested by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Very well, Mr. Speaker. I invite the attention of the Chair to the fifth volume of Hinds's Precedents of the House of Representatives, and more especially to page 396. I shall read the heading, section 5783, which is as follows:

The admissibility of an amendment should be judged by the provisions of its text rather than from the purpose which circumstances may suggest.

I admit at once that the proposed amendment changes the whole character of the resolution, but that fact alone does not make it obnoxious to the point of order. I shall go on and read from the decision of the Speaker at that time.

The SPEAKER. To get at the exact question, the Chair will state what was in the mind of the Chair. The Chair would be glad to hear discussed this question, if the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to discuss it. Here is a resolution that under the rules was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That committee failed to report within the prescribed seven days. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] moves to discharge the Committee on Foreign Affairs from the further consideration of that resolution. The House has so voted. Now the gentleman offers an amendment to that resolution which the Chair suggests to the gentleman changes the character of the resolution, so that that which was privileged would be so changed as to bring before the House a proposition that is not privileged, and therefore the gentleman would thereby accomplish indirectly what he could not accomplish directly. It is that particular question which dwells in the mind of the Chair and upon which the Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is to that very branch of the question that I am endeavoring to address myself, if the Chair will give me a chance. First, let me say that while I am perfectly well aware that the rules say that by the motion to recommit you can not by indirection adopt an amendment which could not be adopted directly, I fail to see how that well-known principle applies in this case. The single decision which would support the contention of the gentleman from New York was made in 1882. By that decision an amendment which would have changed a resolution of inquiry to one of instruction was held not to be germane. That would appear to support the contention of the gentleman from New York, but if the Chair will examine section 5805, he will see that that decision has been overruled, to the extent at least of deciding that an amendment striking out words is to be held admissible in contradistinction to an amendment adding words. I call the House's attention to this statement from the chairman, Mr. THEODORE E. BURTON, of Ohio, in ruling on that question:

The Chair also thinks the rule to be that an amendment striking out a portion of the paragraph is not subject to the point of order. Form and not effect should be considered.

I read again. The chairman says:

The Chair would state that there is merely a question for the committee to consider. It is to be noted that this amendment consists not in adding to the language of the paragraph, but in striking out certain words which constitute a portion of the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard briefly on the question of order. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that under the rule the privilege belongs to the motion to discharge the committee when certain resolutions have not been reported within a certain time. When such resolutions are before the House and it is attempted to add amendments by insertion, the point of order that the amendment is not germane is a point that is frequently raised and sustained, not because of any peculiar character the resolution has by having come before the House on a motion to discharge the committee, but under the general rules affecting the germaneness of the amendments. But this is not a motion to insert. This is a motion to perfect the resolution by striking out. The gentleman can not make the point of order that it is not germane to strike something out of the resolution. The House, having possession of the resolution, so far as it does not violate the rule regarding germaneness, is entitled to amend it in any way it sees fit. The only way an amendment can be held out of order to this resolution would be on the ground that its subject-matter was not germane to the subject-matter of the resolution itself. The mere fact that the resolution when amended would accomplish some other purpose than that intended by the original resolution should not affect the ruling on the question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. The motion to discharge the committee was privileged, and the resolution from the consideration of which the Committee on Foreign Affairs was discharged is privileged. The amendment strikes out the following words:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the House of Representatives whether he has in his possession any information as to whether or not the House of Commons of Great Britain has recently adopted a resolution to the effect.

Those words are to be stricken out by the amendment, and the amendment would then leave the words in the original resolution as follows:

That a committee of eight Members of the House be immediately appointed, five to be selected by the Speaker and three by the leader of the minority, to consider the existing rules of the House and to report not later than February 1, 1909, what changes, if any, it is desirable to make.

Thus the amendment would change the character of the resolution, which was one of inquiry, and therefore privileged under the rule, by striking out the matter inquired about and leaving in the resolution matter that is not privileged. If the resolution had stood as the gentleman now proposes by his amendment to have it stand, it would not have been in order, because it would be shorn of all matter of inquiry contained in the resolution. The precedents are quite numerous. I read from the Digest, volume 7:

A privileged proposition may not be amended by adding thereto matter not privileged or germane to the original question. (Vol. 5, sec. 5890.)

That was a ruling by the present Speaker of the House.

It is not in order to amend a pending privileged proposition by adding a matter not privileged and not germane to the original proposition. (Vol. 5, sec. 5809.)

That was a ruling by Mr. Speaker Carlisle. Section 5810 contains a similar ruling by Mr. Speaker pro tempore Blackburn:

The text of a bill containing nonprivileged matter, privilege may not be created by a committee amendment in the nature of a substitute not containing the nonprivileged matter. (Vol. 4, sec. 4623.)

The precedents are numerous and to the point, and the Chair is perfectly clear that the point of order is well taken, and sustains the same.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair and ask to be heard on that appeal according to the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the rules give the right to one speech on an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair's recollection, from many years of service, confirmed by good authority, is that, time out of mind, for at least a generation, the uniform practice has been on a motion to appeal from the decision of the Chair to entertain a motion to lay the appeal on the table, and therefore the Chair entertains that motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts shall be heard upon his appeal for ten minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Regular order!

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say here that the gentleman from Massachusetts had an opportunity to present this question; I therefore object to unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to lay the appeal on the table.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. Well, as the Chair is in doubt—more noise being made on one side than the other [laughter and applause]—as many as favor the motion will rise and stand until they are counted.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 136, answered "present" 4, not voting 101, as follows:

YEAS—149.

Alexander, N. Y.	Edwards, Ky.	Humphrey, Wash.	Overstreet
Allen	Ellis, Oreg.	Jenkins	Parker
Ames	Englebright	Jones, Wash.	Parsons
Andrus	Esch	Kahn	Payne
Anthony	Fairchild	Keifer	Perkins
Bannon	Fassett	Kennedy, Iowa	Pollard
Barchfeld	Fordney	Kennedy, Ohio	Pray
Bates	Foss	Kinkaid	Reynolds
Beale, Pa.	Foster, Ind.	Knapp	Roberts
Birdsall	Foster, Vt.	Knopf	Rodenberg
Bonynge	Foulkrod	Knowland	Scott
Brownlow	French	Küstermann	Sherman
Burton, Del.	Fuller	Landis	Slemp
Butler	Gaines, W. Va.	Langley	Smith, Cal.
Campbell	Gardner, Mich.	Law	Smith, Iowa
Capron	Gilhams	Lawrence	Smith, Mich.
Cassel	Goebel	Longworth	Snapp
Caulfield	Graff	Lorimer	Sperry
Chaney	Graham	Loud	Stafford
Chapman	Greene	Loudenslager	Sterling
Cocks, N. Y.	Guernsey	Lowden	Stevens, Minn.
Cole	Haggott	McCreary	Sturgiss
Cook, Colo.	Hale	McGavin	Sulloway
Cook, Pa.	Hamilton, Mich.	McGuire	Tawney
Cooper, Pa.	Harding	McKinley, Ill.	Taylor, Ohio
Crumpacker	Haskins	McKinney	Thistlewood
Currier	Haugen	McLachlan, Cal.	Thomas, Ohio
Cushman	Hawley	McLaughlin, Mich.	Tirrell
Dalzell	Henry, Conn.	McMillan	Vreeland
Darragh	Higgins	Madden	Wanger
Davidson	Hill, Conn.	Mann	Washburn
Dawson	Holliday	Martin	Watson
Denby	Howard	Miller	Wilson, Ill.
Douglas	Howell, N. J.	Mondell	Woodyard
Draper	Howell, Utah	Moon, Pa.	Young
Driscoll	Hubbard, W. Va.	Moore, Pa.
Durey	Hughes, W. Va.	Needham
Dwight	Hull, Iowa	Olmsted

NAYS—136.

Adair	Bartlett, Nev.	Burnett	Clayton
Adamson	Beall, Tex.	Byrd	Cockran.
Aiken	Booher	Caldwell	Cooper, Wis.
Alexander, Mo.	Bowers	Candler	Cox, Ind.
Ashbrook	Boyd	Carlin	Craig
Barnhart	Brodhead	Carter	Cravens
Bartlett, Ga.	Burgess	Clark, Mo.	Davenport
Davis, Minn.	Harrison	Lloyd	Ryan
De Armond	Hay	McDermott	Sabath
Denver	Hayes	McKinlay, Cal.	Saunders
Dixon	Heflin	Macon	Shackleford
Ellerbe	Helm	Madison	Sheppard
Ellis, Mo.	Henry, Tex.	Maynard	Sherley
Ferris	Houston	Moon, Tenn.	Sherwood
Finley	Howland	Moore, Tex.	Sims
Fitzgerald	Hubbard, Iowa	Morse	Slayden
Floyd	Hughes, N. J.	Murdock	Small
Foster, Ill.	Hull, Tenn.	Murphy	Smith, Mo.
Fulton	Humphreys, Miss.	Nelson	Smith, Tex.
Gaines, Tenn.	James, Ollie M.	Nicholls	Stanley
Gardner, Mass.	Johnson, S. C.	Padgett	Stephens, Tex.
Garner	Jones, Va.	Page	Taylor, Ala.
Garrett	Kimball	Peters	Thomas, N. C.
Gill	Kipp	Rainey	Tou Velle
Gillespie	Kitchin, Claude	Randell, Tex.	Townsend
Glass	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Ransdell, La.	Underwood
Godwin	Lamb	Rauch	Volstead
Gordon	Leake	Reid	Wallace
Gronna	Lee	Richardson	Watkins
Hamilton, Iowa	Lenahan	Robinson	Webb
Hamlin	Lever	Rothermel	Weisse
Hammond	Lindbergh	Rucker	Wiley
Hardwick	Lindsay	Russell, Mo.	Williams
Hardy	Livingston	Russell, Tex.	Wilson, Pa.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—4.

Bennet, N. Y.	Brantley	Goulden	McMorran

NOT VOTING—101.

Acheson	Davey, La.	Huff	Pearre
Ansberry	Dawes	Jackson	Porter
Barclay	Diekema	James, Addison D.	Pou
Bartholdt	Edwards, Ga.	Johnson, Ky.	Pratt
Bede	Estopinal	Keliher	Prince
Bell, Ga.	Favrot	Lafean	Pujo
Bennett, Ky.	Flood	Lamar, Fla.	Reeder
Bingham	Focht	Lamar, Mo.	Rhinock
Boutell	Foelker	Laning	Riordan
Bradley	Fornes	Lassiter	Southwick
Broussard	Fowler	Legare	Sparkman
Brumm	Gardner, N. J.	Lewis	Spight
Brundidge	Gillett	Lilley	Steenerson
Burke	Goldfogle	Lovering	Sulzer
Burleigh	Granger	McCall	Swasey
Burleson	Gregg	McHenry	Talbott
Burton, Ohio	Griggs	McLain	Waldo
Calder	Hackett	Malby	Weeks
Calderhead	Hackney	Marshall	Weems
Cary	Hall	Mouser	Wheeler
Clark, Fla.	Hamill	Mudd	Willett
Conner	Hepburn	Norris	Wolf
Cooper, Tex.	Hill, Miss.	Nye	Wood
Coudrey	Hinshaw	O'Connell
Cousins	Hitchcock	Olcott
Crawford	Hobson	Patterson

So the motion to lay the appeal on the table was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. McCALL with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. MADDEN with Mr. BURLESON.

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. LANING with Mr. PATTERSON.

Mr. ADDISON D. JAMES with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. HEPBURN with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. BEDE with Mr. ANSBERRY.

For the session:

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.

Mr. MCMORRAN with Mr. PUJO.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address the House on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is before the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I admit that this is not the right way to introduce into this House a resolution for the appointment of a committee. It is not proper to introduce a wolf in sheep's clothing. I admit that at once. But before now I have introduced more than one resolution referred directly to the Committee on Rules, and experience taught me that if I introduced this resolution in the way it ought to be introduced, but scant consideration might be its fate. I am glad that this question has come up to-day, because it shows one of the few loopholes that are left open, and I suggest that it might well be closed up.

I do not think, however, that the people of this country care very much about these small details. I do not think they care very much whether this man or that man is recognized. What they want to know is that measures of great public importance are recognized, and it is coming to such a pass that matters of great public importance can not have their day in court unless with the approval of the Committee on Rules. Oh, I know that has been denied. I have read with interest the statement made by the best parliamentarian of us all, the gentleman who stands at the Speaker's right hand.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is not addressing himself to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the point of order is well taken. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I had anticipated that point of order, and was only surprised that it was not made sooner. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield such portion of my time as is reasonable to the gentleman, or any other gentleman, if he wishes to discuss the merits of this resolution.

Several MEMBERS. What gentleman?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Any gentlemen. Those whom the cap fits may wear it.

Mr. PAYNE. Nobody seems to see any merit in it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Very well, Mr. Speaker, if no one wishes to discuss this further, I move to lay the resolution on the table, and on that I ask the previous question.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the previous question does not lie to a motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] moves that the resolution do lie on the table.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 127, noes 42.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the following concurrent resolution of the House, No. 46:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring): That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 19, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, January 4, 1909.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5473) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PEACE PALACE AT THE HAGUE.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying dispatch from the American legation at The Hague, concerning the wish expressed by the Second Hague Conference that appropriate contribution be made by each Government toward the adornment of the Peace Palace at The Hague.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 15, 1908.

PANAMA CANAL.

The Speaker also laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

[See Senate proceedings of to-day for message.]

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business coming over from yesterday was the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the bill (S. 6359) should receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, inasmuch as it was alleged that it made a charge upon the Treasury.

The Chair has carefully examined the bill, and finds, on page 2, the following language:

Said municipal court shall sit for trial of causes in one building to be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be rented by said District of Columbia at a rental not to exceed $1,800 per annum.

On page 4 the bill provides for the appointment of clerks, payable monthly by the District of Columbia, and so forth. The rule has been construed that it must appear on the face of the measure that a charge was created. It will not do to speculate that it may make a charge. Now, the Chair should be inclined to hold, if it were not for this provision, that the point of order was not well taken. The Chair has read part of it. The second provision would probably require an argument or speculation showing that a charge is made. Suppose this bill was enacted into law and in the District appropriation bill there was a provision that the rent of this building should be paid, under the law, as the law provides, one-half from the District revenues and one-half from the Treasury of the United States. It seems to the Chair it is perfectly clear under the law, which the Chair, the present presiding officer of the House, is presumed to know as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, in the event the bill was pending and the point of order was made in that case, it would be overruled. It seems to the Chair in this case the point of order is well taken under the law that this would make a charge on the Treasury of the United States under the existing law, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. I object.

CHANGE OF NAME OF V STREET TO CALIFORNIA STREET.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate bill 4308, to change the name of V street, from Florida avenue to Nineteenth street NW., to California street.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 4308) to change the name of V street, from Florida avenue to Nineteenth street NW., to California street.

Be it enacted, etc., That the name of the street lying in the county of Washington, D. C., in the tract of land known as the "Commissioners' subdivision of Washington Heights," running from Florida avenue west to Nineteenth street extended, and now called V street, be, and the same shall henceforth be, known as California street. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to cause the name of California street, from Florida avenue to Nineteenth street NW., to be placed upon the plats and maps of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I do not think of anything that could be added to that which is contained in the brief letter of the commissioners, and I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 30, 1908.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to state with respect to Senate bill 4308, to restore the name of California avenue to that certain street lying and being in the county of Washington and running from Florida avenue to Nineteenth street NW., and now known as V street, which was referred to them at your instance for their views thereon, that they are of opinion that inasmuch as Congress has given the name of California street to the old California avenue, the name of California street should be given to what is now called V street from Florida avenue west to Nineteenth street.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does this proposed change interfere with the naming of the streets in accordance with the general plan that has been adopted in Washington?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. Well, it changes, as I understand, the names of these streets. The streets are named under a plan according to the first letter of the name. It is very evident that California avenue would not be near to V street. Is that one of the efforts to please part of the people, or are we now going back and repudiating the plan that we have adopted?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This is simply to save confusion, and meets with the approval of the commissioners.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; the commissioners, too, are subject to local influences and yield to the wishes of the people.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know of any objection that has been made by anybody. The matter has been pending in Congress for weeks and months. It was passed by the Senate and comes to the House. I do not know of any objection on the part of anybody.

Mr. MANN. I suppose no one has especial interest as to whether you follow the plan or not, but I do not know what Congress would think about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I assume that the commissioners, in making this report approving it, have no desire to disarrange in any way this plan.

Mr. KAHN. I understand that V street is cut in two at Connecticut avenue. In order to continue your walk on V street you would have to walk half a block down Connecticut avenue and then get into V street again. It creates confusion, and therefore it is thought better to give it the name of California street, which it formerly had.

Mr. MANN. If confusion is created by the change of California avenue, it ought not to have been changed.

Mr. KAHN. The street was originally known as California avenue, and then it was changed to V street.

Mr. MANN. This is called V street because that was in accordance with the plan, and if it was to be called California street it would be because the street commenced with the letter C at the proper place in accordance with the plan. Now, you break into that plan and take it out of the plan. If you go on with that it will lead us to a state of confusion such as we had on the south side of Chicago, when we could not tell what was the name or number of a street.

Mr. KAHN. The confusion that is created out there is because in walking on V street you would have to leave the street and walk down Connecticut avenue a half a block until you strike V street again. Now, in order to obviate that, they restore to the street the old name of California avenue.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW HAMPSHIRE AVENUE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2999) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the extension of New Hampshire avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1907.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the extension of New Hampshire avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out section 3 thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to change the plans for a permanent system of highways outside the city of Washington so as to abandon the extension of New Hampshire avenue from Buchanan street northward to the District line, as at present laid down on said plans."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Unless there are some questions, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this provide for the closing of a street?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is this abandonment that is proposed?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is the extension of New Hampshire avenue.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4814) to amend section 491n of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia,' regulating proceedings for condemnation of lands for streets," approved April 30, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that section 491 n thereof will read as follows:

"SEC. 491n. In case any of the owners of land heretofore or hereafter condemned for public use, whether under the provisions of said code or by virtue of any special or general act of Congress, are under disability or can not be found, or neglect or refuse to receive the money awarded to them; or in case the record is imperfect or the title to the property is in dispute or uncertain, the money due the owners of the property for damages for land taken may be deposited in the registry of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, for the use of the rightful owners without cost or expense to said District; and thereupon the title to the land condemned shall become vested in the District of Columbia."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If there is no question to be asked about this bill, I call for a vote.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of business relating to the District of Columbia, with Mr. MILLER in the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 6359) to change the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read once, and by unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. The bill has not been read yet. In the middle of the reading a point of order was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the omission of the first reading?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I assume that the committee, of course, would like to have an explanation of the bill, and I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, as is apparent from the reading of this bill, the purpose is to change the name and somewhat the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace here in the District of Columbia. The necessity for this change first occurred to the auditor of the District of Columbia. While the justices of the peace are on a salary, they yet collect fees as provided by law for justices of the peace.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are those fees a part of their pay?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The fees are no part of their pay; they are collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States, and disbursed as are all other taxes collected in the District of Columbia. The auditor, in keeping track of the costs paid into the justices' courts and the deposits made there as required by law, found it very difficult to know whether or not that source of revenue was yielding the proper amount at all times into the Treasury. An investigation of the dockets of the justices in many instances showed that the justices erred in the taxing of costs, that they erred in the amount that they turned over to the auditor, and in many instances the error was against the justice. At other times the error was in his favor. There are six of these officers. The business of the justices' courts is large. The fees taxed in 1907 amounted to $28,210.43. The fees taxed in 1908 amounted to $28,006.25. It is estimated that the amount of revenue to be derived from this source in 1909 will be, in round numbers, $30,000.

Mr. MANN. How many of them are there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Six of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask about that portion of the bill which provides for the holding of all these courts in one building. Will the gentleman discuss that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am just ready to reach that part of the bill. At the present time, while the District of Columbia is divided into six districts in which court is held, yet it is a fact that all the justices' courts are now held in offices rented by authority of law by the justices of the peace within a narrow radius surrounding the city hall. The justices of the peace are not, as might be supposed, holding their offices out in the several parts of the city, distant from one another; the most distant office from the city government building at the present time, I understand, is on Twelfth and G streets, all the others being within two or three blocks from the court-house. Now, it is contended by the auditor who looks after these revenues that by all these justices being put in one building, with a proper clerk and a deputy clerk, the cases may be well distributed, and the clerk can tax all the fees and take charge of all the deposits, keep track of the costs that are paid in, and the amounts that are left over to be returned to a litigant who has made a deposit for costs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state whether these justices of the peace at the present time have a clerk and a deputy clerk as well?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They have neither a clerk nor a deputy, but, like all other justices of the peace, are required to tax their own costs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who is performing that clerical work at present?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The justices themselves. That is the reason it is not systematically done, and that the auditor for the District has difficulty in determining whether the exact amount of costs has been properly taxed. I looked over a docket this morning that had necessarily been revised by the auditor, and saw a case in which he had to tax costs that had not been taxed, and another instance where he found that the justice had overpaid to the auditor costs that he had not taxed or collected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there anything in the hearings to show that the time of the justices of the peace was not ample to discharge their duties as law officers and also to perform the clerical service?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hearings upon this bill showed that the business was congested, and that litigants in many instances had to wait a long time to have their business transacted. There is a great deal of business, as must be apparent from the amount of costs that are collected.

Mr. STAFFORD. What testimony did the committee have to warrant it in creating two new officers, a clerk and assistant clerk, to perform the work now attended to by the justices?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was done in order to facilitate and systematize the business. It is improperly attended to now. It is not systematically attended to now, and it is contended by the auditor that the amount we provide here for this clerical force will be made up by the efficiency with which the work is done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the system proposed in this bill you place the offices of the justice of the peace with the same jurisdiction in one building?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the committee considered the necessity of having a clerk for each justice?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. You have provided one clerk for each justice?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have one clerk for all the justices.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill, to my mind, conveys the idea of a clerk for each justice. I gathered the impression that each justice would have one clerk and one deputy.

Mr. MANN. No; there is one clerk and one deputy for all.

Mr. KAHN. This condition, I will ask the gentleman, prevails in most of the cities of the United States, does it not—all in one building and having only one clerk and one deputy?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; where the business can be handled in that way. They hold court in their own district now. In many instances a litigant goes outside of his district by reason of not knowing the boundaries of the district, and he is then put to the delay of having his case transferred back to the justice of the district in which he resides.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The object of having the justices of the court in each district is for the convenience of the average business man that does business in his court.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As a matter of fact, all the justices are doing business within a narrow radius in the city. This radius is like the hub of a wheel, and the districts radiate out from a central point. The necessity for this change is urged on two grounds. First, to facilitate the collection of fees, and second, to facilitate the transaction of business. It is thought that the business of the District can be much more expeditiously transacted under this system. When the cases are filed they are filed with the clerk, the clerk knows the condition of the docket before each judge of the court, and he assigns the cases as the conditions on the docket justify.

Mr. DRISCOLL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What salary are justices paid now?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Two thousand five hundred dollars a year.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The salary of each justice is the same?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The salary will remain the same.

Mr. MANN. And the fees will go to the same place?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The fees will go into the Treasury as now.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What will these justices be called?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Judges of the municipal court.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman from Kansas says that the salary is $2,500. It is $3,000 now, and we propose by this bill to change it to $2,500. As a matter of fact, this bill contemplates the saving of $200 to the District.

Mr. MANN. By paying the judges a cheaper salary? My observation is that it greatly increases the expense when you hire a cheap judge or a cheap lawyer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We get the same judges.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman know?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Because the bill provides for it.

Mr. MANN. But you can not make them serve.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Oh, they will serve all right. As I understand, there are now six judges?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And they get $3,000 apiece?

Mr. CAMPBELL. So the gentleman from Michigan states, but this bill provides for $2,500.

Mr. DRISCOLL. So that that will be a saving of $3,000?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have figured it out that we are now paying $3,000 a year for six justices, which would make $18,000. There is a saving of $500 apiece. There will be a further saving of $250 for each of the six judges, which would make $1,500, which makes in all $4,500. The clerk and assistant clerk is to get $2,500. The expense under this bill figures up to $4,300, which, taken from the $4,500, is a saving of $200.

Mr. MANN. Who pays for the offices which the justices now occupy?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The District pays for them out of the District revenues.

Mr. MANN. How long are the justices appointed for?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Six years.

Mr. MANN. When were they appointed?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know that I have that information. This bill proposes to continue them for their term.

Mr. MANN. It is proposed to reduce their salary in the middle of their term. Does the gentleman know of any case anywhere in the country where any legislative body, except in this particular case, have a right under the Constitution to reduce the salary of a judicial officer in the middle of his term?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman from Michigan is mistaken; the salary of the justices is only $2,500.

Mr. MANN. I was quite certain the gentleman from Michigan was mistaken, because I was satisfied that no committee of this House would bring in a bill to reduce in the middle of his term the salary of a judge from that which he had when he was appointed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They get $2,500 a year and $400 apiece for clerical force and stationery and rent.

Mr. MANN. Of course nobody doubts the good faith of the gentleman from Michigan, but I thought he was mistaken in the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We certainly looked it up in the code; and if we are mistaken, I should be glad to correct the figures.

Mr. MANN. The code may provide for $3,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does; but the appropriation is $2,500 a year. I have the appropriation act here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am yielding to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I want to try and help the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, ordinarily the gentleman from Illinois does not need any help.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing, Mr. Chairman, always to get the help of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois asked whether Congress had the right to change the salary of these judges. That exact question was passed upon by the supreme court of Tennessee. After a very great deal of deliberation and with a divided court, it held that the legislature created the judgeships and therefore had a right to change the salary during the incumbency of office.

But my recollection is that the majority based its opinion upon several cases passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, then, those were courts provided for by the Constitution, and the Constitution provided that their salaries should not be changed during their term of office. I could not agree with the Supreme Court, but here are justices of the peace, offices that we create by statute, and that are unknown to the Constitution, and it seems to me that as we create these courts, we have a right to regulate the salaries.

Mr. MANN. I did not question the right to do it. I said that in every other case I knew of the Constitution forbade the action, and the question was whether we should do that which the Constitution ordinarily forbade the legislatures to do.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. These courts are not known to the Constitution.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have not any question in my mind that we can reduce the salaries to 1 cent, if we want to. We have plenary power over these things, but that is another proposition. To whom do all these fees go at the present time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Into the Treasury of the United States, as part of the District revenues.

Mr. MANN. These justices, as I understand, have certain districts, each judge to a district.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; at this time.

Mr. MANN. Do these districts all converge down here?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; like the hub of a wheel, right out from the center.

Mr. MANN. So that each judge has supervision of suits commenced in his district only, but there is no requirement as to where suits shall be commenced, is there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They must be commenced in the court that sits in the territory where the action arises or the defendant resides.

Mr. MANN. I understand that process runs in the whole district.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I presume so.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman means the suit must be brought in the district where the plaintiff lives?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; or the defendant.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether or how far this law may have been modeled after the Chicago act creating a municipal court in the city of Chicago. That is probably the most recent act, to any extent, and there they have abolished entirely the justices of the peace, as formerly known, and after a trial that act has met with the unqualified approval, I think, of everybody in Chicago and has done away with the most flagrant abuses of the justices of the peace, and the lawyers and litigants and the public that suffer by litigation, and everyone else, are satisfied that that act has been of untold benefit.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is fondly hoped by the people of this District that this act will have the same effect here. I have here letters and resolutions from many associations asking for the passage of this law.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This does not change anything.

Mr. MANN. It changes the title from justice of the peace to judge, and that changes the dignity of the office.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did the act to which the gentleman refers in the city of Chicago change it to a salary from a fee system?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is a change which goes to the meat of the matter?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and changed it from scattering them all over town, so that except in the case of a few of the justices who sit for criminal cases they are all located in one building and enjoy the same jurisdiction——

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. MANN. And make it substantially a new court, and it is unqualifiedly a success there in Chicago.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman think it wise to make the people come to the courts, a little court like this, a justice of the peace court, in the center of a city extending out 5 miles in each direction, in the face of the fact that the courts ought to be taken to the people?

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman and I quite agree about that proposition.

Mr. MACON. I think the courts ought to be taken to the people and not the people to come to the courts wherever it can be done.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is correct, and if there were a court held in Georgetown to-day I would not be in favor of moving it here to the Municipal Building. But is there any court held in Georgetown to-day?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; the farthest court from the center of the city hall to-day is on Twelfth and G streets, about five or six blocks.

Mr. MACON. Could the gentleman not pass a law as easily as this one requiring a court to be held in Georgetown?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is thought it will promote the transacting of business in these courts to centralize them here in one building, with one clerk, as is provided for in this bill, rather than to compel these justices by mandamus or otherwise to take their offices farther from the center of the city than they now have them.

Mr. MANN. Take, for instance, this case. No one would know where a justice of the peace was located. If some one should sue me, I should not have the slightest idea where I would have to go, and that is the case of everybody in town except professional litigants and lawyers. If you have one place, people will learn where it is. That is a great convenience as well to litigants and lawyers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the contention everybody made before the committee.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask about the location of these justice of the peace offices. Have they been located heretofore by the justices of the peace?

Mr. CAMPBELL. By the justices themselves.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken——

Mr. CAMPBELL. The law fixes the district and the justice of the peace uses the appropriation to rent his office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The District Code provides that the justices of the supreme court shall divide the District into districts and fix the place of the offices of the District where these men shall hold their office. Undoubtedly the purpose was to compel these men to stay in their districts so that the courts would be available to the poor, who usually resort to those courts, and it requires, as a matter of jurisdiction, that the defendant there shall reside in the district or that the corporation or nonresident shall have a place of business in the district. Now, if this city or community has been so divided into districts that they all center in one place, center so that these justices all have their offices practically all in one place, then I believe it is a perversion of the original law. I do not believe from my experience it is wise to have these courts all in one place. I do not believe that the poor men interested in these small petty cases should be compelled to travel all about the city with one or two witnesses seeking justice. It is for the convenience of the justices and the few lawyers who make a specialty of practicing in their court.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from New York is very much mistaken. It is not for the convenience of the justices; the justices have not asked for it. It is asked for by the auditor of the District, as the gentleman will see by reading his report——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Kansas need not get excited. I have had experience in these courts——

Mr. MANN. In justices of the peace courts? I am surprised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I know they are intended for the protection and advantage of the poor, but they are frequently used as places of oppression of the poor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have never thought that a court was a place of luxury for the poor. I have thought it was a place where only people who could afford went.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman need not put words in my mouth which I did not use. I use language carefully, and I think pretty accurately. I did not say luxury; I said protection, and I repeat now that the chief advantage of this concentration of these justices of the peace in one building will be for the benefit of the justices and of the comparatively small number of lawyers who make a specialty of living on the small law business of the poor litigants of the city.

Mr. MANN. I noticed the gentleman from New York stated that he had frequently visited the justices of the peace courts and that they were for the benefit of the poor. I can not reconcile the two statements. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman from Illinois also makes a mistake. I did not say I had frequently visited those courts, but I did state that I was familiar with them.

Mr. MANN. That is the same thing.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman stated this had been asked for by the auditor, and now I would like to ask if the gentleman does not think that the chief interest the auditor had in it was to have a clerk created to come in and take from his shoulders a whole lot of work of investigating the dockets of the justices of the peace?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The auditor is only interested in collecting all fees to which the District is entitled in those cases.

As such he was interested in having all such fees properly taxed and properly accounted for, and thought that a clerk that had charge of the business, and that being his only business, could do that in a better way than for the six justices to do it.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman think that one who is capable of being designated a judge by an act of the legislature would not be as competent to tax costs as a mere clerk that might be picked up because he could write a good hand, or something of that sort?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Quite so, if that was his only business; but, as my friend from Arkansas well knows, the judge who has upon his mind the important matter of a lawsuit when he is in the trial of a case gives that more attention than he does the taxing of 10 cents for the filing of a paper or for entering the appearance of a party.

Mr. MACON. If that is the character of the judges that they are going to appoint and elect here, of course I can see where the gentleman's contention is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They have a high character of justices here.

Mr. MACON. A man who is capable of being a judge in a great city like this——

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. MACON (continuing). When he takes an oath to do a certain thing, he ought to do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They can do it, but it was thought it could be more systematically done and that it would be better for everybody to have this law passed.

Mr. MANN. How much more will it cost to operate the courts under this plan than under the present plan?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is thought it will save in the neighborhood of $200 per annum.

Mr. BURLESON. Is not this just a preliminary movement toward a very marked increase in the salaries of the judges and all the other expenses incident to the conduct of their courts?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Nothing whatever of that character has been intimated and that is not the intention. It is not a step in that direction.

Mr. BURLESON. And the gentleman is satisfied that they will not ask for an increase of salary?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There has been no intimation whatever that they will ask for an increase of salary.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this bill was not taken up and considered by the District Committee on May 4, but, in fact, May 8. I was away then, serving on another committee with the distinguished chairman, in the State of New York, and consequently was not present when the bill was considered. But I supposed that the minority members of the Judiciary Committee had examined it, and I therefore gave it no thought. But, investigating to-day, I find that the minority members of the District Committee did not consider it and were not present when the committee reported the bill. Therefore I have given it such attention and study as I could. I am opposed to the bill, and I will give the committee my reasons for it.

Many of the reasons for the passage of the bill are good if present conditions are to be retained. In other words, if we are going to continue to have the justices of the peace all in one place, if these justices continue to hold their courts practically at one place, it is well to have a designated place in one building. But I appreciate the fact that these courts are minor courts; that their exceedingly limited jurisdiction is such as to indicate that they will be used largely by the poorer class of people or in cases where the amount involved is very small. I do think that the District of Columbia ought to be redistricted by an act of Congress, if necessary, and have a justice's court in Georgetown, one in the southern part of Washington south of Pennsylvania avenue, one in the eastern part of the District, and one, perhaps, if necessary, east of the Anacostia River. They should have them where the people will not have to patronize an automobile, a taxicab, or a street car company, or have to walk 2, 3, or 5 miles to get to a court. Perhaps, as the districts are now laid out, they have to do that. But I believe it would be a good idea to defeat this bill and then let a bill be drawn up properly with a view to having these justices' courts where they will be convenient to the people who litigate in such courts.

Then, another thing. I do not think it necessary to make these justices of the peace judges and make their courts courts of record and place them on the plane of United States courts, because I am satisfied there will be a demand immediately for an increase in their salaries to make them commensurate with the dignity of judges of other United States courts. I do not think it is at all necessary to make them judges.

As I started to say, I believe that we can make these justices' courts more useful to the people by defeating this bill and introducing a bill redistricting the District, requiring them to hold their courts at a central point in their district, such point as will be most convenient to the majority of the people within the District, that is the most thickly settled portion of the judge's district. Outside of that I do not see any particular objection to the bill; only I would not make them judges. Let them remain justices of the peace. I do not see why they should have clerks, and 1 clerk can not serve all these judges in different parts of the city. Let them get along as they have done and give them such reasonable allowance for help as may be necessary. It seems to me that $2,500 is plenty for a justice of the peace in this District. It is all we give the circuit judges and chancellors in my own State, and we think we have very good judges. My chief objection, however, to the bill is doing away with all of these districts and concentrating all at one point and making the people all resort to one place. I think they should have a court in each one-sixth portion of the District. As I have said, I was not present when the bill was considered, and therefore I have been embarrassed somewhat in speaking about it at this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee has offered nothing new in the way of substantial objection to this bill. The central part of this city is within twenty minutes of the most distant part of the District, on the street cars, and anybody who has had any experience at all in litigation knows that a matter of 10 cents street car fare is not a matter that would deter or embarrass the litigant in getting to the place where the case is to be tried.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is mistaken in regard to the conditions existing in a city like this. I have known many men to bring actions in these courts for wages, and not even have the price of a cup of coffee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He would have to pay his attorney to go out to Georgetown.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; he would not. He would have the poor process, no fees, nor any attorneys. He could make his complaint and have the process issued and served, and bring the party into court.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not made up of litigants who would indulge in litigation to a very great extent of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The great bulk of the business of these courts is by very poor litigants, who have actions for rent, possession of premises, wages, and for small sums of compensation for employment, and matters of that character, necessary in a city like this, and the judges ought to be near the people.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that if this bill prevails it will be in the interest of the lawyers of the city of Washington and no one else. I can conceive that if this bill becomes a law it will be only a short time before there will be such technical rules adopted by the court that is to be created by it that no person can be heard therein unless he is heard by counsel. The proceedings will be on the plan of the circuit courts of the different States of the Union. In a magistrate's court the humblest citizen in the land can have his rights determined, can appear in person and present his case, but if he goes to the circuit court he is powerless to present his case in person, because he is too ignorant of the legal, technical rules of courts of record to appear in them for himself, and must necessarily employ a lawyer to present his cause. So I believe if this bill becomes a law by our votes, we will be practically saying to every poor man in this District, "You must first have the price to pay a lawyer before you can have your rights properly determined in any sort of a court within the confines of the District." I am opposed to it upon that ground, if for no other reason, and I think you ought to give the question a serious thought before you say to these people that they must under any and all circumstances be forced to go to a court of record and pay a lawyer a large fee before they can have their humblest rights determined, pay a lawyer a fee before they can have justice done them. Under existing law they themselves can appear in person, without having the price to pay a lawyer's fee, and have their rights determined according to law, and that privilege ought to be permitted to abide with them forever.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I certainly have no special interest in this bill more than anyone else. The argument is made here that the poor man is being deprived of his rights. This bill was introduced in the Senate as early as last April and passed soon thereafter. The summer vacation has gone by, and so far as I know there is not the slightest objection on the part of the so-called "poor" of this city. As a matter of fact, there has been but one voice, so far as I know, from lawyers, litigants, and everybody else—that they believe this change is in the interests of all concerned.

The present judicial districts of the justices of the peace are so arranged that three of them, I am told, front at the court-house and the other three are within two blocks. This bill makes no decided change from what exists in other cities. It is sometimes appropriate to make comparisons with other cities. The city of Detroit, Mich., has about the same population as Washington. That city has a mayor and common council and something like 300 members of the bar. This question was agitated, argued, and settled in Detroit, and it was the judgment of lawyers and of litigants that the thing to do was to hold the justices' courts in one building, which they are doing with great success and satisfaction to all concerned.

Mr. KAHN. The same condition prevails in the city of San Francisco, and has prevailed there for many years, and it has been found exceedingly beneficial to all classes of litigants.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want to say in that same connection that I talked this morning with different Members on the floor who live in various cities of the Union, and they tell me that a like condition prevails in their cities. There is no criticism of the system, but it is found to be to the advantage of all the people.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How far do the people have to come in the city of Washington to try their lawsuits before these magistrates here about the court-house?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It depends, of course, upon what part of the District they come from.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is, on an average, a mile and a half to 3 miles, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should think in some cases it was a little farther.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How far is it across the city?

Mr. MANN. It is 10 miles across the District.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I mean the city of Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman knows the distance quite as well as I do.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you think it is well to have all these magistrates down here around the court-house?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They are there now.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do you not make these magistrates have their offices scattered around in different parts of the city?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Because, so far as I know, the demand is not to do what you suggest, but, on the contrary, it is to do what the people are asking for in this bill. The committee are simply trying to carry out the wishes of the people, so far as I know.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, let me tell the gentleman what occurred in my own city of Nashville. The country magistrates came in and held court in the cities to such an extent that they had to change the law and compel each magistrate to hold court in his own district, at all events, a certain number of days. The people in the country did not have the conveniences of the court in their country that they were entitled to have. Now the new law is working admirably. For litigants, with their witnesses, to come from out here 3 miles, take them in here to a trial of a case does not seem to me right; it is not exactly fair to them. There is nothing particularly wrong about it, but it is a burden upon them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman will certainly agree with me that it is no farther than to have the litigants in the State of Michigan go across a township which is 6 miles square—and that is the law there.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman from Michigan think it is better to have the magistrate in the neighborhood where he is elected and where the litigants and witnesses reside?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That may be so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that it is easier to go a third or three-quarters of a mile to a magistrate to try a case than it is to go 3 miles.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Sometimes it is more convenient and cheaper to hire a lawyer and let him try a case in a building like this, and bring the witnesses there, than it is to hire the lawyer to go a certain distance to try the case.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is easier for the lawyer to go that distance than it is for the litigant to take his witnesses that distance.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want to say again that the members of this committee have no special interest in this legislation. We believe, after hearing what the people of the District want done, that we have reported a bill in accordance with their wishes and their judgment, and therefore I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we are all guided more or less by our own personal experience. A few years ago in the city of Chicago there were eight justice of the peace districts—that is, eight townships—all the operations of which were included within the limitations of the city of Chicago. The district which I represent, the northern boundary line, is 4½ miles from the center of the city. The southern line is 14 miles from the center of the city. There was a justice of the peace in each of these townships under the title of justice and operating under the fee system. The proposition was made to establish a municipal court in the city to take the place of the justices of the peace. I am frank to say that I did not think the proposition would work well, that it would deprive the poor people of cheap justice. I was not particularly favorable to it. I believe I did not vote for it when it was submitted to the vote of the people.

But it became a law, however, and it has been in practice for a number of years. No one has criticised it. Those people in our city who are particularly interested in the welfare of the poor are especially pleased with the working of this system. There are several reasons for this. Let me call the attention of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. MACON], who always enlightens a subject upon which he speaks, who referred to the fact that it would delay litigants to this proposition. Under the provision of the statute as it now exists in the District, the justices of the peace are all located downtown. They are not located out in Georgetown, but all parts of the District are convenient to the location downtown. Now, if there happens to be half a dozen cases before one justice, all of them must wait, pending the disposition of the ones ahead. Another justice may be engaged in doing nothing while another may be overburdened with work, and so the poor people must wait, out of employment which is profitable to them, for the trial of their case.

Under the system as now proposed, and it seems to me that that is the kernel of this case, all of these justices will sit in the same building and the cases will be assigned to them in order as each one becomes disengaged in the trial of a case, so that the clerk will assign to each justice the cases as they can be reached, and people will not be required to wait while one justice is engaged on a dozen cases and another justice is engaged in doing nothing. It often happens in Washington, as elsewhere, that one man may be engaged in much work while another is doing nothing. Under this proposition all of them will be engaged until the work is disposed of, so that instead of delaying litigation it will hasten the trial of cases for litigants, instead of putting off the case from to-day until to-morrow or next week, because one justice is engaged in the trial of a case which he will not be through with, the litigants are sent to another justice who is not engaged in the trial of a case, and we all know that one of the great troubles with the justice of the peace practice is the delays that occur. This overcomes the delays and for that reason it seems to me highly desirable as a real reform to put this practice into operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But, Mr. Chairman, this bill has not been read for amendment as yet, and I wish to be recognized to debate the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that at this hour I am compelled to make the motion that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 6359) changing the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace of the District of Columbia, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

PENAL CODE.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11701) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11701, the penal code, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose after considering this bill an amendment was pending, offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], and on that amendment a division had been called for. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 109, strike out the word "or" before "lascivious" and after the word "lascivious" add the words "vile, filthy, or indecent."

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think it important that a brief explanation should be made to the House of just the condition of this bill at the time the consideration of it was suspended. I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may make a brief statement of the exact condition of affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the House had under consideration at that time section 212, on page 109 of the bill. Members will recall the fact that in addition to the regular bill they were furnished with what we called a "report," which contained printed upon one side the bill now pending before the House and printed on the opposite side the existing law, carefully codified, in order that they might at a glance be able to see if any changes were proposed by this bill. I trust, therefore, that the Members have at their command those reports. They had them and should have them now unless they have mislaid them.

The section of law under consideration is that under postal provisions respecting mailable matter; it has particular reference to that which is of an unmailable character and which is designated under existing law as "obscene, lewd, or lascivious." For a number of years after that law was pased there seemed to be no difficulty about its enforcement and about its general application. The courts had defined these words. They had defined the word "obscene" as meaning one kind of objectionable matter. They had defined it as applying to material that went through the mail that was of a coarse or vulgar or indecent character, and they had defined the other two words, "lewd or lascivious," as relating to matters having reference to sexual impurity. But in 1896 the Supreme Court, in a noted case, limited the meaning of all of those words in existing law—"obscene, lewd, and lascivious"—limited them in their application to publications relating to sexual impurity.

The pending amendment seeks to create another class of publications that shall be excluded from the mail—a class which is vile and filthy, but having no relation whatever to sexual impurity. That is the character of the pending amendment. At the time of the suspension of our consideration I had objected to the word that had been offered as an amendment to designate this class—that is the word "indecent." The pending amendment adds the words "vile, filthy, or indecent." I had objected, and it had been objected to by other Members on the ground that the word "indecent" is of too broad a signification; that it might be construed not to mean simply immodest, and it might be differently construed by different people. It might be construed, and probably would be, as, and, indeed, that is one of its synonyms, simply as indelicate, and as chairman of the committee I opposed the amendment including that word because it would give to Postmasters-General and judges too great a power in using their individual sense and judgment of what would be indecent to exclude from the mail what has heretofore been mailable matter, and in the conviction of persons charged with a violation of this section.

Now, I have been informed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], who offers the amendment, that he is also of that conviction; that he has a proposition to make respecting an amendment of his amendment. Therefore I will leave the floor to the gentleman moving his amendment for his explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend for one moment until the Clerk can report the pending amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

In line 18, page 109, strike out the word "or" before the word "lascivious," and after the word "lascivious" add the words "vile, filthy, or indecent."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the situation as stated by the chairman and the views of many Members of the House and the majority of the committee in regard to the indefinite character of the words of the amendment offered by myself, I want to ask unanimous consent from the House to withdraw that amendment and substitute another in its place, which will accomplish the purpose sought by the first amendment perhaps more definitely, and would relieve the doubtful construction of the words which were complained of by different Members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to withdraw the pending amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 109, in line 18, after the word "lascivious," insert the following: "and other filthy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, before the question is put I would like to suggest to the gentleman that it might be well to add the word "vulgar" to his amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I will read the section as it will be if amended by the amendment offered by me and sent to the desk: "Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious, and every filthy book, and so forth." Now, if we use the words "and other filthy," I think we get in a more distinctive class, which will embrace other articles of publication which are objectionable and that ought to be barred from the mails. The classification as stated in the old section as stated by the chairman has been held by the courts to apply only to matters relating to sexual impurity. Now it was the object of the amendment to add in a different class of filthy matter and have them excluded from the mails, but it was thought that was perhaps too indefinite, and there has been some holding, especially in a New York case, which has construed the words "vile, filthy, and indecent" in connection with the same words in the federal statute here, as still enumerating the same character of offense, because of their connection in the section. Now when we make this addition, setting forth "obscene, lewd, or lascivious," and then the phrase "and other filthy," that brings in a positive and definite class which I think will be of less doubtful construction.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi and Mr. MACON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I desire to ask the gentleman, Has there been any judicial interpretation of the word "filthy?" Does it have reference to anything other than the physical condition of the book? Have the courts given that word any other meaning?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Nasty, dirty, filthy, vile, and impure is the general meaning of it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But does not that refer to the physical condition?

Mr. HOUSTON. It does not. It would refer to the character of the publication.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; it refers to literature. It could not give it that meaning.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think the word "filthy" adds anything to the strength of the amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. No; but the word "filthy" makes it another class in addition to obscene, lewd, and lascivious.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not the words "vile, indecent, and disgusting" be a rather broader terminology than "vile, filthy, and indecent?"

Mr. HOUSTON. It was the opinion of the committee, and I think correctly, too, that the words "and other filthy" added to the terms already in the statute would make a distinct class that would reach the objectionable matter that has been complained of by the department as having been sent through the mails to quite an extent.

Mr. STAFFORD. I certainly favor the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, one word on behalf of the committee. I have no doubt Congress originally intended to create two distinct classes of nonmailable matter by the existing section. Indeed, the decision of the circuit court prior to the time of the Swearingen case had defined the word "obscene," or obscenity," as that form of indecency which is calculated to promote the general corruption of morals. They had defined lewdness and lasciviousness as that form of immorality which has respect to sexual impurity. However, that distinct classification was overturned by the Supreme Court decision in the Swearingen case, which decided that owing to the juxtaposition of the words "obscene," "lewd," and "lascivious" Congress had created but one class. Therefore feeling that Congress originally intended to create these two distinct classes of prohibition, on behalf of the committee I am entirely willing to put this language in the form offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], which I think does create another class and a class that the department informs us it is very necessary should be excluded from the mails.

Mr. MACON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], chairman of the committee, think that "filthy" covers the word "vulgar?"

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do. The synonyms of "filthy" are "nasty," "dirty," "polluted," "foul," "impure," and "obscene."

Mr. MACON. Nothing vulgar?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Well, I do not know. "Vulgar" is also a very broad word. If it is vulgarity extended to the verge of impurity or nastiness of any kind, it certainly would be included, and if it is not, I am not sure the mails ought to be closed to it.

Mr. MACON. The federal courts are holding now that you can put a vulgar thing in a letter or use a vulgar word, and transmit it through the mails, and not be indictable under the present statute.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Under the construction given in the Swearingen case.

Mr. MACON. Now, I want to ask if "filthy" would take in "vulgar?"

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. In my judgment it would to the extent to which we are to legislate upon that subject. I think it would, in other words. We have given it careful consideration, and the committee was under the impression that the word "filthy" would cover just what the department asked us to exclude.

Mr. MACON. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 213. All matter otherwise mailable by law, upon the envelope or outside cover or wrapper of which, or any postal card upon which, any delineations, epithets, terms, or language of an indecent, lewd, lascivious, obscene, libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, or threatening character, or calculated by the terms or manner or style of display and obviously intended to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another, may be written or printed or otherwise impressed or apparent, are hereby declared nonmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter carrier, and shall be withdrawn from the mails under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable matter, or shall knowingly take the same or cause the same to be taken from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing of or aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have just been advised that there are no copies of this bill that are available now to Members. There is, however, a supply of what is called the "proposed bill"—that is, the law as it is proposed on the opposite side of the page, the existing law. Those are available. Quite a number of us here had not a copy of the bill and could not get it, but we could get these. I want to know now if it will be permissible for the Clerk to read from this proposed bill, so that we could keep up with him. Otherwise it is impossible for us, those of us who have no bill, to keep the run of matters and know just what the amendment is or where in the bill the Clerk is reading.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It is the same bill exactly, I want to say, and the same language.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The same exactly, but reading from a different print. For instance, we are now on page 232——

The CHAIRMAN. In answer to the parliamentary inquiry as to whether that would be permissible or not, the Chair thinks not, for the reason that there would be some trouble in keeping track of it at the Clerk's desk. The Chair would state if the Clerk would announce the section, the gentleman might be able to follow.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, that would be a help. Of course, we have to count down the lines then to find out exactly where he is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would not be permissible for the Clerk to read anything but the official bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will ask, then, that the Clerk announce the sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will announce the sections. The Chair thinks he has been doing that, but perhaps the gentleman has not noticed. We are now reading section 213.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 214. No letter, postal card, or circular concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no lottery ticket or part thereof, or paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, or money order, for the purchase of any ticket or part thereof, or of any share or chance in any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme; and no newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or containing any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. Amend by inserting the word "package" between "letter" and "postal card" on the first line.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 111, line 24, insert the word "package" between the words "letter" and "postal card."

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think that ought to be in.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I think there is no objection to the amendment. It makes the matter the more clear.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 215. Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in the postal service, shall act as agent for any lottery office, or under color of purchase or otherwise, vend lottery tickets, or shall knowingly send by mail or deliver any letter, postal card, circular, or pamphlet advertising any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any ticket, certificate, or instrument representing any chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any list of the prizes awarded by means of any such scheme, shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, after section 215, insert the following as a new section, to stand as section 215a:

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the section just read. We have just amended section 214, upon motion of the gentleman from Missouri, by inserting the word "package," and in line 11 of page 113, after the word "letter," the same word ought to be inserted, and I therefore offer that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, line 11, insert after the word "letter" the word "package."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, after section 215, insert the following as a new section, to be numbered section 215a:

"That no letter, postal card, circular, book, newspaper, pamphlet, writing, or other publication containing any advertisement, notice, account, or record of any contract which is made for future delivery of any product or products of the soil, minerals, meats, stocks, bonds, or anything whatsoever, tangible or intangible, without agreeing and intending that the article or stock or asset which is the subject of such contract shall be actually delivered or received in kind, or relating to any contract wherein any party thereto in whose behalf such contract is made acquires the right or privilege to demand in the future the acceptance or delivery of such article or asset without being thereby obligated to deliver or accept same; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, money order, or other instrument of payment or obligation for any such contract or transaction hereinabove defined; and no notice, letter, writing, or publication of any kind or character referring or relating to what is commonly called 'dealing in futures,' 'stock gambling,' or other names or terms intended to be understood as relating to such contracts as are herein described, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier.

"That whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than two years, and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not endeavor to discuss this amendment upon its merits now. I had hardly expected that it would be reached to-day. Notice was given of the intention to offer this amendment quite a good while ago, so that all gentlemen, of course, have had full opportunity to study it. I call attention to the fact that the verbiage is very similar to that used in the lottery statute. This amendment provides for a clear exercise of the power which the Federal Government has. It only applies, and only undertakes to apply, to the use of the mails or the postal system, over which there is no question the Federal Government has supreme and exclusive power. I shall not endeavor now to go into a discussion of the merits or demerits of stock gambling.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that before we vote on this the gentleman ought to explain definitely, as well as he can, what it is intended to accomplish.

Mr. GARRETT. It is intended to accomplish in the case of future dealings precisely what has been accomplished in the matter of lotteries; to prevent the use of the mails for transportation of matter referring or relating to bucket-shop gambling and future dealing, being defined in the language given there so as to eliminate any legitimate transactions and defined clearly so as to cover only illegitimate and gambling transactions.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Of course it is very difficult to catch an amendment of that sort by merely hearing it read. But as I understood, it provides only against transactions where there was no intention to deliver the article itself?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. In that respect does the gentleman know how nearly that language is the same as the bill we passed here yesterday for the District of Columbia, forbidding bucket shops?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not know how nearly it follows it. I confess I have not seen the bill passed yesterday; I only heard it from the desk, and have not carefully analyzed it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment sounds as though it was along identical lines. That bill, as the gentleman from Kansas stated, was taken from the Massachusetts law. I think he stated it was taken from the Massachusetts law, and along the line of the law newly passed by New York against bucket shops. Can the gentleman tell us what this provision is taken from?

Mr. GARRETT. The language in this provision, drafted by myself, was taken, as I now remember it, from the statutes of Mississippi.

Mr. MANN. Intended to prevent bucket shopping?

Mr. GARRETT. Intended to prevent the transportation through the mails of anything relating to stock gambling.

Mr. MANN. Is that the statute of Mississippi?

Mr. GARRETT. The offense is defined in this bill as it is defined in the Mississippi statutes.

Mr. MANN. Aimed at bucket shopping.

Mr. GARRETT. Aimed at bucket-shop gambling; yes.

Mr. MANN. Do they have any public exchanges in Mississippi?

Mr. GARRETT. I shall have to refer the gentleman to some Member from Mississippi to answer that question.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; they have what are variously called exchanges and bucket shops, according to the view that different gentlemen take of the situation. As I understand, there are only two cotton exchanges, one in New Orleans and one in New York. These Mississippi establishments—warehouses, bucket shops, exchanges, or whatnot—are connected with the exchange in New York or the exchange in New Orleans, or maybe both. They are generally termed "bucket shops."

Mr. MANN. I think no one defends bucket shops, as far as I know——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Has it expired? This is a new section in this bill. Are we not entitled to an hour?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. We are in the Committee of the Whole House under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is speaking to an amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. He is speaking to an original proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. He is speaking to an amendment to the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask that his time be extended five minutes.

Mr. MANN. The Chair is undoubtedly correct. I was under the impression that in the reading of this bill we were entitled to general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is being read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether the section that he presents would, in his opinion, wipe out of existence dealing in all futures on an exchange like the New York Cotton Exchange?

Mr. GARRETT. No, sir; I would not say that it would. I think that it would cripple illegitimate dealings very much, but I would not undertake to say that it would absolutely wipe them out. This only goes to the question of the mail. Of course the telegraph offices would be left untouched, so far as this business is concerned, and the telephone lines and express lines.

Mr. MANN. Assuming that forbidding the use of the mails—is that the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. GARRETT. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. To prevent dealings in futures.

Mr. GARRETT. Illegitimate gambling; yes. Of course the gentleman knows that there is a certain amount of dealing in futures where the intention is to deliver that are legitimate, and there is no desire to infringe upon them, but this is leveled at illegitimate or gambling transactions, and I think the language is sufficiently clear to indicate that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that he thinks the language is sufficiently clear. We would like to have the gentleman's opinion as to what it means. He is familiar with the language. The difficulty is that we never saw it before. For myself I confess I am entirely unqualified to pass upon the meaning of the amendment which the gentleman sends up and has read at the Clerk's desk unless he informs us himself what he means by it.

Mr. GARRETT. As I have already stated, I gave notice when this revision matter was up at the last session of the Congress that I would offer this amendment. I inserted the proposed amendment in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at that time, stating that I would offer it when this section was reached. I did so in order that gentlemen might have the opportunity to inform themselves in regard to it. I am sorry that it did not happen to catch the eagle eye of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I trust the gentleman will not accuse me of being able to remember everything that occurred in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of last year. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly not.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Let me answer first the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois asking my opinion as to what the effect would be. I think, as I tried to state, the effect would be that it would prevent the using of the mail for the transportation of anything relating or referring to stock gambling, as we commonly understand it, or any illegal future dealing.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think from his own uncertainty in regard to the provisions in this section that it ought to be referred to a proper committee and properly considered and reported to the House before it is attempted to be put in this bill before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. GARRETT. I have not said, so far as I am concerned, that there was any uncertainty in my mind about it. I have tried to be modest about the matter. I do not mean to claim that no court would construe it differently, but I am quite certain that the language involved is easy of construction, and I will say that so far as its consideration is concerned, the amendment was offered as a bill and has been before a committee of the House. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that notice was given, and Members of the House have had months and months, if they were interested in the subject, in which they could study this amendment, because notice was given at the time and in advance.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I recollect that the gentleman gave notice, but this is a long and complicated section.

Mr. GARRETT. But gentlemen have had a long time to study it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I did not know that this bill was going to be called up now. It strikes me that the gentleman ought to allow this to go over until the next hearing of the matter, so that we may have a chance to examine it and consider it. I am in favor of the general proposition of the gentleman. I do not think I would want to vote for it now by just hearing it read from the desk. If the gentleman will let it stand over it may go through without trouble.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I would suggest to the gentleman that the gentleman from Tennessee says this is modeled after the Mississippi law. That ought to be sufficient for any gentleman who wants to do exactly the right thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. What was the Mississippi law modeled after?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the time of his colleague be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. I will state, in answer to the gentleman from New York, that my impression is that the language of the Mississippi statute and the language of the New York statute is almost identical upon this subject. I see no reason why we should not vote on this matter now as well as at any time.

Mr. CRAIG. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIG. I ask for information because I am interested in the bill. Does the language of the statute contemplate that there must be any intention on the part of one party or both parties?

Mr. GARRETT. The language of that statute would prevent the transportation by mail where there was any intention on the part of one of the parties, I think.

Mr. CRAIG. Take a case like this: A cotton mill receives an order for a bill of goods to be made up which they figure will take 100 bales of cotton. They have not the cotton at that time, but they go into the future market and buy 100 bales. They may have no intention then of taking the cotton, but going into the local market and buying the cotton, if they can do so at a proper price. Now, the intention of the man making the future contract may be perfectly good to deliver the cotton. Does this outlaw that kind of a contract?

Mr. GARRETT. I am inclined to think so.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not a fact that in the consideration of this bill for the codification of the code last year we practically adopted a rule that there should be no new matter inserted into this law by the Committee of the Whole in this way; that this was practically a revision or codification of existing law and not for the purpose of making new law? This amendment is entirely new law. It is a very important section, and the members of this committee have not had any chance to consider it fully on its merits. If the gentleman insists on its being acted on now, it ought to be voted down and not be put into the penal law in this manner.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say in regard to the rule to which the gentleman alludes that my observation is that wherever the majority of the House wanted to put a new section in they did so, and that wherever the majority was against it the rule was enforced.

Now, so far as not having an opportunity to study it is concerned, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] surely can not mean that. There has been opportunity to members of the committee to see it. I offered the amendment many days before it would have been reached in the ordinary course of procedure had we gone on with this bill, and it was there, open for the consideration of the Members, and has been during the entire vacation. At the time I offered it I stated that I did so in order that the committee might have an opportunity and Members might have an opportunity of studying it and analyzing it and meeting it upon its merits.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman says that his amendment is substantially the same as the New York statute. Will he inform us just what the New York statute does with reference to the mail?

Mr. GARRETT. What I meant, I will say to the gentleman from New York, is that the language which defines what stock gambling is was substantially the same as that of the State of Mississippi, and that it was my recollection that the language of the statute in Mississippi defining what stock gambling is was the same as that of New York, though as to that I am not sure, I will say.

Mr. PARSONS. Then, inasmuch as we have cotton exchanges in New York and stock exchanges, despite the New York law, is it the gentleman's idea that this amendment would not exclude from the mail matters relating to what goes on in the New York exchanges?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, that would be a matter of construction of the law. I do not know how the courts in New York would construe the laws up there.

Mr. PARSONS. I presume that if the amendment is modeled on the New York law, then the federal courts would probably follow the construction that the New York courts have put on the New York law.

Mr. MANN. What would the courts have to do with it?

Mr. JAMES. What would the state courts of New York have to do with the mail?

Mr. MANN. Or any other court?

Mr. PARSONS. It would have nothing to do with the mail, but——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. PARSONS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. The New York courts would have a chance to construe the law in case of any prosecution under the New York statute. Now, although the New York statute would not relate to the mail, when this amendment was being construed, having been said to be modeled on the New York statute, naturally the Postmaster-General or the court, if it got into court, would follow the ruling of the New York courts construing the same sort of language.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, perhaps we might speculate as to how it would be construed by the Postmaster-General and by authorities that will have it to deal with, and possibly it is proper to speculate about it. I think it would be construed so as to prevent the transportation through the mails of anything relating to future dealings. That is the intention and purpose of it, and I have used as nearly correct language as I can to reach that purpose. If any gentleman can suggest language that will be better, I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment to the amendment. I have done the best I could at drafting in that respect.

Mr. PARSONS. The difficulty is that not having been considered and reported by the committee, the Members of the House are in a position where they have not studied it, and it has not had that concerted scrutiny which any bill gets which has been considered by the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. Why?

Mr. PARSONS. Because it has not been before the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. It has been before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PARSONS. It is now; yes, sir.

Mr. GARRETT. For seven or eight months, and it has been in the RECORD for months and months.

Mr. PARSONS. I will say for the Committee on Revision, of which I have the honor to be a member, that we naturally would not consider such an amendment, because we have acted as though bound by what we have considered a rule established by the practice of the Committee of the Whole and which we assumed it would establish, that we should not incorporate new matter except in cases where it was plainly necessary to put into the statute what the courts had said should be the law or what we thought had originally been the intention of Congress and had been omitted. And if we proceed now to adopt such an amendment as this, then practically every bit of legislation that is before Congress can be tacked on here somehow and we will never revise the laws. It can be tacked on here, of course, if the House and the Senate see fit to do it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask the indulgence of the committee for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important proposition, as we all agree. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] says it has not been referred to his committee. That is possibly unfortunate, in one sense, but does that bar this great body of lawmaking lawyers and good hard-sense statesmen from now taking up this matter and now consiging it? It is a matter of too much importance to throw aside, because it has not been considered by the committee of which the gentleman from New York happens to be a member. The chances are it might be impossible, and I dare say would be, to get it back from that committee the balance of this session, and the gentleman knows it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARSONS. I do not know it at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman has spoken about the rules. I do not know whether the gentleman is one of the "kickers" on his side about the rules or not. I want to say, gentlemen, I have been a kicker for twelve years, and if I should stay in this Congress until I arrive at the age of 144 years I would kick against the rules of this or any House that suppresses free speech, that permits the sale of Wall street blubbers and allows stock gambling to go on as it does in New York to prey upon the people——

Mr. PARSONS. I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman is a member of the committee, and he has had his chance to do something in regard to stock gambling; now let the people have a chance.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will yield in a minute. Only this morning I read in one of the New York papers that Governor Hughes—and the gentleman is a "Hughesite"—[laughter] has appointed a committee to investigate "Wall street" transactions, following the suggestion of the humble gentleman from Tennessee, perhaps, who tried to get this Congress to not adjourn but one day for last Christmas, but remain here and investigate your Wall street. [Laughter and applause.] Now, what is the law——

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will yield when I get through the best part of my speech; I am now on "Wall street." [Laughter and applause.] Lo and behold, that great governor, for he is a great intellectuality, and it is a great pity that he has not been in the American Congress on that side, and I hope the time will come when a man who loves right, order, and justice and disapproves of stock gambling, as it seems he does, will get into one end or the other of this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, so much for that. I was very much surprised to learn from Governor Hughes, in the morning press, that the Republican legislature of New York had not given him any money to pay the expenses of this committee to investigate "Wall street," and he has asked the Hon. Horace White, whom we all well know, to be chairman of that committee to investigate "Wall street," its stock gambling, and its devilment generally—and its panic-producing machinery, if you please, and other wrongdoings with which "Wall street" has scourged our defenseless people for years.

HUGHES NAMES COMMISSION TO PROBE WALL STREET—BOARD OF NINE TO INVESTIGATE METHODS OF STOCK AND COMMODITIES EXCHANGES—HORACE D. WHITE HEADS IT—GOVERNOR SEEKS CORRECTION OF ABUSES AND REQUESTS AN EARLY REPORT.

ALBANY, December 14.

Governor Hughes to-night announced the appointment of a committee of nine, consisting of bankers, business men, and economists, to inquire into the facts surrounding the business of stock and commodities exchanges in New York and to suggest "what changes, if any, are advisable in the laws of the State bearing upon speculation in securities and commodities; or relating to the protection of investors, or with regard to the instrumentalities and organizations used in dealing in securities and commodities which are the subject of speculation."

The committee named includes Horace White, author and editor; Charles A. Schieren, merchant, formerly mayor of Brooklyn; David Leaventritt, former justice of the supreme court; Clark Williams, state superintendent of banks; John B. Clark, professor of political economy in Columbia University; Willard V. King, banker, president Columbia Trust Company; Samuel H. Ordway, lawyer, New York; Edward D. Page, of New York; and Charles Sprague Smith, director of the People's Institute, all of New York City.

ALL AGREE TO SERVE.

The commission is to serve without compensation, and it is understood all have signified their willingness to act. The commission has been asked by the governor to report as early as practicable.

To each member the governor to-night sent the following letter:

"GENTLEMEN: At the last session of the legislature I recommended that provision should be made for suitable inquiry into the facts relating to speculation in securities and commodities, with the view of ascertaining the manner in which illegitimate transactions might be prevented and legitimate business safeguarded.

"As I stated in accepting renomination, I had in mind in making this recommendation such an expert inquiry as was made into banking conditions, the result of which was the passage of highly beneficial measures. In this Commonwealth, the vast commercial and financial transactions of which represent the activities of the entire country, it is of the utmost importance that legislation affecting business and exchange should be the result of deliberate study, and that we should neither threaten business stability by ill-considered measures, or, on the other hand, invite agitation or impair confidence by ignoring abuses and by failing to provide suitable correction.

TO SUGGEST CHANGES.

"It is with this view that I request you to act as a committee for the purpose of collating facts, receiving suggestions, and making such recommendations as may seem to you fitting with regard to the following question:

"What changes, if any, are advisable in the laws of the State bearing upon speculation in securities and commodities or relating to the protection of investors or with regard to the instrumentalities and organizations used in dealing in securities and commodities which are the subject of speculation?

"It is not my intention to limit you in the consideration of any phase of the matters submitted, and I am confident that your carefully formed opinions, being those of men known for their interest in public questions and their acquaintance with affairs, and accredited to the community by high reputation, will be of the greatest value.

"I must ask this public service without offer of compensation or indemnity for expense, as I have no authority to subject the State to any obligation in connection with your appointment. But I know that your generous action in serving the community will be highly appreciated and will afford another and most welcome illustration of the public spirit of our citizens.

"I shall be glad to receive your report at as early a date as you may find practicable. I have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

"CHARLES E. HUGHES."

FAILED TO REPORT IT.

Governor Hughes recommended to the extraordinary session of the legislature this year that a similar commission be appointed, but the legislative committee to which the recommendation was offered failed to report it.

In his speech of acceptance, to which he refers in his letter, Governor Hughes said in part:

"I have no sympathy with financial schemes for the regulation of business with arbitrary legislation. But it is important to the maintenance of business stability and to the prosperity of honest enterprise that suitable opportunity should be afforded for the proper dealing with all questions that are presented, to the end that such remedies may be provided as after competent consideration may be found advisable."

Mr. Chairman, I happen to hold, and I am glad to say I do, in my hand one of the greatest speeches ever delivered in the American Senate—by the lamented James Z. George, of Mississippi—on this very question, the gambling transactions of the New York and New Orleans stock exchanges, saying that they were robbing the people of this country by virtue of the fact that Congress had not outlawed "options" and cotton "futures" and things of that sort. Now, here is a copy of that great speech. I thought so much of it that I have had it well bound, that I may keep it in my private library when I retire from the House, as I shall on the 4th of March.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I wanted to get through and then yield to your colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS], but——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to ask the gentleman if he has ever read the speech made in reply to that speech by the present Justice White, of the Supreme Court, who was then a Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, sir; I think Senator George was right, and I think that Mr. Justice (the then Senator) White was wrong.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I disagree with the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, thus runs the world away.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for five minutes' additional time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I say that we should stop this "gambling," as far as we can, by cutting the windpipe, by shutting it off from the use of the mail. We stopped the Louisiana lottery in that way. I believe the great supreme court of Louisiana had upheld that concern as a legal institution, and perhaps it was entirely legal because duly chartered by that State. But the Federal Supreme Court upheld the law passed by Congress, saying that an organization like that should not use the mail. We did not stop it until Congress had invoked this remedy. Then it stopped, never to go again. I mean no criticisms of either of these States. I love the great men of Louisiana, and I love the great men of New York. I respect their great intellectuality, Republicans and Democrats alike. But I love all the people of this country better than I do those of either State.

The great lawyer, Senator George, than whom no greater mind was ever in a legislative body in this country, said that two States in this country, New York and Louisiana, brought about and were keeping up this cotton-future gambling machine, and he was trying in 1892 to invoke the powers of Congress to stop it. It has not been stopped yet, and that speech was delivered on Monday, July 25, 1892. Now, let me read a few paragraphs from it, because I am sure you would rather hear from that great man than hear from me, although this speech is many years old. He says:

First. I have shown these future contracts to be absolutely null and void—as being mere wagers as to the price of cotton on a future day, and hence they are not legitimate dealings.

He further said:

This monopoly is in restraint of trade and commerce—interstate, foreign, and domestic—and it, as shown, controls the whole business.

He continues—

It is shown, if anything can be shown, that these dealings in futures, though actually carried on only in two places, in two States in the Union, do, because they relate to a product not present at the locality of the trade, and need not be present anywhere, affect, materially affect, the commerce in this product everywhere. Now, Mr. President, I have shown this to be an obstruction to commerce, I have shown that it is a business carried on in only two places in the United States, in which, giving the same number to New York as to the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, only 600 of the people of the United States can engage.

I have shown that it is so interwoven and interlocked with interstate commerce in cotton and foreign commerce in cotton that the witnesses say if you disturb it you disorganize the whole system. Now, what remains? Nothing but for us to do our duty in passing the bill.

That was from that great man, the father of the Mississippi constitution; this great jurist who helped to build the Sherman antitrust law—not a line of which Senator Sherman wrote—one of the great Senators whose legal arguments were so felt in the American Congress in throwing overboard the varying propositions of Senator Sherman, that he, with Judge Reagan, carried with them the leading Republican lawyers of that body, finally bringing out the measure that was at last brought out, based upon the commerce clause of the constitution and made law.

Mr. Chairman, of course I can go further and read from Senator George's speech, but I have read enough to show you why we find that in 1892 he said two States, one a Democratic and the other a Republican State, one Democratic now and the other Republican now, were running this stock-exchange business that my colleague's bill is leveled against.

Now, do not let us sit here like a lot of schoolboys and say we have not got time to write a few lines of good law on this subject. We are fixing to go home now and stay nearly three weeks, as we did last year, when I invited you to stay here and investigate our Wall street panic. I know you are just as good thinkers as we are and just as considerate as we are, and you can legislate when you will just as well as we can on this side.

I want to get this bill through. I told the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] that I was going to help him. I had forgotten about my colleague's amendment. I knew he had offered it. We should not plead the baby act and say that we have not time to stop gambling.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I beg of this distinguished committee—the bill has already passed the Senate now and is over here—to consider this matter, which to-day is a menace to this country, and which the gentleman from Tennessee, who has studied it, says is a menace, as well as the gentleman from Mississippi, my friend [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. You all know, gentlemen, that the money from our banks in the country is sent to New York, thence to Wall street, and by stock gambling in that city we get back panics and bankruptcy. I say if we can not do anything else in this matter the balance of this week we ought to stay here and stop this stock gambling that has brought so much ruin under all administrations in this country. The great governor of New York has invited gentlemen, without money and without price, as patriots, to examine into and get to the bottom of it.

House Report No. 1387, Sixtieth Congress, first session.

PROHIBITION OF BUCKETING AND BUCKET SHOPPING, AND ABOLITION OF BUCKET SHOPS.

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 20111:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20111) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," relative to gambling, bucket shops, and bucketing, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass when amended as follows:

Add at the end of line 5, page 4, the following:

"If a domestic corporation shall be convicted of a second offense, the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction, upon an information in equity in the name of the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, on the relation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to dissolve the corporation; and if a foreign corporation shall be convicted of a second offense, the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction, in the same manner, to restrain the corporation from doing business in the District of Columbia."

The purpose of the bill is to prohibit gambling on the price of stocks, securities, and commodities.

Gambling in stocks and commodities has been the subject of prohibitive legislation in Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Michigan, Massachusetts, Missouri, North Carolina, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, and Wisconsin.

The constitutions of California and Louisiana prohibit the dealing in stocks on margins and for future delivery. There is now under consideration by the New York legislature a bill very similar in its provisions to the one your committee reports. The laws of some of the States named are drastic and far-reaching, going so far in their effect as to prohibit speculation in stocks and commodities.

The intent and purpose of the law in all cases is to prohibit the gambling that is done in stocks, securities, and commodities.

Gambling in stocks and commodities is a subject of discussion in many of the countries of the world. Within the past decade the subject has been under consideration in some form or other by the Argentine Republic, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Servia, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland.

The Canadian government has passed an effective law upon the subject. Throughout the European countries a popular protest has arisen against gambling on the prices of commodities that compose the necessities of life.

It is thought wise to prohibit this species of gambling that is widely indulged in and most destructive in its consequences. Men who can ill afford to lose gamble and lose their money in bucket shops, betting on the differences in prices of stock and commodities. Thousands have thought they could win in stock and commodity gambling and have gone to their ruin. They have started in the bucket shop on a small scale, settling the differences between prices, and ended in ruin, the penitentiary, or the grave of a suicide.

It is estimated that within the last twenty-five years $2,500,000,000 have been lost in this species of gambling by those who could not afford to lose.

Embezzlement, imprisonment, ruin, suicide, and panic have been the results. Some of the principal victims are here named:

"1884. The Marine National Bank of New York City was looted by two of its directors, who, in their Wall-street speculations on margins, lost $2,000,000. The Second National Bank, through the Wall-street speculations of John C. Eno, its president, lost $4,000,000.

"1891. John T. Hill, president of the Ninth National Bank of New York City, speculated away $400,000.

"1894. Frederick Baker, a depositor, and Samuel C. Seely, bookkeeper in the National Shoe and Leather Bank of New York City, lost $354,000.

"1895. Frank C. Marvin, lawyer, Brooklyn, $75,000.

"1898. John S. Hopkins, cashier of the People's Bank of Philadelphia, lost the bank's funds in speculation and killed himself, $700,000.

"The Chemical National Bank, of New York City, lost through 'mistakes of judgment' on the part of the cashier, $393,000.

"Ex-Mayor F. H. Twitchell, of Bath, Me., $60,000.

"1899. George M. Valentine cashier of the Middlesex County Bank and treasurer of the Perth Amboy (N. J.) Savings Institution, confessed to losing in speculation $125,000.

"1900. Cornelius J. Alvord, jr., note teller of the First National Bank of New York City, lost in stock speculation $690,000.

"William Schreiber, clerk in the Elizabeth Banking Company, Elizabeth, N. J., squandered in Wall street $106,000.

"A confidential clerk of a wholesale house in Walker street, New York City lost in Wall street $200,000.

"1903. Frank V. La Bountie, confidential clerk for law firm of Wilson & Smith, of Chicago, $500,000.

"William S. Allen, treasurer Preachers' Aid Society, Boston, $70,000.

"United States Playing Card Company, of Cincinnati, robbed by a trusted woman employee of $100,000.

"Enoch L. Cowart, cashier of the Navesink (N. J.) Bank, $40,000.

"John A. Scott, cashier of the New York office of the London Assurance Company, $25,000.

"William B. Given, president of the Lancaster County (Pa.) Railway and Light Company, $100,000.

"Thomas W. Dewey, cashier of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Newbern, N. C., $125,000.

"James M. Watson, jr., clerk for auditor of the District of Columbia, $100,000.

"Trusted clerk at the Hotel Beresford, in New York City, $50,000.

"1904. Arnold Beathlen, cashier of a bank at West Liberty, Pa., $85,000.

"John F. Goggin, treasurer of the Nashua Trust Company, of Nashua, N. H., arrested, charged with defalcation of $100,000.

"George A. Rose, cashier of the Produce Exchange Banking Company of Cleveland, $170,000.

"Wallace H. Ham, Boston agent of the American Surety Company of New York City, $286,000.

"Ex-Mayor S. F. Smith, of Davenport, Iowa, $150,000.

"F. H. Cutting, bank president, of Ota, Iowa, $112,000.

"1905. Ex-Tax Collector E. J. Smith, of San Francisco, $60,000.

"Paul O. Stensland, Chicago banker, who was captured abroad, $1,500,000.

"Cashier of the Cornwall (N. Y.) Bank, $45,000.

"W. W. Karr, accountant of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., $50,000.

"Mayor William H. Belcher, Paterson, N. J., $150,000.

"Frank G. Bigelow, head of the First National Bank of Milwaukee, $1,450,000.

"F. H. Palmer, cashier of the State Bank, Peconic, Long Island, $40,000.

"Denver (Colo.) Savings Bank, looted by speculating officials of $1,700,000.

"Newton C. Dougherty, superintendent of schools, Peoria, Ill., $250,000.

"T. Lee Clarke, cashier of the Enterprise (Pa.) Bank, $1,200,000.

"F. R. Green, cashier Fredonia National Bank, $300,000.

"1906. Joseph A. Turney, note teller in the National Bank of North America, of New York City, took from the institution and lost in Wall street $34,000.

"County Treasurer F. E. Smith, of Akron, Ohio, $282,000.

"Gordon Dubose, president of the First National Bank, Ensley, Ala., $40,000.

"Frank K. Hipple, president of the Real Estate Trust Company of Philadelphia, $7,000,000.

"C. S. Hixson, bookkeeper, Union Trust Company of Pittsburg, $125,000.

"1907. Charles T. Barney, president of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, who killed himself when the financial crash came. It is estimated by his close friends that the total amount lost by him in speculation was almost $10,000,000.

"F. Augustus Heinze, whose losses in the market fluctuations, according to a statement made by him to a friend, were $9,000,000.

"Charles W. Morse, whilom 'Ice King,' 'Steamboat King,' and 'Bank Chainer,' whose losses in market fluctuations are figured at $20,000,000.

"Chester Runyan, bank clerk, New York City, $86,000.

"George H. Brouwer, known as the 'soul of honor,' confidential man for James H. Oliphant & Co., stock brokers, of New York City, $90,000.

"Clerk for the tax collector of New Orleans, $100,000.

"William F. Walker, treasurer of the New Britain (Conn.) Savings Bank, $600,000.

"Miss Flora Steipel, cashier in a Philadelphia department store, $25,000.

"Oliver M. Dennett and William O. Douglass stole $1,300,000 in securities from the Trust Company of America, and pawned them for $140,000."

All these enormous losses were the direct result of gambling in stocks and commodities as defined in this bill—not in the legitimate purchase of railroad or industrial stocks, or grain, or cotton, or produce of any character. It was not investment; it was gambling in options, futures, and the differences in prices of the products of the farm and stocks and securities of the transportation companies of the country.

It is safe to add to the injury that falls to the lot of the unfortunate individual who thus "speculates" and loses and his family the injury that comes to the whole country. Gambling in the price of other people's property with other people's money has more than once led the country into financial panics that have had a most harmful effect upon the otherwise prosperous business of the country. Thousands of industrious and innocent men have been thrown out of employment because other men gambled with the property they produced or worked with.

This bill has been carefully prepared and is conservative in its provisions. It is modeled after the Massachusetts statute on the same subject. It will not interfere with the investors in stocks and commodities of any character in any legitimate speculation in them.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire only a few moments to discuss this amendment. It is gratifying to know that the question is pointedly presented here, so that we may vote on the direct proposition. Permit me to say there can be no more appropriate time to vote upon such an amendment than while we are adopting the penal code of the United States. We are now considering the criminal statutes, and as legislators during this consideration we are surely capable of passing on this important question. The amendment of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] simply proposes to deny the use of our postal facilities for the purpose of transmitting mail or information in regard to "speculation in futures" and "stock gambling." It applies to agricultural products, meats, minerals, stocks and bonds, and many other things, and seeks to prohibit "speculation in futures" and "stock gambling" pertaining to such things. Its meaning is manifest, and clearly presents to Members of this House the proposition of whether or not they favor such gambling transactions and vicious practices. The amendment has my cordial support, and I take my stand against such gambling evils here sought to be reached.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing ambiguous about the issue here joined. It is clear and specific. It proposes to deal with gambling contracts, and in so doing seeks to deny the use of the mails in transmitting anything touching the same. It does not go as far as, in my judgment, it should go. It only denies the use of postal facilities in the transmission of such information, contracts, and writings. It should include telephone and telegraph lines, steamboat lines, express companies, and railways. But this amendment does not extend that far.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman does not mean to be understood as saying that this would be germane to that point?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am not discussing that proposition; but say here is a clear provision presented for the determination of this House, and there is no reason why we should not amend our penal statutes and apply a remedy to the evils manifest in this great problem.

Mr. Chairman, I have read carefully the amendment drawn by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee. During the last session of this Congress he had it printed in the RECORD. and gave notice that in due season he would call it up and ask for its adoption. The proposed legislation is along familiar lines; there is nothing doubtful about it. It can be perfectly understood. A few years ago the Louisiana lottery was corroding the civilization of this country; the people throughout the Union arose and asked Congress for legislation on that great evil and to exterminate it. Congress passed an act which denied to the lottery the use of the mails, express, railways, telegraph, telephone, and steamship companies, and prohibited further transaction of the business of that institution anywhere in this Union or wherever it touched interstate or foreign commerce.

Gentlemen, the questions in litigation went to the Supreme Court of the United States. That court, in a well-considered opinion, held it was within the power of Congress to deny the use of all these facilities to the Louisiana lottery and stamp it out of existence. It was put out of being by federal legislation. We have a provision here based upon similar legal propositions. There is no reason why we should not adopt the amendment. If "gambling in future transactions" is vicious, we have the opportunity to secure legislation that will suppress in some degree a crying evil which has injured people throughout the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am not here discussing the question of abolishing the New York Cotton Exchange or the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, but leave that matter for some other occasion. It is not involved in the verbiage of the proposed amendment. Whether Congress has power in any sort of way or by any kind of method to abolish them or whether they are purely local questions of state concern is a broad proposition to be dealt with at another time. However, it is undeniably true that there are many vicious and gambling transactions carried on in the cotton exchanges that can and should be stamped out. There are doubtless legitimate and necessary ones prosecuted there; but, in my humble judgment, the vicious and of a gambling nature are preponderating. The time has come to meet the problem, and Congress can not much longer tolerate such practices as I have pointed out.

The producers of cotton and other agricultural products are waging a great fight against these nefarious evils and are now invoking the aid of Congress in that contest and have a right to do so. We can come largely to their relief if we will. We are fully advised that the foreign spinners can go upon the New York and New Orleans cotton exchanges and fictitiously sell the market down in spite of the greatest cotton pool the world ever witnessed. As long as we allow such immoral practices the farmer must bow his head and put his neck under the cruel yoke of gamblers, speculators, and commercial buccaneers. I am bitterly opposed to tolerating such a condition and raise my voice in emphatic and violent protest against it. Mr. Chairman, any system anywhere which permits gamblers to sell or buy a hundred millions of bales of cotton which they never expect to receive or deliver (and which can not and will not be produced) to persons who do not wish to receive it and never expect its delivery is a grievous and outrageous injury to the producer, is criminal, immoral, and detrimental to every interest of the farmer and should be speedily crushed out of existence. Time forbids me going into fuller discussion of those topics now, but I am glad of the opportunity to say here that in my humble judgment Congress should reach out its strong right arm and protect the millions of producers in America. We should exhaust every legitimate and constitutional power based upon the interstate-commerce clause, the postal clause, or wherever we may find warrant in the Constitution to bring wise and efficient aid in properly legislating on these problems.

It passes my comprehension when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS]—and I would like to be enlightened—is opposed to the amendment, for certainly he must believe that gambling transactions prohibited by this amendment are evils. I can not understand why my amiable friend [Mr. FITZGERALD] from the city of New York should be opposed to such legislation as this. Nor can I conceive how any Member can raise his voice against stamping out such wrongs. This amendment, if adopted, proposes to deny the use of United States mails to anyone engaging in such gambling transactions as described by its terms. It contemplates making a new section to the code. Gentlemen, if you are opposed to such vices, give us your vote, and let us embody our protest in the penal code.

Gentlemen, it is all nonsense to talk about not amending this code while we are considering it. Why is it brought into the House for consideration if it is not for Members to rise and state their positions in regard to the various sections taken up? Why not pass it through en bloc? Why not pass it all in ten minutes if we can not amend it and consider it, as some of you gentlemen contend? Mr. Chairman, if I should study this question for a year I could not better understand it than to-day, and do not believe there is a gentleman in the sound of my voice who does not perfectly understand the provisions of the amendment and the object aimed at.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Is it not true that during the last session of Congress we amended this very bill frequently?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not think there is any question about it, and after looking through it I think we will amend it very frequently as we proceed. It needs amendment.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is it not also a fact that the President in the last session of Congress recommended legislation aimed largely against gambling in futures?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The President, as I recollect, recommended it at the last session and at this session as well, and I do not think there can be much diversity of opinion in regard to the proposition that legislation is necessary. As to whether or not Congress can stamp out the New York Cotton Exchange or the New Orleans Cotton Exchange or some other exchange located in some State of this Union is another proposition. I am not undertaking to discuss those things now, but say our power is clear, and we should put something in the statute and prevent transmission of information pertaining to such gambling contracts as are mentioned in the provision. I believe if any gentleman thinks it ought not to be permitted he should vote with us. This is a step in the right direction. It does not go far enough. I wish we might now include the telephone, telegraph, railway, and express companies and all other transportation facilities, but I know a point of order would perhaps be made against such effort, and we would not be permitted to incorporate them in it this afternoon.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman, in answer to the question just asked about the President's message, that he have the Clerk read a part of what the President said.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; I should like to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This shows what President Roosevelt thought on the subject, and what he said in a message that came here, wrapped up, I believe, in asbestos.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Let it be read in my time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Just to show the Republican position.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

I do not know whether it is possible, but if possible, it is certainly desirable, that in connection with measures to restrain stock watering and overcapitalization there should be measures taken to prevent at least the grosser forms of gambling in securities and commodities, such as making large sales of what men do not possess and "cornering" the market. Legitimate purchases of commodities and of stocks and securities for investment have no connection whatever with purchases of stocks or other securities or commodities on a margin for speculative and gambling purposes. There is no moral difference between gambling at cards or in lotteries or on the race track and gambling in the stock market. One method is just as pernicious to the body politic as the other in kind, and in degree the evil worked is far greater. But it is a far more difficult subject with which to deal. The great bulk of the business transacted on the exchanges is not only legitimate, but is necessary to the working of our modern industrial system, and extreme care would have to be taken not to interfere with this business in doing away with the "bucket shop" type of operation. We should study both the successes and the failures of foreign legislators who, notably in Germany, have worked along this line, so as not to do anything harmful. Moreover, there is a special difficulty in dealing with this matter by the Federal Government in a Federal Republic like ours. But if it is possible to devise a way to deal with it the effort should be made, even if only in a cautious and tentative way. It would seem that the Federal Government could at least act by forbidding the use of the mails, telegraph and telephone wires for mere gambling in stocks and futures, just as it does in lottery transactions.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] I have had that read for the information of the House. Let me say I have always been ready to support the President of the United States when he recommended good legislation, such as contained in this message. Therefore I must again express my surprise that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] and the other New York gentleman [Mr. FITZGERALD] should be opposed to our contention, when the President of the former's party and of this country so enthusiastically advocates it. When gentlemen arise to discuss this, if they intend to do so, let them state their reasons for opposing it on its merits. Let us raise no technical objections, but give the real reason for your opposition.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would suggest to the gentleman from Texas that the chief reason which some of the gentlemen opposed to this amendment have suggested is that the amendment might not in reality prevent that which they think ought not to be prevented. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If they have any such fears, I am sure the gentleman from Tennessee would be willing to accept any amendment making it more effective.

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I apprehend that there is enough certainty of verbiage in the amendment to be of practical benefit to the people of the country. My recollection is the lottery legislation was given us by the Republican party. It was put in the statutes by that party, illustrating that they do occasionally enact some good laws. [Laughter.]

Here is one recommended by their President, and I want to invoke the aid of gentlemen who agree with us to act with us this afternoon, and let this just and wholesome law go into the statutes and be the crowning act of President Roosevelt's administration. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know when I have seen anything in the press dispatches that pleased me more than when I noticed this morning that Governor Hughes had appointed a special commission to make an investigation of the transactions of the stock exchanges in New York. Everybody knows what Governor Hughes aims to reach. He proposes to reach just what is proposed to be reached by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee—the stock gambling that is transacted on these stock exchanges.

On yesterday this House passed by a unanimous vote a bill prohibiting the keeping of bucket shops in the District of Columbia. In doing so the Congress of the United States did for this District what almost every State in the Union has done heretofore. The State of New York last winter passed a most forcible law to prevent the keeping of bucket shops and of bucketing. The State of Illinois years before had done the same thing.

Mr. PARSONS. Was not the law passed in New York State last year advocated by the New York Stock Exchange?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was; and the New York Stock Exchange does some legitimate business; that is, it does a percentage of legitimate business. Less than 10 per cent of the business transacted on the New York stock exchanges is legitimate, however. The remaining 90 per cent is just such business as is prohibited by the bill passed by this House yesterday, aimed directly at bucket shops.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman heard that part of the President's message, in which he said that the great bulk of the transactions there—on the New York Stock Exchange—were legitimate? I would like to ask whether he agrees or disagrees with the President as to that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not agree with the President in the degree of percentage he has given there. The president of one of the exchanges appeared before our committee last winter, and when the question was squarely put to him, he would not say that 3 per cent of the business transacted on his exchange resulted in legitimate sales to legitimate purchasers where there was a delivery in good faith by a man who had the property to sell to a man who wanted to buy it. That was the testimony given by a president of one of the New York exchanges in one of the committee rooms of this Congress less than eight months ago.

I have in my hand what practically amounts to a confession by a man who has been engaged in the business, and I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read, omitting the addressee and the writer's name.

Mr. PARSONS. Before that is read, let me ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman does not intend to state that the person who appeared before the committee said that the people who dealt in these transactions did not intend that a certificate of stock should be delivered?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, he described minutely just what was done, and what is done is a subterfuge to defeat the criminal laws of the State of New York. There is a pretense of delivery in good faith and a percentage of purchases in good faith, but everybody knows that, in the main, the man who sells does not own the property, and the man who buys does not mean to take the property, in too many instances not being able to pay for it.

The time of Mr. CAMPBELL having expired, by unanimous consent his time was extended five minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEAR SIR: Seeing the inclosed item in the Pittsburg Post this morning, I take the liberty of expressing to you a few thoughts based on the experience and observation of more than twenty-five years in the speculative markets as speculator, exchange broker, and "bucket-shop" man. I do not propose to defend the "bucket shop" as not being an evil that should be eliminated from the body politic. The "bucket shop" is merely a trailer in the wake of regularly organized exchanges, and the opposition to their method of doing business comes not from the speculative public but from these same stock exchanges, for the simple reason that they (the "bucket shops") cut in on their business, at least 90 per cent of which is as nefarious as any "bucket-shop" business.

What is desired is to eliminate the gambling features as far as possible from stock dealings. Now, then, the gambling feature comes in at the "margin" line. Eliminate all "margin" trading, both in stock exchanges and "bucket shops," and an evil stupenduous in its proportions will be abolished.

More than 90 per cent of stock-exchange transactions are marginal deals, which, if eliminated, would reduce the business to such small proportions that the general public would lose all interest in speculation and "bucket shops" would cease to exist.

It makes no difference to a "trader" dealing on "margins" whether he operates with an exchange broker or a "bucket shop;" the result is almost invariably the same, viz: He puts up a margin of from 1 to 10 per cent of the value of the stock with the "broker;" the markets go against him; his margins are exhausted; his account is closed by the "broker"—whether an exchange broker or not—and he has lost his money. I assert, and challenge any exchange broker to refute it, that the percentage of loss to their clients on their "marginal" business is as great on an equal amount of business as in any "bucket shop." Reference is made to the "antibucket-shop" law of Pennsylvania. There is about as many "brokers'" offices open in Pittsburg now as there were before the passage of the law, and people are dealing on "margins" and losing their money just the same, but the business is principally put through regularly organized exchanges, thereby eliminating the "bucket-shop" feature, but not in the least eliminating the evils of stock gambling from the body politic. As between stock exchanges and "bucket shops," it is merely a case of the "pot and kettle," and the Lord knows they are both black enough. Let the Congress put a prohibitive tax on all "marginal transactions" in stocks, and the speculative gambling dog is dead.

I want to say that our house closed its business on June 1 of last year, on the passage of the "antibucket-shop" law, and we are in no way interested in the speculative markets at the present time.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the writer of the letter be omitted from the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the name of the writer of the letter be omitted from the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman read and considered the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have read it; I have not given it careful consideration.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think this House ought to vote on an important question of that kind without having carefully considered it and having considered it carefully in many aspects, more carefully than it is possible to consider it in the House sitting as a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can only speak for myself on that. I have read the amendment—read it when it went into the RECORD. I have heard it read again this afternoon. I am ready to vote on it. I favor the amendment. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I see nothing in it that is injurious to the country, and I see nothing in it that would indicate it was bad legislation; and I believe it would lead to good results.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman himself has recently been engaged in preparing a similar bill for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. And therefore has given careful consideration to the subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have given some time and consideration to the subject.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Therefore, in all probability, by reason of that special study, was better able to digest the amendment as it was read from the desk than the other members of the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I read it at the time it was first placed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I should like to have just a little more time; I wanted to make one or two observations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If my time can be extended. I have some things I really want to say, but I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman suggested in opening his remarks that Governor Hughes had taken this matter up in a manner very satisfactory to him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman is aware, is he not, that Governor Hughes has appointed a committee of very distinguished experts, if you may use the word, to consider and report upon dealings in stocks and bonds and all that. Now, if the gentleman wants to follow——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is that the gentleman's question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. My question is coming. We will give the gentleman plenty of time. I am sure this House wants to be informed. Now, if the gentleman wants to follow the guidance of New York's distinguished governor, why does he not allow this amendment to be referred by this House to its proper committee, as it ought to be, where it will be investigated with great care and reported upon, so that the House may have the facts and know what it is voting upon?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I stated in the beginning of my remarks that I was particularly pleased with the action of Governor Hughes in appointing a commission for the purpose of making an investigation of this subject, and I assert again that I am particularly pleased that that distinguished governor has taken that important action, for I believe that it will result in action that will be beneficial to the whole country.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Now, will the gentleman answer my question? Why should not this amendment be submitted first to a committee of this House, which will take such action as the Hughes commission is expected to take?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, this amendment has been before the House for some months. It has been in the RECORD. We are not hearing of this subject for the first time. There is not a man here who has not discussed one side or the other of this question and who does not know of the subject-matter under consideration. There is not a man here who does not recall the methods by which the Louisiana lottery was put out of business—the method proposed now to rid the country of stock gambling. There is not a man here who does not know that stock gambling, not stock speculation, is as great an evil as taking chances on the Louisiana lottery was, and that does not know that stock gambling has resulted in greater injury to the legitimate business of the whole country than the Louisiana lottery ever did.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not take exception to what the gentleman has affirmed, but I desire to ask if this amendment, which is in the form of a regular bill, and which presumably has been referred to a regular committee, has been examined and favorably reported to the House? Can the gentleman answer that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have to answer that it has not; but I am satisfied, so far as I am concerned, having read the amendment, having read the bill, to vote upon the question; and I am satisfied that there is not a man here who is not prepared to vote upon it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman has stated there is a difference between stock speculation and stock gambling.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman, for the benefit of the Committee of the Whole, define that difference?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I should say the difference was this: A man who speculates legitimately in stocks would buy the stock, and pay for it, and become the owner of it, and when he found a purchaser who would purchase it so that he could sell at a fair profit he would sell. I would call a stock gambler a man who did not have the price of the stock in the first instance and therefore not able to buy and become the real possessor or owner of the property—a man only able to put up a small margin and willing to take chances on losing the margin.

Mr. BURLESON. Only be able to put up a small margin.

Mr. PARSONS. Would the gentleman allow a purchaser of stock to borrow money against it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, if he had the money and was able to buy the stock, I would not object to his borrowing money against it, but I would not say that he was able to buy stock if he only had $5,000 or $10,000 and wanted to buy $200,000 or $300,000 worth of stock on a particular day. In that case I should say that he was not a speculator; I should say that he was a gambler risking a margin on the difference in prices.

Mr. PARSONS. He can not speculate in stocks on the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But he does.

Mr. PARSONS. He does not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman has a right to his opinion, but I assert the fact to be as I have stated. A respectable gambler goes to a bank in the morning before 10 o'clock and has a check certified for whatever amount the banker is willing to trust him for, and he goes back to the bank at 2.15 in the afternoon and deposits the securities that he has bought on the exchange during the day with the certified check that he got in the morning. The stock so deposited is the security the bank has for the check it certified in the morning.

Mr. PARSONS. He combines the two transactions just as other people in New York who buy real estate combine the two transactions. The poor man in New York who manages to save his money and wants to buy a house goes to a loan company or a life insurance company or some other concern and says he is going to buy a house, but he has only one-third of the money necessary. Will they loan him two-thirds when he buys that house? They say "yes," after they have investigated. Then they send their lawyers with his lawyer, and the whole transaction is closed in one.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The stock gambler says he does business the same as the man who buys real estate; but he does not. I am aware that is the defense of the stock gambler; that is the pretense that is made in order to avoid the criminal laws in the State of New York.

Mr. PARSONS. And I dare say some of the farms out in your country are bought in just the same way.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; a man buys a farm in good faith. He knows what he is getting and he wants the farm; he has to put up, and he enters upon the farm or sends his tenant there. Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from New York makes a strong point against passing legislation by this House without being considered by a committee. Now I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas if we did not pass one of the most important bills ever passed in this House in the last session, called "the Vreeland currency bill," without any report of or consideration by the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have been wanting to say something which I had in mind. I do not appear here as an expert in stock gambling. I never won a dollar on either exchange in my life and never lost a dollar.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Your colleague alluded to Governor Hughes's action, and says that Governor Hughes did so and so yesterday, in the face of the fact that last year Governor Hughes's legislature passed a law designed to remove this evil. Does not the mere fact that he has called upon this lot of volunteer people in New York to aid him show that the law has failed and we should help him out?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is it not true that we did have a special committee on the currency bill, several very eminent Members of this body, and that they took a long time to consider it, and finally made a report which was very satisfactory to almost the entire House?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not like to be sidetracked from a discussion of stock gambling to the passage of the Vreeland currency bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I asked the gentleman a question that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] ought to answer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The American Congress, if it adopts the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], will only be doing what has been done to some extent in almost every country. The gentleman from Tennessee is especially interested in preventing gambling in the price of cotton. My interest is especially to prevent gambling in the price of wheat and corn and in the price of cattle and hogs. When the price of these articles is fixed, I would like to have it fixed by somebody who is able to buy.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WASHBURN in the chair). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is now the practice in Wall street to sell properties to which the sellers never had any title. Cotton is sold by people who have never seen a bale of cotton, cattle are sold by people who do not own cattle, corn is sold by people who have never raised corn, and stocks and securities are sold by people who have absolutely no title to or possession of them. And it is for the purpose of preventing that sort of transaction that I think this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Has not lots of land in western cities been sold to people who never saw the land?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, very little.

Mr. PARSONS. And a great deal of money put up in order to buy the land?

Mr. CAMPBELL. But such land has not been sold by somebody who had no title to it.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that in the bucket shops deals on quotations are made in the exchanges over which they have no power whatever, while in the exchanges they do have the power to make quotations that they bet on?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit another statement, I might help the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] out in determining who are speculators and who are gamblers. The cotton crop is about twelve or thirteen million bales annually, and there are sold on the New York Cotton Exchange ninety millions of bales, and some years a hundred millions of bales. Is that speculation or gambling?

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the stock of railroads is sold over as many as 150 times in a single year, and, as a matter of fact, it is not transferred on the books of the company once. We should go as far as we may to protect the legitimate business that is transacted here.

There is more business done here than in any other country in the world. There is enough legitimate business to be done, and the necessity for gambling in an alleged business transaction does not arise in order that people may be employed or in order that they may find employment for their money. I therefore urge the necessity, in the interests of legitimate business transactions on the New York Stock Exchange, of this amendment becoming a law.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Would the gentleman allow any speculation on the New York Stock Exchange on margins at all?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly. Where a man is a legitimate speculator and able to go upon the exchange and buy the property that he offers a price upon.

Mr. PARSONS. Then if a man wanted to buy a hundred shares of something, and he only had enough to buy a third of the amount necessary, you would not allow him to borrow the other two-thirds to buy the one-third?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; but if he had but a small per cent of a margin to pay I would say he was a gambler, and he was simply taking a chance of losing what he put up as a margin, and that he had at no time the intention of buying the stock.

Mr. PARSONS. Then the question would be the waste of the margin?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, and that would tend to show his good faith in the transaction.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose a man wanted to buy a farm in Kansas, and only had $1 per acre to pay on land that could be bought for $10 an acre?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He could not buy it out there for $10 an acre. He could not get started for $1 an acre.

Mr. MADDEN. Do not get away from the question. Suppose he could buy it for $10 an acre, and the man who wanted to sell it was willing to take $1 an acre down, would the gentleman consider that the two men would have the right to trade?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I should say they had the right, but that they were both taking chances.

Mr. SABATH. Not doing a legitimate business?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They were both taking a great chance; one taking the chance that he would lose his dollar, and the other taking a chance that he would not get his $9 until he foreclosed.

Mr. MADDEN. But would the gentleman consider that a legitimate business transaction?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; but a very unwise one. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARSONS. Why?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why it is unwise because they are both taking great chances.

Mr. MADDEN. Where is the chance? Suppose a man had the land and he wanted to sell it, and the man wanted to pay the first dollar on the land. He could not lose that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In answer to the gentleman, I will state that if I had 160 acres of land that I would sell at $10 an acre and the gentleman only had a dollar an acre, I would not look on him as a desirable purchaser, or a purchaser at all of my land.

Mr. MADDEN. But people of other sections of the country are used to trusting those with whom they deal. [Laughter.] They believe that when they propose to make a purchase that they mean what they say, and if they promise to pay the $9——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you pretend that when men go into the wheat pit in Chicago and buy 5,000 bushels of wheat they ever expect to get the wheat and pay for it?

Mr. MADDEN. I pretend to say——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do they mean to get the wheat?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must not ask a question and answer it too. I pretend to say that whenever any friend of mine on the Chicago Board of Trade goes on the board and buys 500 bushels of grain, that he intends to buy the grain, and to receive it when the day of delivery comes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there? I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question in the time of the gentleman from Kansas. The gentleman from Illinois has supposed a case where he had the land and wanted to sell it, and where the other gentleman was willing to pay a dollar down and pay the other at some other time. Let me suppose a case where a man wanted to sell land and the gentleman did not have the land. Would the gentleman consider that a legitimate transaction?

Mr. MADDEN. If the agent was acting.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But if he was not the agent of anybody?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am aware that it is a dim line that separates gambling and speculation in these matters; but I am as clearly convinced, and I am sure that the gentleman from Illinois, like the gentleman from New York, is as clearly convinced that there is a place on both sides of that line that is clearly defined, marking what is legitimate business on the one side and absolutely illegitimate business on the other side. It would be beyond the power of Congress to deny to anyone the right to engage in a legitimate business or to engage in legitimate speculation. But I contend at the same time that it is the duty of Congress to protect the man who is following a legitimate business, and wants to continue it, from the fictitious business of those who are engaged in illegitimate gambling in futures.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is evidently some difference of opinion upon this amendment, also some varieties of opinion upon the questions affected. I wish first to read again what President Roosevelt said about the volume and character of trade transactions on the exchanges in his message of the 31st of January, 1908.

He said:

The great bulk of the business transacted on the exchanges is not only legitimate, but is necessary to the working of our modern industrial systems, and extreme care will have to be taken not to interfere with this business in doing away with the "bucket-shop" type of operation.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] advances the opinion that not more than 10 per cent of the business done on the exchanges is legitimate. I called his attention to this statement of the President of the United States. He disagreed with the President, and he had read here a letter to justify his opinion. It was a letter from a self-confessed manager of a bucket shop, who was put out of business by the law of the State of Pennsylvania. Now, I have never asserted a very strong belief in the accuracy of the opinions of the President of the United States, but I am very much surprised to find a Republican, and a Republican from the State of Kansas, preferring the opinion of a self-confessed bucket-shop operator to the statement of the President of the United States. [Laughter.] I shall not quarrel with the gentleman——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just a minute. I shall not quarrel with the gentleman in his choice of witnesses. Kansas has done some peculiar things, and Kansas will continue to occupy a somewhat peculiar relation to the rest of the United States. In justice to the gentleman I shall yield at this time, if he wishes to make a statement in reference to what I have said.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hold in my hand the testimony before the judiciary committee of the District of Columbia Committee——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, one moment. The gentleman can not reargue his case. He read his authority. I am going to reply to what the gentleman has said.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; this is what the president of one of the New York stock exchanges, a constituent of the gentleman from New York, says about the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, if he is my constituent he must be a good man. I shall ask you to read what he said—give his name, but quickly, because the gentleman took a lot of time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. His name is Ogden D. Budd.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He does not live in my district [laughter], but read what he says.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not able to place my hand at this moment on his statement. I will say that he would not state before the committee that more than 10 per cent of the business transacted on the New York Stock Exchange resulted in a sale from a party who had the authority to sell to a purchaser who had the authority to buy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What position did he occupy?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He states here what he is. He is president of the New York Stock Exchange——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know him, but I do not think he is the man. Mr. Chairman, as I was about to say, I have had no personal experiences in these places that would qualify me as a witness on this question. But certainly between this self-confessed bucket-shop operator and the President of the United States, after he has performed his duty to inform himself in order to advise Congress as to how it shall act, I prefer to accept the statement of the President, that the great majority of the transactions on these exchanges are legitimate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have the name of the gentleman now, and the exchange of which he is president. His name is Ogden D. Budd, and he is president of the Consolidated Stock Exchange, of New York.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is a bucket shop.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nobody pays any attention to it. The gentleman never knew it existed until he read it in that book. The discussion here has not been concerning the Consolidated Exchange, but it has been about the operations of the New York Stock Exchange and the New York Cotton Exchange. Mr. Chairman, I believe that there are some transactions on those exchanges that should be prohibited. Whenever legislation is proposed that I believe will suppress or prevent the operations that everybody will agree or that all reasonable men will agree should be prohibited, I am ready to support it. This amendment will not do it. I shall not read it, but I ask any gentleman who is anxious to do what is advisable to read the first section of this proposed amendment and see what he can make out of it.

But there is something more to be considered. The great complaint against these exchanges comes from men who injudiciously and unwisely have tempted fortune, and have attempted to become rich more quickly than their merits deserve. There seems to be a great number of them scattered throughout all parts of the country.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not have the gentleman in mind. There is no personal reference in what I said. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT. I desire to correct the statement which the gentleman, no doubt unwittingly, made, that the principal objection to this form of business is from those who have made bad investments and lost money.

On the contrary, it is a fact that the cotton growers of the South, almost to a man, and the small merchants who buy cotton in the South, almost to a man, who never engage in future dealings, except under pressure of necessity, are opposed to this gambling.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's statement can go in the RECORD. In connection with that, Mr. Chairman, I desire the Clerk to read a newspaper clipping which may illuminate this question and shows that even among those who occupy the side of the gentleman from Tennessee there may be some differences of opinion. If the complaint does not come actually from those who have lost money by trading on the exchanges, it does come from those who believe that the price of their product is depressed by the transaction on the exchanges. So this article which the Clerk will read will be somewhat illuminating. It was taken from the New York World of November 12, 1908.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the article in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

HAS CURE FOR NIGHT RIDING.

Cotton ginners' president urges removal of ban on futures.

MEMPHIS, November 11, 1908.

Speaking before the cotton conference to-day, J. A. Taylor, president of the National Ginners' Association, declared that the night riding in the cotton belt, resulting in only a few depredations, had been done, not by organizations, but by individuals, in the mistaken idea that the ginners could be intimidated and the ginning of cotton stopped, thereby causing the price of the staple to advance.

He attributed the low price of cotton to manipulation, saying that nearly all of the speculating members of exchanges were very bullish, having contracts on the long side of the market.

"I feel sure," said he, "that we have lost during the past two years at least $100,000,000 by the passage of state laws. To offset this we have succeeded in bringing the cotton exchange to give us what we want—a fair contract. I think that we should at once amend our laws so as to allow trading in futures on legitimate exchanges. Do this and you will remove the cause, and there will be no more night riding in the South."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not vouch for the credibility of this witness; I do not know him.

Mr. BURLESON. I can throw some light on that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can do that in his own time. I am not familiar with it.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman want to know who he is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish the gentleman from Texas would permit me to proceed. He is the president of the National Ginners' Association. The speech was made in a place where night riding was somewhat prevalent, and it was addressed to men who were interested in having a fair return for their crops.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the gentleman from Texas had better say it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. He is the president of a fictitious organization and was here last year lobbying against this legislation. He was direct from the New York Cotton Exchange. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know him. He may have been here; if he was here lobbying, of course I can understand why I never met him. [Laughter.] His speech was made in Tennessee, and no man at the head of a fictitious organization of that character would assume to make a statement of that nature in Tennessee.

Gentlemen have referred to the fact that the governor of the State of New York has just appointed a commission to investigate the New York Stock Exchange to ascertain whether any legislation is necessary to correct any evils, if there be any. It is a commission composed of very eminent men. I have wondered whether those who have expressed such delight at the appointment of that commission would be in hearty accord with its conclusions if they happen to differ from the preconceived notions that these gentlemen now have.

The New York Cotton Exchange, upon its own initiative, has appointed a committee to conduct an investigation, in connection with men assigned by the Commissioner of Corporations, in order to ascertain whether there has been just cause for complaint against the methods in operation there. When these investigations are completed it will be possible to discuss all the questions involved more intelligently and to more purpose.

I repeat, that so far as I am concerned, I have no sympathy with the improper transactions of any exchange; but it is only fair to have in the RECORD, with all this talk and this abuse of the great city of New York, the fact that there is, down at the bottom of much of the agitation, the personal incentive of men who think they should get more for what they produce, or should do better in speculations in which, in my opinion, they injudiciously engage.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from New York yield a moment? I have the testimony to which I referred a moment ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How long is it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what the President says I read the testimony of the president of the Consolidated Stock Exchange before a committee of this House:

Q. Have you anything to say as to what proportion of these transactions actually go through in which there is a delivery as to stocks?

A. There is a delivery in every single transaction between brokers. Do you mean in what proportion there is a delivery to the customer?

Q. Yes.

A. No; I have not.

Q. Have you any idea?

A. Certainly.

Q. Give us that.

A. I have an idea. I do not know what the percentage would be, but compared with the volume of transactions it is small.

Q. Two or 3 per cent?

A. I can hardly guess. It is small. I do not hesitate to say that the actual delivery to customers is small, but please do not misunderstand me. In all transactions the receipt and delivery of the goods take place.

This evidence is my authority for saying here that more than 90 per cent of the business done on these exchanges is nothing short of gambling in the price of other people's property, and too often with other people's money.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has spoken of sales of real estate. He thinks it injudicious to sell property or to make a contract to sell property to a man at $10 an acre, when he had but a dollar an acre to pay. Mr. Chairman, I can not enumerate how many, but I suppose at least 50 bills have passed this House during my service and during the service of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that provided for the sale either of public lands or of lands held by the United States as trustee for the Indians. Every single one of them had provisions in it under which the payments were to be made in periods of about five years, at an insignificant price per acre, ostensibly to men who could not pay at once $1.50 per acre for the land; and I have never heard the gentleman from Kansas raise his voice in protest against that injudicious policy of selling land upon such terms to men who did not have the money to pay for it at the time of the sale.

There is a good deal of misapprehension and much unnecessary agitation about some of these matters. I do not believe this proposed amendment will stop any of the improper transactions of which some complaint has been made. I believe that the wise thing to do is to permit the eminent commission appointed by the governor of the State of New York to make its investigation and to make recommendations, which I hope will meet with the approval of the people throughout the country, as to any legislation that may be necessary to regulate or control these exchanges, and then to legislate upon lines of adequate information.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that he does not think that this amendment would stop gambling.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman has given a good deal of attention and study to this matter. Will he not help us to perfect it so that it will stop it? The gentleman tells us that he is opposed to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The difference between the gentleman and myself is this: I believe the great bulk of the transactions on these exchanges are not only legitimate, but necessary, and—I do not want to say anything discourteous—I think the gentleman believes, like a great many others, that the bulk of them are illegitimate and unnecessary.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman believe that the bulk of the transactions on the cotton exchange, when 100,000,000 bales were bought out of a crop of only 12,000,000, were legitimate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. I know of some localities in New York where more parcels of land have been sold than exist. I know that some property changes hands frequently, and I know that some cotton has been sold and bought many times, not only on exchanges, but right in the communities where it is raised.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman believe that any considerable per cent of these hundred millions of bales was ever intended to be delivered by the men who sold them or to be received by the men who bought them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course the gentleman knows that my opinion as to the intentions of people buying and selling commodities is absolutely worthless. I decline to express it. If the gentleman believes that he can determine whether men actually intended to deliver or to receive properties they attempted to sell or buy, let him do so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have no idea in the world that those gentlemen ever expected to receive the cotton they bought or to deliver the cotton they sold. They bought it on margins. They put up the margins, and if it went up beyond the margin——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; and they financed and marketed the cotton crop, which could not have been marketed otherwise.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They had nothing to do with the financing of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. FITZGERALD was granted leave to append to his remarks, from a pamphlet—"Board of Trade of the city of Chicago," issued in 1907—the following:

BUYING AND SELLING FOR FUTURE DELIVERY.

Ever since commercial exchanges were devised for the distribution of commodities at fair prices to both buyer and seller there has been misapprehension about transactions for future delivery. No feature of the business of the board of trade is as little understood as this. The reader will gain a clear idea of the necessity of trading in "futures" when he reflects that the entire amount of money in circulation in the United States at the present time would be insufficient to transfer the wheat and corn crops from the hands of the farmers to the bins of the consumers here and abroad if it were not possible to distribute the task over the crop year. The farmer must realize on his grain as soon as possible after it is harvested, but the grain is not needed for immediate use, and it must be carried in store until it is needed for food. The selling of a crop for delivery at different dates in futurity enables the farmer to realize at once on the toil of the summer, and places in his hands the ready cash he needs to pay his help, his local storekeeper, the interest on his borrowed capital, and to improve his farm for next year's tillage.

Of course, grain which is not deliverable until December can not appear in the visible supply at primary markets in July, and that is all the basis there is for the complaints sometimes made that the board of trade deals in grain which it never sees. As a matter of fact, every bushel of grain which is bought or sold on the board is actually deliverable on the demand of the buyer. If he wants wheat he may pay for it and it will be delivered to him out of an elevator. There is no fiction about such a trade. Behind every transaction there is somewhere a warehouse receipt representing an equivalent quantity of actual grain of a certain contract quality.

There is much misapprehension, also, about the class of trades known as "hedges." Suppose that a miller from Glasgow is in San Francisco and buys 100,000 bushels of wheat for shipment to Glasgow. San Francisco is four or five months distant by voyage from Glasgow, so in order to protect himself, to avoid speculation, this miller sells 100,000 bushels of wheat on the board of trade at about the same price that he paid in San Francisco. He does it in order to avoid the risk of changes in the market during the time that his grain is in transit. When the wheat arrives in Glasgow, if the market has declined, his sale in Chicago makes up the loss. On the other hand, if the market advances, the sale in Chicago at the lower price equalizes the transaction, so he can sell the flour on the basis of the price at which he bought it in San Francisco.

Multiply this incident by thousands and we have an explanation of how it is possible for hundreds of thousands of bushels of wheat to be sold on the board of trade in Chicago which are not necessarily delivered here. The transactions on that board stand not for local transactions merely, but for transactions all over the world. They depend not merely on the amount of grain here, but on the world supply of grain. Transactions on the board are in relation to the supply and demand of the world for breadstuffs. If the farmer could not sell for future delivery, he would have to suffer.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT) there were—ayes 57, noes 42.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania and Mr. GARRETT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 49.

So the motion to rise was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11701, the penal code, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of the last session we passed what was called an "omnibus" Indian bill, a bill which contained many small bills. Among the other bills there are five that are now on the Calendar favorably reported, four House and one Senate bill, and in order to clear the Calendar I ask unanimous consent that they may be stricken from the Calendar. All of them are now laws.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the numbers.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 17717, S. 4791, H. R. 16492, H. R. 19468, H. R. 21811.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bills will be stricken from the Calendar. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask the same privilege.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the same privilege.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting an estimate of appropriation for "Laboratory, Department of Agriculture," for the year ending June 30, 1909—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Colorado River, Texas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting detailed estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, with comparisons of current appropriations—to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting report of investigations as to pneumatic-tube service for the mails—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Bayou Vermilion, Louisiana—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Saline River, Arkansas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Arroyo Colorado, Texas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Pass Cavallo, Texas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the annual inspection of the several branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 22274) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1797), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HASKINS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 23351) for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1798), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10592) granting a pension to Martin Gardner—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23377) granting an increase of pension to Henry A. Butcher—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23485) granting a pension to Matilda Merrick Goodrich—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23491) granting an increase of pension to Mary Whelchel—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 24135) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Texas: A bill (H. R. 24136) to regulate the sending of newspapers and periodicals through the mails—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 24137) for the purchase of the house in which President Lincoln died, and the Lincoln relics contained therein, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: A bill (H. R. 24138) giving a pensionable status to telegraph operators who served in the war of the rebellion to whom certificates have been issued by the Secretary of War under the act of January 26, 1897—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 24139) to establish a fish hatchery and biological station in the Thirteenth Congressional District of the State of Indiana—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 24140) extending the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, concerning transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 24141) to extend the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, and amendments thereto, to the Territory of Arizona—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24142) making appropriation for the protection of the bank of the Mississippi River at Birds Point, Mo.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 24143) to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and state government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 24144) to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: A bill (H. R. 24145) to regulate the judicial procedure of the courts of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEE: A bill (H. R. 24146) to add 31,000 acres of land, by purchase or condemnation, to the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Military Park and appropriating $761,000 for that purpose—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 24147) to add 31,000 acres of land, by purchase or condemnation, to the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Military Park and appropriating $761,000 for that purpose—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PARSONS: A bill (H. R. 24148) to establish in the Department of the Interior a bureau to be known as the children's bureau—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 24149) granting to the Montana, Wyoming and Southern Railway Company a right of way across the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, Mont.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of California: A bill (H. R. 24150) setting aside certain lands for the conservation of water—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 24151) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate two condemned brass or bronze cannon or field pieces and cannon balls to the county court of Marshall County, W. Va.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 24152) for the widening and extension of Massachusetts avenue SE. from its present terminus near Fortieth street SE. to Bowen road—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLAYTON: A bill (H. R. 24153) to further extend the operation of the act approved April 5, 1906, entitled "An act authorizing the Choctawhatchee Power Company to erect a dam in Dale County, Ala."—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DENBY: A bill (H. R. 24154) to prohibit the importation, manufacture, sale, or gift, for other than medicinal purposes, under regulations to be established by the Secretary of Agriculture, of crude opium, powdered opium, smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, or hasheesh into the United States or any territory under their jurisdiction—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LEAKE: A bill (H. R. 24155) to appropriate $500,000 to deepen the channel and to open an additional channel in the Hackensack River, in the State of New Jersey—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24156) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Bayonne, N. J.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 24326) for the relief of owners of outstanding and unsatisfied military bounty-land warrants heretofore issued by the United States, and all outstanding and unsatisfied certificates of location heretofore issued by the United States under the closing part of section 3 of the act of June 2, 1858 (11 Stats., p. 294)—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BATES: A bill (H. R. 24327) to make Corry, Pa., a port of delivery in the district of Erie, Pa., and extending to it the privileges of section 7 of the act of June 10, 1880—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STANLEY: A bill (H. R. 24328) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct experiments and determine the practicability of making paper material out of cornstalks and to erect buildings and purchase apparatus therefor—to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 24157) for the relief of Eli Connor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24158) for the relief of the heirs of John G. W. Brooks—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. AMES: A bill (H. R. 24159) granting a pension to James E. McKenna—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24160) granting a pension to Addie Black—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24161) for the relief of Orlando Lawrence—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24162) granting an increase of pension to George E. Pinkham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARCLAY: A bill (H. R. 24163) granting an increase of pension to William T. Saylor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24164) granting an increase of pension to Thaddeus C. Rumbarger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 24165) granting an increase of pension to Henry M. Bedford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE: A bill (H. R. 24166) granting an increase of pension to Paul Seifrid—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 24167) granting a pension to Jerry Wildman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24168) for the relief of James Barron—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CALDER: A bill (H. R. 24169) granting an increase of pension to Matilda Butt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: A bill (H. R. 24170) granting an increase of pension to James Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24171) granting an increase of pension to Sylvanus Van Hook—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24172) granting an increase of pension to William E. Kuykendall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24173) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Chartier—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24174) granting an increase of pension to John N. Breezeley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24175) granting a pension to Lidda Rusmisael—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24176) granting a pension to Maggie Crane—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24177) granting a pension to Nannie Bush—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHANEY: A bill (H. R. 24178) granting an increase of pension to Edward R. Bigham—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24179) granting an increase of pension to William H. R. Snyder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: A bill (H. R. 24180) granting an increase of pension to R. H. Maricle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24181) granting an increase of pension to William A. Dew—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLE: A bill (H. R. 24182) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Surface—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COUDREY: A bill (H. R. 24183) for the relief of George W. Murray—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24184) for the relief of Camille Noel Dry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24185) for the relief of Thomas S. McKee—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24186) for the relief of John H. Drosselmeier—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24187) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Bayley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24188) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Houlihan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24189) granting an increase of pension to Harvey S. Page—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: A bill (H. R. 24190) granting a pension to Mable Hullinger—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24191) granting a pension to Hoyt Hayden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DE ARMOND: A bill (H. R. 24192) granting an increase of pension to Martin V. Hardesty—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24193) granting an increase of pension to George W. Rains—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24194) granting an increase of pension to Joel A. H. Buckalew—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DENVER: A bill (H. R. 24195) granting an increase of pension to Morgan Tedrick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DIXON: A bill (H. R. 24196) granting an increase of pension to John E. Taggart—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24197) granting a pension to Frank L. Kennedy—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24198) granting an increase of pension to Fannie A. Harris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24199) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Whitaker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24200) granting an increase of pension to William Woodson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24201) granting an increase of pension to Newton C. Spurgeon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24202) granting an increase of pension to Gilbert W. Boyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24203) granting an increase of pension to Manlabert C. Rawlison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24204) granting an increase of pension to Oscar Trigg—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24205) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Murray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24206) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Deputy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24207) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Justis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24208) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Roddey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24209) granting an increase of pension to John M. Battin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24210) granting an increase of pension to Thomas N. Floyd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24211) granting a pension to Charles A. Means—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUREY: A bill (H. R. 24212) granting a pension to Mary S. Houghtaling—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24213) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Brazie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DWIGHT: A bill (H. R. 24214) to correct the military record of William R. Hammond—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLIS of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24215) granting a pension to William V. Malenburg—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24216) granting an increase of pension to William M. McCrary—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FASSETT: A bill (H. R. 24217) granting a pension to John Collins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24218) granting a pension to Eva B. Lynch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 24219) granting a pension to Joseph W. Shirey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 24220) granting an increase of pension to Frederick C. Thruelsen—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 24221) granting an increase of pension to Lewis F. Morgan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARDNER of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 24222) granting an increase of pension to Hovey D. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24223) granting an increase of pension to George W. Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24224) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Hanna—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24225) granting an increase of pension to John J. Holmes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24226) granting an increase of pension to C. H. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24227) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Sumner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24228) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Davenport—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARNER: A bill (H. R. 24229) granting an increase of pension to Patrick McKew—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILL: A bill (H. R. 24230) for the relief of the estate of Richard W. Meade—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GOULDEN: A bill (H. R. 24231) granting a pension to Hattie E. Waterbury—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAFF: A bill (H. R. 24232) granting an increase of pension to John Rawley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24233) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas C. Bushwell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24234) granting an increase of pension to George W. Brush—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24235) granting an increase of pension to Franklin W. Adams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24236) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Sawyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24237) granting an increase of pension to John S. Forbes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24238) granting an increase of pension to James Ballard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 24239) granting an increase of pension to A. H. Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HALE: A bill (H. R. 24240) granting a pension to Zack Amis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24241) granting an increase of pension to James A. Hickman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 24242) granting an increase of pension to Asahel P. Mott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24243) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Weldin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEPBURN: A bill (H. R. 24244) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Gale—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24245) granting an increase of pension to James A. Sutton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 24246) granting an increase of pension to Paul Schools—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 24247) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Christofel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 24248) granting an increase of pension to Winslow Hart Reaves—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 24249) granting an increase of pension to Mark Smock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24250) granting an increase of pension to John M. Hall—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KALANIANAOLE: A bill (H. R. 24251) granting a special pension to Samuel McKeague—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANDIS: A bill (H. R. 24252) granting an increase of pension to John T. Eason—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24253) granting an increase of pension to Pliney A. Bailey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE: A bill (H. R. 24254) for the relief of the heirs of George Winfrey, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LENAHAN: A bill (H. R. 24255) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 24256) granting an increase of pension to George W. Hissong—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24257) granting an increase of pension to Mahlon Baker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24258) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Rogers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOWDEN: A bill (H. R. 24259) granting an increase of pension to George H. V. Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 24260) granting an increase of pension to John C. Lloyd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINNEY: A bill (H. R. 24261) granting an increase of pension to Joel T. Booz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 24262) granting an increase of pension to James F. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24263) for the relief of Joseph Richardson, administrator, etc.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NYE: A bill (H. R. 24264) granting an increase of pension to Sarah P. Tyrer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24265) granting an increase of pension to Darius T. Ludwig—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24266) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. McGuire—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24267) granting an increase of pension to Theophile Rainville—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24268) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24269) granting a pension to Richard D. Colbreath—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PARSONS: A bill (H. R. 24270) granting a pension to Julia B. Coghlan—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POLLARD: A bill (H. R. 24271) granting an increase of pension to William Barnhart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24272) granting an increase of pension to James H. Shackelford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24273) granting an increase of pension to Peter Carey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHINOCK: A bill (H. R. 24274) granting an increase of pension to Julius A. Pherson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24275) granting an increase of pension to Walter McDaniel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24276) granting a pension to Peter M. Clause—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24277) granting a pension to Emily Crooks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24278) granting a pension to Thornton Bailey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24279) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hardeman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24280) granting a pension to Florence Meader—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24281) granting a pension to Anna K. Harris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 24282) granting an increase of pension to James H. Hypes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24283) granting a pension to Mary N. Greene—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24284) granting an increase of pension to John Dougherty—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 24285) for the relief of Warren E. Day—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 24286) granting a pension to Albert L. Gregory—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24287) granting a pension to Lyman A. Cooper—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24288) granting a pension to Emory Denton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24289) granting a pension to William L. Coryell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24290) to correct the military record of Henry Berry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 24291) granting a pension to Martin J. Boatwright—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STANLEY: A bill (H. R. 24292) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel S. Green—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 24293) granting a pension to Mahala C. Wilcox—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24294) granting an increase of pension to Ambrose Goodboo, alias Goodbreau—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 24295) granting an increase of pension to John A. Cairnes—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24296) granting an increase of pension to Sameul A. Hays—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24297) to correct the military record of George M. Watson and grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 24298) granting an increase of pension to William D. Hogan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24299) granting an increase of pension to B. H. Randall—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 24300) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Turner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24301) to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to David R. Bohannon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WASHBURN: A bill (H. R. 24302) granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Hobart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 24303) for the relief of the estate of Charles Fitzgerald—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. AIKEN: A bill (H. R. 24304) granting a pension to Thomas Callaghan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24305) granting an increase of pension to Harret Powe Lynch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 24306) granting an increase of pension to George W. Kremer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: A bill (H. R. 24307) granting an increase of pension to Thaxter Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24308) granting an increase of pension to Isaac W. Sanborn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24309) granting an increase of pension to William K. Nason—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMMOND: A bill (H. R. 24310) granting an increase of pension to William Ballard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAW: A bill (H. R. 24311) granting an honorable discharge from the United States Navy to John W. Briggs—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. REYNOLDS: A bill (H. R. 24312) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Berkhamer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24313) granting an increase of pension to Joseph A. Olewine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24314) granting an increase of pension to Jacob B. Stalb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24315) granting an increase of pension to Alban G. Knode—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24316) granting an increase of pension to William B. Blake—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24317) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Prosser—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24318) granting an increase of pension to John Gore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24319) granting an increase of pension to Henry Brant—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24320) granting an increase of pension to Henry Eash—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24321) granting an increase of pension to Annie Beyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24322) granting an increase of pension to John W. Gummo—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24323) granting an increase of pension to William Rays—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THISTLEWOOD: A bill (H. R. 24324) granting an increase of pension to James T. White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOU VELLE: A bill (H. R. 24325) granting an increase of pension to William L. Mechling—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRAY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 205) for the relief of certain settlers in the Lake Basin of the Billings (Mont.) land district—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 206) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. NYE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 207) directing payment of money to widow of Hon. James Hinds, deceased, according to terms of resolution passed in the Fortieth Congress, third session—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. AIKEN: Papers to accompany bills for relief of R. Smith Bailey, estate of Catherine Norris, and W. F. Parker—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: Petition of the bar association of Erie County, N. Y., favoring increase of salaries for United States judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Buffalo, N. Y., for a nonpartisan tariff commission—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Buffalo, N. Y., for removal of duty on barley—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Buffalo, N. Y., for increase of judges' salaries—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. AMES: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Martin Gardner (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BATES: Petition of Pomona Grange, No. 26, Patrons of Husbandry, favoring removal of tariff on farm tools and implements—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOYD: Petition of Dodge County Bar Association, for increasing salaries of district court judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Omaha Bar Association, favoring $10,000 salary for circuit judges and $9,000 salary for district judges of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: Petition of Mahoney, Jones & Co. and citizens of Bristol, Tenn., against enactment of parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BURKE: Papers to accompany bills for relief of James Bond and Paul Seifrid—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: Petition for legislation enacting more stringent immigration laws against Asiatics—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. CALDER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Alonzo D. Brown (H. R. 19482)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of John H. Styles (H. R. 23503)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAULFIELD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Herman J. Wacker (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHANEY: Petition of A. L. Miller and others, Seymour, Ind., against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Edward R. Bigham—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COUDREY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John H. Rheinlander—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DE ARMOND: Petition of residents of Milford and other towns in Missouri, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DUREY: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Jacob Brazie and Mary S. Houghtaling—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William Pace (H. R. 23322) (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIS of Oregon: Petition of Oregon Bar Association, asking for a court of patent appeals (H. R. 21455)—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Oregon Bar Association, asking for an additional United States circuit court judge for the district of Oregon—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT: Petition of International Brotherhood of Woodsmen and Saw Mill Workers, against Asiatic immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of citizens of Tomah, Wis., for prompt enactment of the Davis bill (H. R. 18204), for national cooperation in technical education—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FOCHT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Alex Everhart—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of Federal Mines and Milling Company, of Chicago, favoring a tariff on zinc ore—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Lewis F. Morgan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Edward P. Thomas, of Rockford, Ill., favoring the Fuller bill (H. R. 19250), creating a volunteer officers' retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GARNER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Patrick McKew—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of Allegheny (Pa.) Medical Society, favoring a department of public health—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of G. W. Weller, for Tirrell bill (H. R. 12405), Bacon bill (S. 5151), and other measures against the liquor traffic—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of the International Supply Company, favoring a duty on zinc ore—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of River Improvement and Drainage Association, for improvement of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HAMMOND: Petition of Rosemberger & Currier, of Mankato, Minn., favoring removal of duty from raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petition of H. C. Finch, favoring declaration by the United States for a permanent international congress for arbitration—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HAY: Petition of Baker & Co., wholesale grocers, of Riverton, Va., for the removal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of C. A. Guman and 47 other citizens of Seattle, for the exclusion of Asiatics other than certain special classes—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HENRY of Connecticut: Petition of citizens of Windsor Locks, Conn., against parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Petition of citizens of Thayer, Iowa, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HIGGINS: Petition of residents of New London, Conn., against S. 3940 (religious observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOUSTON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Lee Lefevor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of William Bradshaw—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: Petition of Utah Bar Association, favoring increase of salaries of judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: Petition of citizens of Washington, favoring the pensioning of members of the Military Telegraphers' Corps in civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: Petition of E. Henrick and 35 other residents of Alameda, Cal., favoring an effective Asiatic-exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KNAPP: Petition of residents of Chaumont, N. Y., against parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LENAHAN: Petition of National Hardware Association, against any parcels-post legislation—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McMORRAN: Petition of citizens of the seventh district of Michigan, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring Senate joint resolution No. 40, relative to transportation of material for the Panama Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Nancy Walden and S. Y. B. Williams—to the Committee of War Claims.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Joseph G. Richardson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring Senate joint resolution No. 40, relative to transportation of material for the Panama Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of John Scoth & Co., favoring removal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Philadelphia and New York, for legislation to pension members of the Telegraph Corps of the civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REYNOLDS: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Annie Beyer, John Hudson, John Gore, Josiah Prosser, William B. Blake, Henry Eash, William Rays, Joseph A. Olewine, Henry Brant, Alban G. Knode, and Henry C. Weaver—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Stephen Konicka (H. R. 13625)—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of G. J. Palmer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of John J. Johnson and Eliza Ann Ashcraft (H. R. 23936)—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of J. W. Dancer and others, against the Johnston bill (S. 3940), providing for religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RYAN: Petition of Asiatic Exclusion League, favoring an effective Asiatic exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of L. Doleman Company, of Buffalo, N. Y., for removal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Missouri: Petition of Frederickton (Mo.) M. S. Local Union No. 202, for legislation to protect and pay underground miners for death and injury—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: Petition of citizens of Labelle, Lee County, Fla., against S. 3940 (Sunday observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STAFFORD: Petition of Wisconsin glass makers, favoring free hides—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TAWNEY: Petition of citizens of the first district of Minnesota, against S. 3940 (religious legislation in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WALLACE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of Peter Pape—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of Wilmer Atkinson and 14 other citizens of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, for a system of parcels delivery on rural mail routes and for postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WASHBURN: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Henry F. Hobart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 16, 1908.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NAVAL CLERICAL FORCE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement relative to the specific amounts under various lump appropriations to cover the pay of clerical, drafting, inspection, and other classified employees at navy-yards and naval stations, with a complete list of these positions as of date December 1, 1908, showing the appropriation from which they are now paid, and so forth, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, classified and detailed estimates of every subject of expenditure intended for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and also detailed reports of all expenditures under any appropriation for such service during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

STATE OF MISSOURI V. UNITED STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the opinion of the court in the cause of the State of Missouri v. United States, dismissing the case, which case was referred to the court by the resolution of the Senate under the act of March 3, 1887, known as the "Tucker Act," which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTOR OF CHARLES BACKMAN, DECEASED, V. UNITED STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of Dean Sage, executor of Charles Backman, deceased, v. United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 2999. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the extension of New Hampshire avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1907;

S. 4308. An act to change the name of V street, from Florida avenue to Nineteenth street NW., to California street; and

S. 4814. An act to amend section 491 n of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 22274) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 206) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead; further insists upon its amendments, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MONDELL, Mr. VOLSTEAD, and Mr. ROBINSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Buxton Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Buxton, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and the "postal savings-bank" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CLAY presented the petition of J. W. McCullough, of Walker County, Ga., and the petition of Juliet A. McCutchen, of Flintstone, Ga., praying for the enactment of legislation referring their claims to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Tucker Act, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CUMMINS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Davenport, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the surviving members of the United States Military Telegraph Corps who served in the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. du PONT presented a petition of Capital Grange, No. 18, Patrons of Husbandry, of Dover, Del., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels post and postal savings bank bills," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BROWN presented an affidavit to accompany the bill (S. 7702) granting an increase of pension to William McClary, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ELKINS presented a petition of the commissioners of the county court of Marshall County, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the purchase of the old Grave Creek Mound property at Moundsville, in that State, and the erection of a post-office building thereon, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 599, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Macdonald, W. Va., praying for the passage of the so-called "Rodenberg anti-injunction bill," which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Retail Merchants' Association of Grafton, W. Va., praying for the repeal of the present national bankruptcy law and the enactment of such legislation as will meet the legitimate requirements of trade, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INDIAN INSTITUTE IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. OWEN. I present the petition of Richard C. Adams, on behalf of the Delaware Indians and all other Indians residing in the State of Oklahoma, praying for the establishment of an institution distinctively Indian in character. I move that the petition be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7721) for payment to Robert B. Whitacre and Frederick T. Hildred the sum of $944.97 for blasting powder used by the United States Government to complete the Bellefourche irrigation project, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 698) thereon.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 556) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States,' approved February 26, 1895," approved June 27, 1906, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 699) thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1197) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Central City, Colo., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 700) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6104) to compensate the commissioners to revise the statutes relating to patents, trade and other marks, and trade and commercial names for services rendered, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 105) for the purpose of more fully carrying into effect the convention concluded at Brussels March 15, 1886, in reference to the exchange of official journals, and so forth, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Public Printer to supply to the Library of Congress such number as may be required, not exceeding 100 copies, of the daily issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for distribution, through the Smithsonian Institution, to the legislative chambers of such foreign governments as may agree to send to the United States current copies of their parliamentary record or like publication, such documents, when received, to be deposited in the Library of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSENGER.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ for the remainder of the Sixtieth Congress an additional messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. LONG, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be held by it during the second session of the Sixtieth Congress, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

JESSIE E. LINNEKIN.

Mr. FULTON. From the Committee on Claims I report a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That in compliance with a request of the chief justice of the United States Court of Claims, contained in Senate Document No. 562, Sixtieth Congress, second session, the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to return to the Court of Claims the following congressional case, namely, of Jessie E. Linnekin, heir at law of Thomas J. Linnekin, deceased, against The United States, Congressional, No. 10942, C. & F. No. 41, and the said court is hereby authorized to proceed in said case as if no return therein had been made to the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. Perhaps I should give a word of explanation of the resolution, as it is somewhat exceptional.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to hear the explanation of the chairman of the committee before consent is given to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. FULTON. The chief justice of the Court of Claims has requested the return of the case described in the resolution. It stands on the findings of the Court of Claims, and the Committee on Claims has heretofore reported it among the amendments proposed to the omnibus claims bill. But it seems that since the report was made by the Court of Claims a question has arisen as to the proper distribution of the money involved. So they have asked to have it sent back, and although it was reported here I see no objection to its return.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to the resolution.

Mr. FRAZIER. My attention was diverted. I ask that the resolution may be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution at the request of the Senator from Tennessee.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. FULTON. I will add to what I said, that it is simply one of the cases involving the difference between sea and shore pay in the navy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution just read?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

INDIAN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CLAPP. On behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restriction on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes, I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. du PONT introduced a bill (S. 7863) granting a pension to Mary B. Hall, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 7864) for the relief of John H. Howlett, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7865) granting an increase of pension to Edwin B. Brewster, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DICK introduced a bill (S. 7866) granting a pension to Ann Eliza Dumble, which was read twice by its title and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 7867) for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, misbranded, or falsely graded naval stores, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FRAZIER introduced a bill (S. 7868) to create a new division in the middle judicial district of the State of Tennessee, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAYNER introduced a bill (S. 7869) granting an increase of pension to Rachel J. Windsor, which was read twice by its title and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JOHNSTON introduced a bill (S. 7870) for the relief of the heirs of Edwin De Leon, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (S. 7871) for the relief of owners of outstanding and unsatisfied military bounty land warrants heretofore issued by the United States, and all outstanding and unsatisfied certificates of location heretofore issued by the United States under the closing part of section 3 of the act of June 2, 1858 (11 Stats., 294), which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 7872) to promote the administration of justice in the navy, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 7873) granting the Panhandle Electric Railway and Power Company right of way for a railroad through the Priest River National Forest, in northern Idaho, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7874) granting an increase of pension to Eri C. Tuller; and

A bill (S. 7875) granting an increase of pension to John Hays.

Mr. FLINT introduced a bill (S. 7876) to withdraw from settlement and entry certain lands in the State of California, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 7877) for the relief of the estate of Paris Peter, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced a bill (S. 7878) to amend section 15 of the act of February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7879) to correct the military record of Pomeroy Parker, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7880) granting a pension to John Dillon; and

A bill (S. 7881) granting an increase of pension to George W. Fertig.

Mr. CLAPP introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (S. 7882) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct a road and two bridges on the Warm Springs Reservation, Oreg.; and

A bill (S. 7883) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct a bridge across the Little Colorado River abutting on the Navajo Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and for other purposes.

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 7884) for the relief of the estate of William O'Donnell, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7885) to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint Woodbury Blocksom, alias Ralph D. Wood, late a hospital steward in the United States Army, and place him on the retired list as a hospital steward, United States Army, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 7886) for the relief of the estate of William P. Campbell, deceased;

A bill (S. 7887) for the relief of the heirs of William W. Davis, deceased;

A bill (S. 7888) for the relief of the heirs of Simon Rockwell, deceased;

A bill (S. 7889) for the relief of the estate of John Diehl, deceased; and

A bill (S. 7890) for the relief of the heirs of Peter Pope, deceased.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7891) for the relief of Lillie L. Penrod, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ELKINS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 7892) for the relief of J. B. Johnson; and

A bill (S. 7893) for the relief of the estate of George W. Strailman, deceased (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. ELKINS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7894) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Pemberton;

A bill (S. 7895) granting an increase of pension to Samuel S. Price;

A bill (S. 7896) granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. B. Dawson; and

A bill (S. 7897) granting a pension to Perry H. Johnson.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 7898) for the relief of the heirs of Lawrence Smith, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 7899) for the relief of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church, of Roswell, Ga., which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 7900) for the relief of the heirs of Richard W. Meade, deceased, which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NIXON introduced a bill (S. 7901) authorizing an appropriation which will enable the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the postal account of Ralph Stevens, former postmaster at Manhattan, Nev., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 7902) for the relief of the heirs of Nash L. Cox, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the register of copyrights, Library of Congress, from $3,000 to $4,000, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ELISHA PAINTER.

On motion of Mr. PILES, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 2904) granting a pension to Elisha Painter be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon.

THE SECRET SERVICE—PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer a resolution which I ask may be read and referred under the rules to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That that portion of the annual message of the President relating to the Secret Service is hereby referred to the Committee on Appropriations, who are instructed to inquire whether the legislation referred to in the message has impaired the efficiency or sufficiency of the force employed in the Secret Service; and such committee are further directed to ascertain what persons other than those included in the Secret Service were paid from the Public Treasury during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, for services in connection with the enforcement of the laws or for work in the detection or investigation of possible crimes or criminal acts or violations of law, including all special attorneys, special agents, inspectors, or other employees of any department of the Government, or any branch of the public service, and also same information as to all persons whose employment was authorized by indefinite or general appropriations, the information to contain the names of all persons so employed or paid, their previous occupation, the nature of the work in which they were engaged, by whom they were appointed, and upon whose suggestion or recommendation; the inquiry, however, not to include officers appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, or officers specifically provided for by law, or laborers appointed as such and actually engaged in employment as laborers.

For the purpose of carrying out the instructions of the Senate the Committee on Appropriations are hereby authorized, by subcommittee or otherwise, to sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate, to send for persons and papers, to subpœna witnesses, to administer oaths, to examine witnesses under oath, and to employ such clerical and other assistance as shall enable the committee to report fully and promptly upon the matters contained in this inquiry, the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; and said committee are further directed to report as soon as practicable, from time to time, the results of their inquiry, and to make such recommendations as they may see fit with reference thereto, and also their recommendation with reference to that portion of the message referred to them.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have no objection, of course, to the reference of the resolution. It has to go to the committee under the rule. Personally, I have no objection to the first part of it, which I read hurriedly a few moments ago, and which I have heard read at the desk. I do not think, however, that the latter part of the resolution is couched in sufficiently appropriate and emphatic terms, and consequently I offer a resolution which I ask shall be referred to the same committee as expressive of my views at least with reference to this portion of the President's message.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution just read will be printed and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Senator from Texas submits a resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the President in his general message, which was communicated to the Congress on the 8th instant, said:

"Last year an amendment was incorporated in the measure providing for the Secret Service, which provided that there should be no detail from the Secret Service and no transfer therefrom. It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes. If deliberately introduced for the purpose of diminishing the effectiveness of war against crime, it could not have been better devised to this end. It forbade the practices that had been followed to a greater or less extent by the executive heads of various departments for twenty years. To these practices we owe the securing of the evidence which enabled us to drive great lotteries out of business and secure a quarter of a million of dollars in fines from their promoters. These practices have enabled us to discover some of the most outrageous frauds in connection with the theft of government land and government timber by great corporations and by individuals. These practices have enabled us to get some of the evidence indispensable in order to secure the conviction of the wealthiest and most formidable criminals with whom the Government has to deal, both those operating in violation of the antitrust law and others. The amendment in question was of benefit to no one excepting to these criminals, and it seriously hampers the Government in the detection of crime and the securing of justice. Moreover, it not only affects departments outside of the Treasury, but it tends to hamper the Secretary of the Treasury himself in the effort to utilize the employees of his department so as to best meet the requirements of the public service. It forbids him from preventing frauds upon the customs service, from investigating irregularities in branch mints and assay offices, and has seriously crippled him. It prevents the promotion of employees in the Secret Service, and this further discourages good effort. In its present form the restriction operates only to the advantage of the criminal, of the wrongdoer. The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by Secret Service men. Very little of such investigation has been done in the past; but it is true that the work of the Secret Service agents was partly responsible for the indictment and conviction of a Senator and a Congressman for land frauds in Oregon. I do not believe that it is in the public interest to protect criminals in any branch of the public service, and exactly as we have again and again during the past seven years prosecuted and convicted such criminals who were in the executive branch of the Government, so in my belief we should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch. But if this is not considered desirable a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret service force in investigating Members of Congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or at least to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government;" and

Whereas it is incumbent upon the Senate to take special notice thereof: It is therefore

Resolved, That the portion of said message above recited be, and it is hereby, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which shall fully consider the same and report as early as practicable what action, if any, in the judgment of the committee, the Senate shall take with reference to the matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think, in substance, the resolution I offered covers precisely the same points that are covered by the resolution of the Senator from Texas. I think he will find that to be the case upon an examination of the papers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas will be printed and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I ask leave to report the following resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am informed that the Chair misapprehended what I desired to have done with the resolution I offered. I desire it to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair made such an order at the Senator's request.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was misinformed, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey reports from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution just read, and I also ask that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Texas, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not think that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have had a meeting since the resolution was introduced. A member of that committee sits on this side of the Chamber. I do not think his attention has even been invited to it.

In order that there may be a fair consideration of the resolution and of the one offered by myself in the nature of a substitute for the last paragraph of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island, I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I withdraw the report for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report is withdrawn.

THE NAVAJO INDIANS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish for the information of the Senate all of the correspondence and testimony taken by Col. H. L. Scott, U. S. Army, or other official, in and during the investigation of charges preferred by Rev. H. R. Antes, Aneth, Utah, regarding the conduct of, together with the killing, wounding, and imprisonment of Navajo Indians by United States troops during the year 1907, within or in the vicinity of the Navajo Indian Reservation, New Mexico and Arizona.

MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS IN FOREIGN MARKETS.

Mr. DANIEL submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to have prepared for the use of the Senate a statement of all manufactured products of the United States which are sold or exported to be sold in foreign markets at lower rates than in American markets, with all such pertinent information on the subject as he may deem fitting, including the domestic and foreign prices of sale.

PANAMA CANAL PURCHASE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I forward the accompanying letter of the Secretary of War transmitting a memorandum prepared by Mr. Charlton, the law officer of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, in connection with Mr. Rogers, the general counsel of the Isthmian Canal Commission, received by me since my message of December 15, because it contains a statement as to the so-called archives transferred by the Panama Canal Company, which are now in the possession of the United States Government, these including the extremely voluminous and very numerous technical engineering and mechanical studies made on behalf of the French Panama Canal companies, and various French and Spanish notarial instruments showing the title to various plots and pieces of land upon the Isthmus of Panama, within what is now the Canal Zone, and in the cities of Panama and Colon.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 16, 1908.

AFFAIRS IN THE TERRITORIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the bill and amendments be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I give notice that to-morrow, after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to indulge me for a few moments in making an address upon the subject of postal savings banks. I had intended to make some remarks to-day, but owing to the special order, by which probably the time will be consumed, I shall ask the Senate to give me an opportunity to speak to-morrow.

HERBERT J. BROWNE AND W. G. BALDWIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over under the rule, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. FORAKER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate when Herbert J. Browne and W. G. Baldwin, mentioned in the President's message of December 14, 1908, relating to the Brownsville shooting affray, were employed by the War Department to investigate what happened at Brownsville on the 13th and 14th of August, 1906, the terms of that employment, and whether any others, and if so, who, were, or at any time have been, employed to assist them or to render a like service, and whether white or colored, with full names and residence of same; and whether the said Herbert J. Browne and W. G. Baldwin and any others who may have been so employed are still in such employment, and under what instructions they have been acting; and if such instructions are in writing, to send to the Senate a copy of the same; and what has been paid said parties, or any of them, on such account either as compensation for services rendered or on account of expenses by them incurred in connection with said employment; and also by what authority such persons were employed and by what authority they, or any expenses they may have incurred, were paid, and out of what fund, or funds, giving such account item by item.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not care to address the Senate. I only desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the fact that the resolution, which he yesterday asked might go over, is now before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Since seeing the resolution in print, I have no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 5729, on which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has given notice of his desire to address the Senate. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there are two questions before the Senate in connection with what is known as the "Brownsville affair." One is as to the guilt or the innocence of the soldiers; that is, whether some of the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry were engaged in the shooting on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, or whether they were not. The other is as to the bill presented by the Senator from Ohio compelling the President to restore these soldiers to the army. These two questions are entirely separate, and the question as to the guilt or innocence of the soldiers has no real bearing on the question as to the constitutionality and the expediency of passing such a measure as that proposed by the Senator from Ohio. I propose to treat these two questions separately and in their order.

On the night of the 13th of August, 1906, there was shooting in the streets of Brownsville, Tex. One man was killed, the chief of police was dangerously wounded, many lives were imperiled, houses were fired into, and panic and alarm reigned in the town. In what I have to say I do not propose to detain the Senate by a minute examination of the details of the great mass of testimony which has been presented upon this subject. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs I have heard or read all the testimony in the case, and I have formed a very decided opinion as a result of my examination of the evidence. I intend, as briefly as possible, to explain to the Senate the reasons for my opinion, and I shall be content to do no more.

There was, I repeat, on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, a very serious shooting affray, in which a large number of shots were fired, in the town of Brownsville, Tex. Those shots were mainly, if not wholly, from rifles of high power, and I think I may say that it is admitted that those rifles were fired by some one. The rifles did not find their way alone into the streets of Brownsville and go off by themselves. The question, and the only question, is, who fired the shots? For that shots were fired, death and wounds inflicted, houses damaged, and lives endangered is denied by no one. This, I am aware, is a sweeping statement, for in the course of our investigations we have had some very large and generous denials of pretty much everything but nevertheless I do not think that it will be controverted. After hearing and examining all the evidence, not only that taken by the Senate committee, of which I am a member, but that taken before the Penrose court-martial and before the citizens' committee, I have come to the clear conclusion that the shooting was done by soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry stationed at Fort Brown.

I am not singular in having reached this decision upon the evidence. My conclusion is that of the citizens' committee who first took testimony upon the case. It is that, also, of the Penrose court-martial, which took a great mass of testimony, and before which witnesses were subjected to a severe cross-examination. It is also the opinion of a decisive majority of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. That committee rejected the proposition that the testimony wholly failed to identify the particular individuals or any of those who participated in the shooting by a vote of 8 to 5. They rejected the proposition that the testimony wholly failed to show that the discharged soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, or any of them, entered into any agreement or so-called "conspiracy of silence" by a vote of 8 to 5. They rejected the proposition that the testimony was so contradictory and unreliable that it was not sufficient to sustain the charge that the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, or any of them, participated in the shooting affray by a vote of 9 to 4. The proposition declaring that "the weight of the testimony shows that none of the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry participated in the shooting affray" was rejected by a vote of 11 to 2, and the proposition that, in the opinion of the committee, the shooting was done by some soldiers belonging to the Twenty-fifth Infantry was adopted by a vote of 8 to 4, one Senator not voting. Thus it will be seen that every official body which has heard the testimony has decided that the shooting at Brownsville on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, was the work of soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. All human judgment is fallible, and yet I venture to submit that the decision of the court-martial and of the Senate committee can not be lightly set aside as of no weight with the Senate when it takes action upon this case. The men who have reached this decision in the court-martial and in the committee are just as much entitled to consideration as the minority opposed to them, and they are not any more likely to be wrong, because they happen to constitute a decisive majority of every tribunal which has examined the case. It will also be observed that, although the committee stood 8 to 4 in favor of the proposition that the soldiers were guilty, it stood 11 to 2 against the proposition that they were innocent.

Such, in brief, has been the course of the decisions of those bodies which have been called upon to hear all the testimony in this case, and I venture to think that the opinion of those who have heard and examined all the testimony is entitled to especial weight and authority with those who have given only a partial examination to the evidence. My opinion, as I have said, coincides with that of the court-martial and the Senate committee, and my reasons for it I will set forth briefly.

The shooting must have been done by somebody. There is a great deal of evidence that it was done by the soldiers. There is no evidence whatever that it was done by anybody else. It has been suggested at different stages of the inquiry that the shooting was done by inhabitants of the town, by men from the country, by smugglers, by Mexicans, and all these suggestions were made simultaneously, although they are mutually exclusive. There is no evidence whatever that the shooting was done by citizens of the town, by Mexicans, by smugglers, or by invaders from the surrounding country. Evidence of that sort was from time to time promised or threatened, but it never appeared, and elaborate suggestions and farfetched inferences were all that were ever marshaled in support of the propositions that Mexicans, smugglers, inhabitants, or ranchmen did the shooting. If the shooting was not done by people of these classes, it must have been done by the soldiers, for there was nobody else in the neighborhood capable of doing it. The suggestions of those who wished to clear the soldiers, if contradictory, were comprehensive, and they covered all classes of human beings resident in the neighborhood of Brownsville capable of firing a rifle, except the soldiers. The shooting was done by some one obviously; indeed, it must have been the work of several persons. There is no evidence to connect any of the various classes I have named with it; therefore the only class unaccounted for are the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and we arrive at that point by the simple process of elimination.

There is no physical impossibility of time, distance, or alibi to prevent our attributing the shooting to the soldiers. There was, of course, no attempt to prove an alibi. The soldiers were certainly there in Brownsville on the night of August 13, 1906. As to time and distance, the testimony of Willie C. Miller, a soldier (Vol. I, pp. 860, 861), is conclusive. Miller was out on pass. He had returned from Matamoras about 10 o'clock. He went to a saloon in the town, at a point beyond that reached by those who did the firing, and played monte. He was there in the saloon when the firing began. He remained in the saloon until it ceased. He then went back to the barracks. He did not run; he walked fast, and he reached the barracks in time to join his company when it was just falling in after the general alarm had been given. This shows that there was ample time to have covered the distance from the barracks to the point where the firing ceased and to return in season to answer the call of the company, and, moreover, to return without excessive haste. In fact, it was easier for the soldiers to do the shooting than for anybody else, because they were both armed and organized. Motive was not lacking. Some of the soldiers had had trouble with some of the inhabitants. Justly or unjustly, some of them had been maltreated by some of the inhabitants, and they had felt, in greater or lesser degree, the bitterness of race prejudice. Their freedom of movement had just been curtailed, owing to an affair in which a white woman was involved. They were suffering, therefore, at the moment from the troubles which had arisen between them and some of the people of Brownsville.

Now what, in broad and general outline, are the reasons for believing that the soldiers did the shooting? I will state them, and I will give the references where the testimony is to be found, but I will not weary the Senate by reading the testimony, and will merely ask that it be printed at the proper points in the RECORD. The court-martial and the committee decided that the soldiers did the shooting upon certain evidence presented to them, and this evidence, like all great masses of evidence, is sometimes contradictory in details, but it stands in the main uncontradicted, coherent, and unimpeached. The reasons for thinking the soldiers did the shooting are as follows. They were recognized as soldiers and negroes by the following witnesses before the Senate committee:

Herbert Elkins, Mr. Rendall, J. P. McDonnell, Amanda Martinez, Mrs. Leahy, Dominguez, Ramirez, Preciado, F. A. H. Sanborn, Hale Odin, and L. W. Evans, 11 in all. I give the extracts from the testimony, and ask that they be printed at this point in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

HERBERT ELKINS.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, pp. 2313, 2315.)

Q. After these men had fired into the Cowen house, state whether any others came up, and then proceed from there.—A. After these men had passed across Fourteenth street into the alley back of the hotel, I saw a bunch of soldiers—negro soldiers—come running up the alley. They turned around the corner, and directly in front of the Cowen house—

* * * * * * *

Q. Could you at that distance and at that time see the faces of any of the men so as to know whether they were white or black?—A. I could see that part of them were black negroes, and that part of them were lighter colored.

Q. Could you recognize that they were negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could tell that?—A. Yes, sir.

GEORGE W. RENDALL.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2035.)

Q. Were those white men or colored men?—A. Those were colored men with the army uniform.

JAMES P. M'DONNEL.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2569.)

Q. Who were those men?—A. They were men of dark color in United States uniform—negroes—negroes—negroes.

AMADA MARTINEZ.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2805.)

Q. Did you see that those were black men?—A. Yes, sir.

MRS. KATIE EMMA LEAHY.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2896.)

Q. You heard those voices. Did you see the faces of the party?—A. Distinctly—of those two men only.

Q. Of those two men. What were they—colored men or white men?—A. They were negroes. One was a black man, the other was a yellow-faced negro with spots on his face and distinctly negro features.

M. YGNACIO DOMINGUEZ.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2114.)

Q. They were colored soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; they had uniform. I saw plainly that they were soldiers. It was a clear, light night—starlight.

Q. And you saw their uniforms and knew they were soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; I saw their uniforms and knew they were soldiers.

MACEDONIO RAMIREZ.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2228.)

Q. Did you recognize whether they were colored soldiers or not; and if so, how?—A. Yes, sir; colored soldiers.

Q. How did you recognize them as colored soldiers?—A. Because I saw them with my eyes.

PAULINO S. PRECIADO.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2303.)

Q. Was the uniform that these men were wearing the soldiers' uniform?—A. Of the soldiers; yes, sir.

Q. Also could you, by the light in the courtyard, tell that they were colored men—negroes?—A. It was possible to distinguish.

Q. Did you distinguish?—A. Yes, sir.

F. A. H. SANBORN.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2086.)

Q. You recognized that party as being a colored man and soldier?—A. Yes, sir.

HALE ODIN.

(Blocksom and Purdy Inquiry, pt. 2, p. 78.)

Q. Did you have any difficulty at the time, Mr. Odin, in seeing the faces of these men?—A. No, sir; for they were at times looking up directly toward the window.

Q. And you state positively that they were negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And dressed in the uniform of United States soldiers, such as were stationed at Fort Brown at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

L. W. EVANS.

(Court-martial proceedings Maj. Charles W. Penrose, pp. 325–326.)

Q. Describe this man as nearly as you can to the court.—A. He was a man as tall as I am——

Q. Which is how tall?—A. Six foot one. He was dressed in the uniform—soldiers' clothes—coming down—he came the first time—well, my wife saw him first and called my attention to it—she was standing by my side; I was at the front gate of Mr. and Mrs. Eggley's, and he came off of Thirteenth street down Jefferson street by this front gate that I was standing, and as he got to the corner he went right in the middle of the street and straight to the post fence. He was a nigger, black, very dark—carrying a gun in his left hand.

* * * * * * *

Q. Can you describe accurately the dress that this colored man wore?—A. He had, as I stated, I believe they term it a "khaki" uniform; it was a light uniform. I don't think—I really don't know—whether he had on leggings or boots or what; I was looking at his main body and his face.

Mr. LODGE. They were recognized as soldiers by the following witnesses: Genaro Padron, C. B. Chase, J. Bodin, A. Littlefield, and José Martinez, five in all. I ask that the extracts from the testimony in this connection may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

GENARO PADRON.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2140.)

Q. When you speak of soldiers, how do you know that they were soldiers?—A. Because they wore the uniform of soldiers—yellow.

Q. Were you near enough to tell whether they were white men or colored men?—A. I could not tell, in view of my surprise, as they were firing at me.

Q. Are you sure that they had the soldiers' uniform and were soldiers?—A. The uniform was the uniform of soldiers. More than that I can not say whether they were soldiers or not.

Q. Were they armed with guns?—A. They were armed with guns. It was possible to see that.

* * * * * * *

Q. When these men appeared, coming out of the alley between Elizabeth street and Washington street at Fourteenth, did you then recognize them as soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; because by the light which resulted from their firing, I saw all of their uniforms.

CHARLES B. CHASE.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2187.)

Q. Two men; they came out of the alley?—A. (Continuing.) Who I took to be soldiers, as they had soldiers' dress on—clothes.

Q. What do you mean by having soldiers' clothes on?—A. Well, they were dressed like soldiers, the same uniform, leggings, and both dressed alike; wide-rim hats.

JOSEPH BODIN.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, pp. 2205–2206.)

Q. Now, how do you say those men were dressed?—A. They were dressed in brown clothing—United States clothing. We would oftentimes sit in the Miller House and see them pass. It was a light brown.

Q. Did you form an opinion then as to whether they were soldiers or not?—A. Yes, sir.

AMBROSE LITTLEFIELD.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2453.)

Q. What did you recognize?—A. I recognized them as United States soldiers, or people in the United States uniforms.

JOSE MARTINEZ.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2073.)

Q. From what you saw there did you recognize them as soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; because there were no other people there that wore that kind of dress or clothing and dark faces.

Mr. LODGE. They were recognized as negroes by their voices by the following witnesses: C. S. Canada, Doctor Thorne, C. E. Hammond, Miss Mayfield, C. C. Madison, and N. S. Alanis, six in all.

I ask that the extracts containing this testimony may be printed at this point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

NICOLAS S. ALANIS.

(Messages and Testimony, p. 101, Part II.)

Q. Could you tell whether they were the voices of white or colored men?—A. From the sound of the voices I say that they were negroes.

CHARLES E. HAMMOND.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, pp. 2173–2174.)

Q. You say you heard a negro use the expression, the words that you have given, which I do not care to repeat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you know that?—A. Well, I know it was a nigger, just the same as if it had been a Dutchman I would know it was a Dutchman, and if it had been a Mexican I would have known it was a Mexican.

MISS WILLIE MAYFIELD.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2770.)

Q. Did you form an opinion, or have you formed an opinion, as to that voice, whether it was the voice of a negro or not?—A. It certainly was.

Q. What made you think it was the voice of a negro?—A. Well, I could distinguish the voice very easily. They were right under the window, and you could tell the voice of a negro from another person.

C. C. MADISON.

(Messages and Testimony, p. 84, Pt. I.)

Q. Did you hear the men talk?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they Americans or Mexicans?—A. They were negroes.

CHARLES STAFFORD CANADA.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2275.)

Q. Go on, Mr. Canada.—A. As this policeman and his horse fell I heard voices that I took them to be the voices of negro men.

Q. Did you have any doubt about it then?—A. I did not have the least.

DR. CHARLES H. THORN.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2104.)

Q. What did you hear?—A. I did not pay any particular attention at first. I could tell from their voices that they were negroes talking to themselves.

* * * * * * *

Q. Did you, then, at that time form an opinion in your own mind as to whether they were white men or colored?—A. Oh, I was satisfied, perfectly satisfied, that they were negroes from their voices.

Mr. LODGE. I submit that we have here a mass of direct evidence sufficient to sustain any affirmative proposition in court and not to be done away with by suggestions about the darkness of the night and inferences that all these witnesses were lying because the artificial lights were few and there was no moon. The identification of the persons who did the shooting as soldiers and negroes by no less than 22 witnesses certainly furnishes, so far as human testimony goes, ample reason for attributing the acts complained of to members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

The testimony is overwhelming—so overwhelming that it is not worth while discussing the details—that the shooting began in the neighborhood of the barracks and proceeded thence through the town about 300 yards, and then gradually ceased and died away. All the shots were fired in the town. All the marks of bullets were upon houses in the town; there were no marks of bullets on the barracks. The evidence on that point is direct and conclusive, and I will ask to have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

LOUIS A. JAGOU.

(Blocksom and Purdy Inquiry, p. 135, Pt. II.)

Q. Mr. Jagou, do you know whether or not any of the buildings inside of the garrison wall were shot into on the night of August 13?—A. Afterwards, for the sake of my own curiosity, I looked at the different buildings, and I did not find any evidence of any shots.

MAJ. CHARLES W. PENROSE.

(Court-Martial Proceedings, Maj. Charles W. Penrose, p. 1167.)

Q. * * * —A. The lack of any scars of bullets on the barracks and Captain Macklin's finding shells and clips at the mouth of the alley, and I may add, too, that Doctor Combe told me they had picked up quite a number of them in the streets of Brownsville.

A. W. F. DENNETT.

(Court-Martial Proceedings, Maj. Charles W. Penrose, pp. 305–306.)

A. * * * (I said) "Major, have you had the side of the barracks next Brownsville examined to see if there are any bullet holes in them or any signs of any firing having been done against the garrison by the town?" And he replied that he had had them examined—that side of the barracks—and had found no bullet holes nor any sign of an attack. The only thing they found was one broken pane of glass, and that looked like it had been broken by a piece of brick.

DR. FREDERICK J. COMBE.

(Senate Hearings, vol. 3, p. 2395.)

A. * * * One member of the committee asked Major Penrose: "Major, you say that it was reported to you that the citizens shot up your post, and if it is so, are there any physical signs? Are there any bullet marks anywhere?" Major Penrose said no, that there were none; that there was one windowpane broken, but that was evidently not done by a projectile of any kind—that is, a firearm projectile.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the shots were fired from rifles of high power. The shells of cartridges were found in the streets. A number of bullets were extracted from houses into which they had been fired. The bullets might have been used in one other type of rifle from that in the hands of the negro soldiers, but the bullets in the houses and the shells in the streets taken together could have been used in only one rifle, and that was the Springfield—new model; and there were no new model Springfields in the possession of anyone except the troops of the United States. The testimony as to bullets, cartridges, grooving, and lands was elaborate, technical, and in some respects confusing, but the salient facts which I have stated come out, in my mind, clearly and beyond all question. The combination of bullets and shells, which could be used only in the new model Springfield, is circumstantial evidence of the most decisive kind. Much has been made of the microscopic examination and the fact that it indicated bullets from the rifle of a soldier which was locked up in an arms chest. As to the certainty of the microscopic examinations, I confess to feeling considerable doubt; but accepting them as true, they show, so far as they go, that the shots were fired from new model Springfields, and there is no impossibility created by the evidence in regard to the rifle in the arms chest. It was not impossible that that rifle should have been taken out. It was not impossible that another had been substituted for it. In any event, it does not shake, in the least, the main proposition that those cartridges and shells found in Brownsville, taken in combination, must have come from Springfield new model rifles.

In this connection must also be considered the composition of the bullets. It was thought at first that the analysis showed that the bullets found in Brownsville were of a different composition from those in use in the Army of the United States, but further examination disclosed the fact that a large number of bullets, furnished by contractors to the Government, and from which this regiment was supplied, presented, in their component parts, the exact combination of the bullets brought from Brownsville and analyzed by government chemists. This evidence, which will be found at pages 3333 to 3409, in volume 1 of the hearings of the committee, proves conclusively that there was nothing in the composition of the bullets which conflicted in any way with the evidence showing that they were fired from the Springfield new model rifle.

I am not going any further into the evidence. That which I have stated, and the testimony in support of what I have stated, can all be read in the report of the committee, and appears to me conclusive. Nor am I going to undertake to meet all the presumptions, inferences, and suggestions which have been raised to throw doubt upon the testimony, which, in my opinion, convicts the soldiers of the shooting. My sole purpose has been to state the broad and, as they seem to me, conclusive reasons for the opinion which I firmly hold. There is only one point on the other side upon which I desire to say anything, and that is the testimony of the soldiers. That testimony constituted a uniform denial. I am willing to admit that there were probably many soldiers who knew nothing of the attack beforehand, and that there were some, perhaps, who knew nothing about it after the event; but this does not materially affect the proposition that the soldiers uniformly denied any participation in or knowledge of the shooting affray. That which renders all this testimony, to me, of doubtful value and deprives it of the weight which it would otherwise have is its extraordinary uniformity. It is possible for 150 or 200 men to tell, without exception, a story agreed upon beforehand, and in the same way, but no two witnesses can tell the truth, as they understand it, in precisely the same way about the same event. This is a familiar fact not merely to lawyers, but to those who for any reason have been called upon to weigh and examine historical evidence. Two honest witnesses giving their testimony in good faith about something which they both saw are certain to differ more or less in details, but a whole group of men who have agreed to deny or assert a specified and limited proposition, which may or may not have any relation to the truth, can rise, one after the other, and tell precisely the same story. The soldiers, moreover, had the strongest possible motives for denying participation in or knowledge of the shooting. There could not have been any strong personal motive to induce the witnesses on the other side to testify otherwise than truthfully.

Believing then, as I do, that this shooting was unquestionably done by soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, it remains only to consider the treatment they received at the hands of the proper authorities. It was found impossible to identify the individuals who did the shooting. No soldier would give testimony on that point, and the department was confronted with the question whether, being convinced that the soldiers were guilty, it should allow the guilty men to go unwhipped of justice, or whether, following military precedent, it would hold to account the organization responsible for the criminals. The case was like that at Walla Walla, but at that time there was nothing that the department could do. In the Brownsville case they were able to take advantage of the regulation which permitted the discharge without honor; and they decided that, under the circumstances, discipline and good government alike demanded that the members of the organization responsible for the perpetrators of this outrage should be dismissed from the service of the United States. Their action was made the subject of a widespread agitation, and a measurably successful effort followed to give it a racial significance. I was bred up with a profound sympathy for and interest in the negroes of the United States, brought to this country by force and by force condemned to slavery. I have always tried to aid and serve them, and a bill which I reported, and which passed the House of Representatives eighteen years ago represented the last attempt which has been made to secure to them their political rights in the South. I have encountered criticism, odium, and political attack in their behalf, which can not be said of many of those who, outside this Chamber, have for one reason or another busied themselves with this affair and sought to make capital out of it. I speak, therefore, as their friend when I say that no greater misfortune has happened to them in late years than this effort to make a race issue out of a case of military discipline.

The one thing which all their true friends desire is that they should have entire equality before the law and that, in the eye of the law and in their treatment as citizens, there should be no difference made on account of the color of their skins. Those who endeavored outside this Chamber to make a race issue of this case, and demanded for the negro, because he was a negro, treatment which would not have been accorded to a white man, because he was a white man, took the very ground which the enemies of the negro take and desire to have taken by everybody else. These self-selected champions in various parts of the country sought, in other words, not for equality before the law, but for special treatment for the Brownsville soldiers on the ground of race. As a friend of the negro race I deplore the agitation which had this end in view. These soldiers are entitled to the same treatment as soldiers and citizens that white men would be entitled to, neither more nor less. It would be an outrage to treat them worse because they are negroes, and it would be equally wrong to treat them better than white men under similar conditions because they are not white.

Apart from the race question, there was a strong appeal made to general sympathy, which is always dangerous in questions of this kind, and which may easily distort public opinion and turn awry the course of justice. Sympathy for criminals of all races and of all classes has become the fashion of the time; and although it springs from the better and gentler impulses of our nature, it is capable, when unrestricted and misdirected, of doing incalculable injury to society.

In all the changes of the last two hundred years none has been more marked than the alteration, both in practice and opinion, in relation to crime and criminals, and to their trial and punishment. In the eighteenth century, when more was done than in any other period to advance political liberty, to set free the human mind, and break the shackles which had fettered the thought of mankind, criminal codes and the punishment of criminals, both in England and on the continent of Europe, were Draconian in their severity and ferocious in their execution. The tortures of the Middle Ages and the atrocities of the wars of religion, if they still persisted in certain parts of Europe, had become less common, and in England and her American colonies had been abandoned, but the treatment of prisoners and the ordinary punishments of criminals were barbarous to the last degree. Even in this country, where traditions were less powerful, the punishment of criminals was extreme in its severity, and as late as 1740 many wretched beings were burned at the stake in New York for real or supposed complicity in what was known as the "negro plot." Toward these punishments public opinion was not only indifferent, but the execution of noted criminals was a recognized "sight" which all the world rushed to witness. Going to see men hanged, to observe their demeanor, to listen to their last speech and confession was one of the amusements and excitements of daily life. Fine gentlemen, like Horace Walpole and his friends, made this grim work of the hangman one of the regular diversions of their life. George Selwyn, member of Parliament and one of the great wits and men of fashion of his time, made such a specialty of it that his interest became one of the jests and bywords of the day. He traveled to Paris to witness the hideous tortures and execution of Damien, who was finally torn limb from limb by horses attached to his legs and arms, and the story goes that he showed so much interest in the proceedings that the executioner asked him if he was of the profession. To which Selwyn replied that unfortunately he was only an amateur.

"The judge of the great assize,
Samuel Sewall, the good and wise, describes in his diary the crowds which gathered on the northern slope of Beacon Hill, in Boston, to witness the execution of certain notorious pirates. The bodies, hung in chains, were left swinging on the gallows, another cheerful custom of the time. In England, as here, the bodies of criminals were often left on the gibbets until they became mere wrecks of bones and rags, tainting the air, hideous objects from which the belated wayfarer fled shuddering with averted face when night had fallen.

The great movement for a larger political liberty, which began with our Revolution and culminated in that of France, brought many reforms in its train, and among others that of the criminal law. In England, under the lead of Romilly, the criminal code which inflicted the penalty of death for, as I remember, some 150 offenses—great and small—was radically altered and made more humane. At a somewhat later time the revolting publicity of executions was denounced by Dickens and Thackeray in prose, and by Barham in the Ingoldsby Legends in verse, and this demoralizing spectacle was finally removed both here and in England from the gaze of the crowd. England and the United States were only the leaders in a movement which went on throughout western civilization in the promotion of humanity, of better manners, and of purer laws. The history of the nineteenth century is filled with the reforms which were directed, not merely to the improvement of criminal codes and the mitigation of punishments for crime, but to the better care of the insane, of paupers, and of prisoners who had been treated in the eighteenth century far worse than animals. Governed by the growth of altruism, the revulsion has gone far. In some of our States and in many countries of Europe the death penalty has been abolished, even in cases of murder. But the change in public sentiment and in its manifestations has been even more marked. The pendulum has swung to the other extreme. Before the era of reform there was little or no public sympathy with the criminal. To-day we seem almost to have reached the point where the sympathy is so strictly confined to the criminal that there is none left for the victim of the crime. The abolition of capital punishment does not appear to have brought about the condition postulated by Talleyrand, who, when he was urged to support the abolition of the death penalty, said he certainly would do so if murderers would begin by giving up murder.

To-day not only are every resource and device of the law, generated at a time when death was the penalty for trivial offenses, exhausted to save the criminal from punishment, even when his guilt is flagrant, but public opinion and prurient curiosity follow the malefactor from the cell to the dock, and great newspapers devote columns to his sayings and doings, thus making him a hero in the eyes of the weak and vicious, who are in this way incited to follow the evil example which is forced upon their attention with all the power of wide and ingenious advertisement. Not long ago a young man in northern New York murdered in a most brutal manner a girl whom he had seduced. His trial was protracted; letters of sympathy poured in upon him; his cell was filled with flowers; it was reported that silly women offered to marry him; a tremendous pressure was exerted to induce the governor to intervene. But the governor was a strong and fearless man. He allowed the law to take its course, and the wretched murderer, when all hope was lost, confessed his guilt. In my own State I have seen a similar case, where sympathy for a convicted murderer was dragged into politics in order to injure a conscientious and high-minded governor who had refused to interfere. These, unhappily, are typical cases, and this misdirected, misplaced, and often maudlin sympathy not only does great harm in individual cases but produces the worst possible general results. Organized society takes upon itself the repression of crime and the punishment of criminals, because the experience of ages has shown that if every man is left to protect himself and his family against wrong and to punish aggressions upon himself, he indulges in that "wild justice" which Bacon calls "revenge," and the result is private war and bloody anarchy. But when society takes from the individual the power to protect himself and avenge his own injuries, it contracts to protect him and to punish the wrongdoers by the due process of law. If society fails to do its duty, if its laws result in delays and miscarriage of justice, if the criminal becomes the object of public sympathy and escapes punishment, human nature asserts itself, the ancient individual right is again invoked, and mobs and lynching, Corsican vendettas and private vengeance, take the place of legal process, while law and order and justice are disregarded and cast aside.

The origin, meaning, and purpose of criminal laws and of the punishment of crime are forgotten. We always hear it said that we have criminal laws to prevent crime and to reform the criminal. Excellent as these objects are, neither is the source or cause of criminal codes or police regulations. The reason for the punishment of crime lies much deeper, and is one of the foundations of society and of the law and order upon which civilization and the hope of progress rests. If this duty of society is overlooked or disregarded there comes inevitably a reversion to the anarchical condition from which man has slowly raised himself in the course of ages by the organization of an ordered and coherent society, upon which all civilization depends. Society can not fail in its duty and then expect the wronged and the injured to persist in theirs.

Therefore it is well not to be swayed by a misguided and confused sympathy in cases where the commission of a crime involves not only the wrong to the victims, but the general interests of society at large. In this very case, if our action is to be determined by sympathy, I confess that mine would go out first, not to the men who did the shooting, but to the harmless boy who was killed, to the lieutenant of police dangerously wounded and injured for life while in the performance of his duty, and to the women and children cowering on the floor while bullets crashed through the thin walls of their dwellings. But this is not a case to be decided by sympathy in any direction. What we should seek must be exact justice, so far as we are able to attain to it. The men, whoever they were, who wantonly inflicted wounds and death upon innocent people, and who, in the night, fired into the houses of a peaceful and unsuspecting town, deserve exemplary punishment. Much more do they deserve it if they wore the uniform of the United States. The army of the United States exists for the protection of the people of the United States. If soldiers of the army, armed, drilled, organized men, attack citizens of the United States, the army is a menace to the country and not a protection. The sheep dog that tears, maims, and kills the flock he is set to guard and guide has but short shrift at the hands of the shepherd, and the crime which is forgiven, perhaps, to his kindred of another breed is never overlooked in him. That which would be a crime in the case of any citizen becomes much worse if perpetrated by those who are the chosen and paid guardians of the public peace and safety. Quis custodiet ipsos custodes? We can not have soldiers in whose loyalty to the public service we can not trust. There is involved here not only a crime against the peace of the country, but the discipline and good name of the army of the United States. If innocent men have, of necessity, been mingled with the guilty in the removal of all the members of the companies responsible, as I believe, for this crime, let us pass a bill which will enable the President to restore the innocent to the army whenever he is satisfied that any of them were blameless. But let us not undertake or attempt to force back into the army not only innocent men, but men who were guilty of a serious crime, for to do this would be not only a perversion of justice, but a wrong to the army and to every honest and loyal soldier in it.

I come now to the second question, that which is involved in the two bills before the Senate. One of these bills, presented by the Senator from Missouri and reported by him with the concurrence of the chairman, the Senator from Delaware, and myself, gives the President power to reenlist members of the companies discharged without honor. It is an enabling act made necessary by the expiration of the ninety-day period established by law which would prevent the reenlistment of these men unless some such act was passed. The other bill is that of the Senator from Ohio, and this bill obliges the President to reenlist these men under certain conditions, easily fulfilled by them, whether the President thinks they ought to be reenlisted or not; the proposed amendment does the same thing through the medium of a court. The difference between the two bills is vital and fundamental. One is permissive, the other compulsory. One permits the President to perform a certain act, the other undertakes to compel him to perform it. It is to this latter bill that I desire to address myself.

No one can recognize the importance of the question as to the guilt or the innocence of the Brownsville soldiers more fully than I, yet the importance of this question, great as it is, sinks into insignificance, in my opinion, compared to the issues involved in the bill which is urged upon us by the Senator from Ohio. This bill to compel the President to the performance of a certain act is, in my judgment, not only unconstitutional, but in principle ruinous to the discipline and government of the army. It seems to me to be an invasion of the executive department and a usurpation of power by the legislative. It disregards that principle of the independence of the three great branches of government which is one of the corner stones of the Constitution, and if it should pass the Executive would cease to be, in one important respect, a coordinate branch of the Government of the United States. I now desire to give my reasons for holding these opinions in regard to this bill.

By the Constitution Congress has power to make rules for the government and regulation of the army. The Constitution also makes the President Commander in Chief of the Army. He holds that high place and authority in his own right, not by statute or by grace of Congress; and it can not be impaired or taken from him by any law which we can pass. I shall not enter upon any discussion as to what the framers of the Constitution meant when they invested the President with the office of Commander in Chief, or what power and authority they intended to convey in accordance with the interpretations of their own time, because it is wholly needless to do so, nor is it necessary to enter upon the wide field of discussion so often traversed in regard to the respective powers of the President and Congress in relation to the army. The only thing that is necessary in determining the nature of this bill and what action we should take upon it is to decide whether the President in issuing the order to discharge the Brownsville soldiers without honor was acting within his rights and powers, duly possessed by him at that time. The fourth article of war provides that "No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present. And no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial." Nothing could be plainer than the language of this article, and that the article has the force of law has not, I think, been disputed. It gives express authority to the President to discharge an enlisted man before his term of service has expired. This article does not classify or formulate discharges. It simply uses the word in a general sense and under that article the word "discharge" covered honorable and dishonorable discharges alike, and indeed discharges in any form before the expiration of the term.

In 1891 occurred what is known as "the Walla Walla affair," in which the Fourth Cavalry were involved. There, as at

Brownsville, it was impossible to identify the perpetrators of the crime, but there was no doubt that they were members of the troop of the Fourth Cavalry stationed at that point. A board of general officers recommended that the troop should be disbanded. Military punishments which involve innocent and guilty alike where they can not be distinguished are no new thing. They are certainly as old as the decimation of the Romans and have been used in armies from that time to this. Those general officers, therefore, in their recommendation for the disbandment of that troop of the Fourth Cavalry adopted no novel method of maintaining discipline. The judge-advocate, however, advised the Secretary that it was not within the power of the Executive to disband the troop, and the Executive, therefore, was left only with his power to discharge these men individually under article 4. He could have discharged them all honorably and thus put the guilty on a level with the innocent but he was advised that this would allow the guilty men to reenlist and thus put a premium on crime. Out of the difficulty which had thus arisen came the provision for the discharge without honor which occurs in paragraph 148 of the regulations. This gives the various forms of discharges, and the additional form is in these words: "When discharge without honor is specially ordered by the Secretary for any other reason." This regulation was made by the Executive, and by the acquiescence of Congress acquires the force of law. I can not state this point better than it was stated by the Senator from Ohio on the 15th of January, 1907:

> The regulations made by the President are authorized by act of Congress, and when the President and the Secretary of War make new regulations and Congress acquiesces, the courts have held that that is the approval of Congress.

Therefore the discharge without honor created by the regulations seventeen years ago has acquired the force of law and becomes one of the discharges covered by article 4. Therefore the President, under that article, which in substance is more than a century old, had the undoubted right, expressly given, to discharge honorably or to discharge without honor before the expiration of the term. I do not see how it can be possible to question his right to make the order which was issued in relation to the Brownsville soldiers.

But the authority of the President to issue the order rests with equal security upon broader and more general grounds. Without discussing what the powers of a commander in chief may be in all directions, it is certain that in that capacity the President has the right to exercise all the authority inherent in that office and connected with it by custom and usage wherever Congress has not acted or made rules which would set limits upon it. In other words, where the Constitution and the laws are silent, the President, in his capacity as commander in chief has entire discretion to exercise all the powers ordinarily and obviously inherent in the position of highest military command. In doing so he is clearly within his right as established both by law and custom. The general rule is stated by the Supreme Court in the case of Martin v. Mott (12 Wheaton, 19), as follows:

> Whenever a statute gives a discretionary power to any person, to be exercised by him upon his own opinion of certain facts, it is a sound rule of construction that the statute constitutes him the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of those facts.
>
> It is no answer that such a power may be abused, for there is no power which is not susceptible of abuse. The remedy for this, as well as for all other official misconduct, if it should occur, is to be found in the Constitution itself. In a free government the danger must be remote, since in addition to the high qualities which the Executive must be presumed to possess of public virtue and honest devotion to the public interests, the frequency of elections, and the watchfulness of the representatives of the Nation carry with them all the checks which can be useful to guard against usurpation or wanton tyranny.

In Ex parte Milligan (4 Wallace, 2) the court said:

> Congress has the power not only to raise and support and govern armies, but to declare war. It has, therefore, the power to provide for carrying on war. This power necessarily extends to all legislation essential to the prosecution of war with vigor and success, except such as interferes with the command of the forces and the conduct of campaigns. That power and duty belong to the President as commander in chief. Both these powers are derived from the Constitution, but neither is defined by that instrument. Their extent must be determined by their nature and by the principles of our institutions.
>
> The power to make the necessary laws is in Congress; the power to execute in the President. Both powers imply many subordinate and auxiliary powers. Each includes all authorities essential to its due exercise. But neither can the President, in war more than in peace, intrude upon the proper authority of Congress, nor Congress upon the proper authority of the President. Both are the servants of the people, whose will is expressed in the fundamental law.

We are not left, however, to analogies. This precise case has been decided by a judge of the United States—Judge Hough, of the southern district of New York. It is a case in which a soldier brought an action to recover his pay. I am going to have the whole opinion printed, because I do not think it has been generally read. He says, in speaking of the fourth article of war:

> I am quite unable to perceive how the President's right to terminate a soldier's engagement could be more explicitly recognized, and indeed conferred, if recognition seems to imply some antecedent right.

He says, further:

> Even if, therefore, there be no inherent power of control over the military forces of the nation vested in its constitutional Commander in Chief, and even if, also, there be no grant of power contained in that title in the absence of congressional gift thereof (concerning which no opinion is expressed only because I do not find the discussion necessary for this case), the statutory grant contained in the fourth article of war must be interpreted in the light of military practices, customs, and procedure well known and judicially recognized long before the date of the Revised Statutes, and, indeed, long before the adoption of our earliest Articles of War, in 1806; and by those customs so recognized and approved by Congress, the soldier's engagement was but at the will of the Government which he served, and that Government by authority of Congress speaks through (for the purposes of this case) the President of the United States.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The demurrer is overruled; and as that portion of the answer demurred to presents, in my judgment, a complete defense to the petition, final judgment is directed in favor of the Government and against the petitioner.

I ask that the whole opinion of Judge Hough be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The opinion referred to is as follows:

Hough, district judge (after stating the facts as above). Several matters discussed at bar must be laid aside as immaterial to the disposition of this cause. Whether Reid or his comrades, or any of them, were guilty of the riotous disturbance in question, or whether Reid personally committed an infraction of good order or military discipline, or whether he is, in fact, a desirable soldier, or whether he knew or withheld anything tending toward the discovery of the perpetrators of the Brownsville riot, or whether, so far as Reid or others are concerned, the President's action was unnecessarily severe, cruel, or unjust, are questions beyond this judicial investigation.

The material inquiries seem to me very few. The nature of a soldier's contract of enlistment has been sufficiently treated in re Grimley. (137 U. S., 147; 11 Sup. Ct., 54; 34 L Ed., 636.) By his contract Reid assumed the burden of military service, not for a definite time, but for three years, "unless sooner discharged by proper authority." Nothing is expressed in the enlistment papers as to what reasons shall be sufficient for early discharge, and if the engagement be treated merely as a civil contract of hire, the Government would be entitled to dispense with Reid's services under it at any time, provided the authority—i. e., the officer directing discharge or dismissal—be "proper." In other words, if enlistment be no more than a hiring by civil contract, under this particular contract the corporate master may discharge the servant whenever he pleases and for or without cause, provided only the officer directing discharge be "proper authority."

I do not give assent to the assertion that a soldier's engagement is or bears much resemblance to a civil contract of hire, but, on the assumption (most favorable to petitioner) that it is such a contract, it is, on the part of the Government, a general contract terminable at will, if that will be expressed through a proper officer. (Martin v. New York Life Insurance Co., 148 N. Y., 118; 42 N. E., 416.) This petitioner was, so far as formalities attending his severance from the service are concerned, properly discharged; that is, his discharge paper was correct in form and signature, and so much is not denied. But the "authority" causing and directing his discharge was the President of the United States, who personally gave the order therefor, so that the final question, upon assumptions very favorable to petitioner, is whether the President, as commander in chief of the army, is "proper authority" to terminate in invitum a soldier's enlistment. This question must be answered affirmatively, if either (1) there be inherent constitutional authority in the President, as commander in chief, so to do; or (2) there be such authority in the absence of congressional statutory action limiting the finding or regulating the commander's power, or if (3) in this case the President acted in accordance with the various acts of Congress regulating the army and discharges therefrom.

As to the first and second of these last queries, no opinion is expressed, because the last question must, in my judgment, be answered unfavorably to the petitioner.

The Articles of War constitute the only statutory declaration concerning discharges from the military service. (Rev. Stat., sec. 1342 [U. S. Comp. St., 1901, p. 945].) Article 4 provides:

"* * * No discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial."

And this language has remained unchanged in the statutes since 1806.

I am quite unable to perceive how the President's right to terminate a soldier's engagement could be more explicitly recognized, and indeed conferred, if recognition seems to imply some antecedent right. This fourth article of war clearly assumes that discharges may be granted before expiration of service; the power to grant them implies the power to impose them, unless a soldier have some rights inherent in his contract or inferable from the nature of his occupation. This petitioner's contract is civilly but a hiring at the will of the employer, while the nature of his occupation, so far from varying that status, has been frequently so judicially defined as to leave no doubt of congressional intent. "The recruit is bound to serve during the full term of his enlistment, but * * * the Government is not bound to continue him in service for a single day, but may dismiss him at the very first moment or at any subsequent period, whether with or without cause for so doing." (United States v. Cottingham, 1 Rob. (Va.), p. 629, 40 Am. Dec., 710.)

The civil compact usually requires for its dissolution the mutual consent of the parties, but "the military compact may be dissolved at any moment by the supreme authority of the Government." (U. S. v. Blakeney, 3 Grat. (Va.), 405, cited In re Morrissey, 137 U. S., p. 159, 11 Sup. Ct., 57; 34 L. Ed., 644.) And this historical view of the soldier's relation to the Government or the Crown antedates the founding of this nation and is the accepted doctrine of the British military establishment, upon which ours was modeled. (In re Tuffnell, L. R., 3 Ch., Div. 173.)

Even if, therefore, there be no inherent power of control over the military forces of the Nation vested in its constitutional Commander in Chief, and even if, also, there be no grant of power contained in that title in the absence of congressional gift thereof (concerning which no opinion is expressed only because I do not find the discussion necessary for this case), the statutory grant contained in the fourth article of war must be interpreted in the light of military practices, customs, and procedure well known and judicially recognized long before the date of the Revised Statutes, and, indeed, long before the adoption of our earliest Articles of War—in 1806—and by those customs so recognized and approved by Congress, the soldier's engagement was but at the will of the Government which he served, and that Government, by authority of Congress, speaks through (for the purposes of this case) the President of the United States.

It is, however, further asserted that some infraction of law was wrought by forcing upon Reid a "discharge without honor." The phrase is not known to the statutes. It is found only in the Army Regulations which are from time to time promulgated by the Secretary of War, but do not bind the Secretary that makes them, and much less the Commander in Chief. (Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl., 209.) The exact method of this soldier's discharge and the quantum or kind of character that should be given him not being regulated by statute, must necessarily be left in the discretion of the executive officer having power to grant some kind of discharge. That it is beyond the power of the judicial branch to coerce or review the discretion of the Executive is familiar doctrine, while that a discharge with a very bad character is not a punishment to the man discharged within the meaning of any federal statute is settled by U. S. v. Kingsley. (138 U. S., 87; 11 Sup. Ct., 286; 34 L. Ed., 896.)

The demurrer is overruled, and as that portion of the answer demurred to presents, in my judgment, a complete defense to the petition, final judgment is directed in favor of the Government and against the petitioner.

Mr. LODGE. It is therefore clear, not only by the rules of common sense, but by the decisions of the Supreme Court and of a district court, that where Congress has not legislated the President has a large discretionary power in the exercise of his authority as Commander in Chief; that he was specifically right in this particular case, and that his authority, to borrow the language of the Supreme Court, necessarily implies "many subordinate and auxiliary powers." The discharge of a soldier is a recognized function of a commanding officer everywhere, and under our laws is expressly given to the commanding officer of a department. It is indeed difficult to conceive of military command without such a power. Has Congress, by rule of regulation, undertaken to set a limit upon that power? On the contrary, it has not contented itself with silence, thus leaving the matter to the discretion of the President, but it has expressly vested him with the power to discharge a soldier before the expiration of his term, and by acquiescence, has given its approval to the addition of a discharge without honor to other forms of discharges. Therefore, both on general principles, and by the provisions of the laws and regulations the President had an undoubted right to discharge the Brownsville soldiers without honor.

Having exercised this undoubted right, is it within the power of Congress to rescind his action and compel him to reenlist certain individuals in the army? I think this is clearly beyond the power of Congress, and that to undertake it would be, as I have said at the outset, a mere usurpation. I will now try to give my reasons for the opinions which I have just expressed upon this second point.

In determining the powers of Congress it is important to note the exact language employed in the Constitution. The words are, "make rules for the government and regulation of the army." To make rules for the government of the army and to govern and regulate it are two totally different things, and the phrase of the Constitution is so formed as to make them mutually exclusive, especially when we take it in connection with the clause which makes the President Commander in Chief. There is nothing fanciful or strained in giving great weight to the wording of the constitutional provisions. The men who made the Constitution wrote nothing down without full consideration and an exact knowledge of what meaning they intended to convey. Not only was the convention as a whole extremely careful in its enunciation of principles, but the committee on style, headed by Gouverneur Morris, one of the most eminent and also one of the most accomplished men of the period, used no language without a full sense of its import. When they said that Congress was "to make rules for the government of the army," they meant that it was to make rules or laws and was not to govern or regulate the army itself. It would, I am sure, have been impossible in that convention to have placed the government and regulation and by implication the command of the army in the hands of Congress, because the man who presided over that illustrious body was a great soldier and one of the greatest commanders of the century. We may rest assured that George Washington would never have consented to place the command of the army or its government and regulation in the hands of Congress. Such a proposition would have been repugnant to any man of military training, but to Washington peculiarly objectionable, for he had had a bitter experience of the vices inherent in a legislative body when it undertakes executive functions. The first two Congresses were led by great men and did a great work, better perhaps than work of a similar character has ever been done by any like body. They set forth the principles of resistance to England, they organized revolution and declared independence, but when we passed from this stage to that of actual war the problems altered and Congress for various reasons, chiefly the employment of the leaders in other fields, sank rapidly in ability. The decline of ability was not accompanied by any corresponding diminution in the greed for power, in fact, it may be said that the smaller the men the greater the jealousy of real leaders and the stronger the desire of the legislators to keep power in their own hands.

The result could have been easily foreseen, and anyone who has studied the correspondence of Washington during the Revolution realizes that he found greater obstacles to success in his own Congress than in the enemy he was called upon to combat in the field. With an infinite patience, equaled only by his fortitude, firmness, and determination, Washington throughout the Revolution was contending in Congress with inefficiency, improvidence, narrow views, local jealousies, and even baser faction and intrigue. If ever there was a spectacle presented of a great man struggling for order and light against the forces of chaos and darkness, it was exhibited by George Washington in his dealings with Congress during the years of the war. Yet, in justice it must be said that the faults were not primarily in the men, but in the system, for the system gave to the legislative body executive functions, and the result was universal incompetence in government and administration. With such an experience fresh in his mind, Washington would never have assented to any constitution which would have placed the executive powers in regard to the army in the hands of Congress. I think that we probably owe to him the provision of the Constitution that the President shall be Commander in Chief. I think that I know what he and the convention meant by those words, but it is not necessary to enter upon that subject, for this case, as it stands, is complete without it. To do so would merely give opportunity for eloquent remarks about effete monarchies and the superiority of our ideas to those held in Europe and England in regard to military command, but it would throw no useful light upon the question now under discussion. The sole point I want to make in this connection is that the convention knew precisely what it was doing when it used the words of the Constitution in regard to the army, and that in those words it drew a broad distinction between the power to make rules for the government and regulation of the army and the power to govern, regulate, and command it.

This distinction has been clearly drawn by recent authorities. Judge Nott, cited by Senator Spooner in debate about two years ago, put the proposition most admirably in the case of Swaim v. United States (28 C. Cls., 173):

But nevertheless there remains the significant fact in our military system that the President is always the Commander in Chief. Congress may increase the army, or reduce the army, or abolish it altogether; but so long as we have a military force, Congress can not take away from the President the supreme command. It is true that the Constitution has conferred upon Congress the exclusive power to "make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;" but the two powers are distinct. Neither can trench upon the other. The President can not, under the disguise of military orders, evade the legislative regulations by which he, in common with the army, must be governed; and Congress can not, in the disguise of "rules for the government" of the army, impair the authority of the President as Commander in Chief.

Pomeroy, a writer of the first authority, in his Constitutional Law, page 295, says—and I call attention to this, for it is really a complete statement:

Congress may make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. It is to be noticed that this power is entirely independent of the ordinary judicial department of the General Government. It is applicable only to a special class of men—those in the land or naval forces. The fifth amendment of the Constitution shows conclusively that the rules to be made under this clause were to be outside of ordinary civil judicial proceedings for it excepts persons in the land or naval forces and those in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger, from the safeguard of an indictment.

The language of this clause should be carefully observed. Congress may make rules the object of which shall be regulation and government. It can not utter exceptional or transitory mandates which affect the management and disposition of the army and the navy. This particular grant of power confers no authority upon the Legislature to usurp the functions of the Commander in Chief. The rules framed by Congress for the regulation and government of the land and naval forces form together the military law of the land; they are a part of the general statutory legislation of Congress applicable to a special and designated class of persons—soldiers and sailors. They stand on exactly the same footing, are just as binding, and the decisions of courts thereunder are just as effective as any other laws or any other judgments.

I do not think that it is possible for me to add to, still less to improve, this strong and admirable statement, which covers completely the point I wish to make. It is perfectly clear that Congress can make any general rule it pleases in regard to the government of the army, but it must be a general rule. It can not, to borrow Pomeroy's language, "Utter exceptional or transitory mandates." It can not take upon itself functions of the commanding officer, directly or indirectly. It can make laws to limit, define, or extend the powers of the Commander in Chief, but it can not exercise those powers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. I am much obliged to the Senator. I shall take only a few minutes further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. FULTON. Would it disturb the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. I will be through in five minutes, and then I will hear the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. LODGE. Congress could pass a law that there should be no discharges without honor, but it can not take upon itself to discharge individual men without honor, or to revoke such discharges when lawfully issued by the Commander in Chief in the exercise of powers which, at the time of the issuance of the orders, were undoubtedly his. Congress, under the Constitution, has the power to regulate interstate commerce, which has been defined as the power to prescribe the rules by which interstate commerce shall be governed, but it would be preposterous to assert that Congress could exempt individuals from the operation of the law governing rebates which had been enforced by the President in his executive capacity. The President, in his executive capacity and in the exercise of a power which he then unquestionably possessed, discharged certain soldiers from the army without honor. Congress has no power to rescind that action which was purely executive. It can make a rule which will render such action impossible in the future, if it is foolish enough to do so, but it can not undertake to deal with those particular men or usurp the power of the Commander in Chief to govern the army, subject only to the Constitution and the laws. Congress can, of course, permit the President to reenlist those men by removing the barrier which the ninety-day law establishes, but it can not take upon itself the executive functions which have been already fulfilled and compel him to reenlist certain individuals. Congress can give the President permission to appoint a certain individual to the army or navy, but that it can not compel him to do so was settled in the Fitz-John Porter case. It was argued two years ago that in this matter of appointment there was no parallel, because the power of appointment was not here involved, but I think there is a parallel, in illustration of the difference between Congress permitting the President to take certain action and attempting to compel him to an action which in its nature is wholly executive. The enlistment and discharge of soldiers, under the rules prescribed by Congress, is an executive function, inherent in the Commander in Chief, and the President is Commander in Chief under the Constitution. Congress having established the rules governing enlistment and discharge can not then proceed to enlist and discharge men itself, for that is taking to itself an executive function.

I do not think, Mr. President, that I need dwell longer upon the distinction which I have drawn between the power to make rules and the power to carry those rules into execution. I am sustained in that opinion by the highest authorities, and I am content to rest my case upon them, but I wish to point out, in closing, the mischief which would arise from such action as is proposed by the bill of the Senator from Ohio. Such a measure would be destructive of army discipline; I am speaking now without any reference to the legal aspects of the question. Every officer punished or discharged or sent to a post which he did not like, would come to Congress with a bill for redress, and if this bill becomes a law he would have a right to do so. If you impair the proper authority of a commanding officer and make his subordinates and his men believe that Congress stands ready to review his action it will be impossible to have any effective command, and an army without effective command is worse than useless. By this bill you would go far to convert your soldiers from an army to a mob, stimulated by agitators and ruled by popular meetings. You would make the Commander in Chief the adjutant-general of Congress and render him absolutely helpless to perform the duties which the Constitution imposes upon him. I need not go into further details. The ruinous effects upon army discipline, to which this bill would give rise are only too apparent.

But more important than its practical effects would be its constitutional results. The Senate is justly jealous of its constitutional powers. It resents any attempt to invade those powers, and it does well to maintain all the rights conferred upon it by the Constitution. But we can not protect our own rights if we trench upon those of others. We can not stand on the principle of the three great, coordinate and independent departments of the Government unless we are as careful to avoid invading the rights of others as we are in maintaining our own. In war an attack is often the best means of defense, but the reverse is true when the delicate checks and balances of a constitution are concerned. The safety and independence of one great, coordinate branch of the Government is dependent upon the safety and independence of the others. Each must be scrupulously guarded and maintained in all its rights and privileges, within the limits prescribed by the Constitution. The defense of our own rights, to be valid, must equally be a defense and a jealous observance of the rights and powers of all. If Congress undertakes to usurp executive functions, retaliation is certain to follow, and history shows that in contests of that sort it is always the one man, clothed with executive authority, who profits, and not the legislative body. For the maintenance of the authority of Congress it is important to uphold the independence of each department. For the legislative to attempt for any reason, to seize upon executive functions is not only a flagrant disregard of the principles of the Constitution, but it is a blow aimed at our own lawful authority.

THE SECRET SERVICE—PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. KEAN. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back the following resolution, with an amendment. The objection made this morning has been withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey reports from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted this day by Mr. ALDRICH, as follows:

Resolved, That that portion of the annual message of the President relating to the Secret Service is hereby referred to the Committee on Appropriations, who are instructed to inquire whether the legislation referred to in the message has impaired the efficiency or sufficiency of the force employed in the Secret Service; and such committee are further directed to ascertain what persons other than those included in the Secret Service were paid from the Public Treasury during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, for services in connection with the enforcement of the laws or for work in the detection or investigation of possible crimes or criminal acts or violations of law, including all special attorneys, special agents, inspectors, or other employees of any department of the Government, or any branch of the public service, and also same information as to all persons whose employment was authorized by indefinite or general appropriations; the information to contain the names of all persons so employed or paid, their previous occupation, the nature of the work in which they were engaged, by whom they were appointed, and upon whose suggestion or recommendation; the inquiry, however, not to include officers appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, or officers specifically provided for by law, or laborers appointed as such and actually engaged in employment as laborers.

For the purpose of carrying out the instructions of the Senate the Committee on Appropriations are hereby authorized, by subcommittee or otherwise, to sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate, to send for persons and papers, to subpœna witnesses, to administer oaths, to examine witnesses under oath, and to employ such clerical and other assistance as shall enable the committee to report fully and promptly upon the matters contained in this inquiry, the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; and said committee are further directed to report as soon as practicable from time to time the results of their inquiry, and to make such recommendations as they may see fit with reference thereto, and also their recommendation with reference to that portion of the message referred to them.

Mr. KEAN. Now let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from the end of the resolution the following words:

Also their recommendation with reference to that portion of the message referred to them.

And to insert:

Further to report what action, if any, in the judgment of the committee, the Senate should take with reference to that portion of the message.

Mr. KEAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as I caught the reading of the resolution, it does not direct the Committee on Appropriations to give any attention to that very part of the message which most vitally concerns the honor of Congress. The Committee on Appropriations is not directed to inquire into the very gross and wanton insult which that message offered to each House of Congress; and, so far as I am concerned, I think no action at all should be taken unless some action is contemplated with respect to that. Either Congress is the most pusillanimous body that ever assembled in this country or it will take some notice of the grossest insult ever contained in a message to any body in the history of the world.

I protest against any action respecting the message that pretermits what I consider the vital part of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator could not have observed the concluding part of the resolution. There is a direction to the Committee on Appropriations to report to the Senate what action, if any, they should take upon this message.

Mr. BAILEY. Upon the employment of secret-service agents.

Mr. ALDRICH. The portion of the message the Senator refers to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the President of the United States was not careful of the feelings of Congress, and I can not comprehend the delicacy that moves Senators and Representatives to be very careful about what they say in respect of him. He charges, in effect, that the Congress of the United States withheld an appropriation which the Government needed to enforce its laws, and then says the argument which was used to induce Congress to withhold that appropriation was that if the appropriation was granted and used it would be employed against some dishonest members of the Congress.

I am totally at a loss to understand how this body or the other body can receive a message of that kind and make no protest. I do not think that the terms of the resolution broad enough to authorize the Committee on Appropriations to take particular notice of that offensive declaration. I understand it simply directs the committee to inquire about the number of secret-service men employed. It is immaterial to me how many or how few are employed. That is a matter which does not deeply concern us. That only goes to the wisdom of the action of Congress in limiting this appropriation. But the thing that deeply concerns this body is whether or not they were induced to withhold the appropriation by the arguments which the President alleges governed us. I think that is the part of the message to which the particular attention of the committee ought to be addressed.

Mr. President, I do not want to give this matter any possible partisan tinge, and I have not expressed my opinion on it heretofore because I had hoped that some action would be taken by a practically unanimous vote of the Senate; and as it has doubtless been thoroughly considered on the other side, and as Senators over there know what is to be the future course, probably I ought to content myself to wait until the committee reports; but, at least, I have had the satisfaction of expressing my opinion about what I consider the most extraordinary message ever sent to any body. I doubt, if in the history of this Republic, any mayor ever sent such a message to a corrupt city council.

Mr. HALE. I am, Mr. President, in a way very deeply interested in this resolution and its scope and effect. The whole subject-matter, which has given rise to great, I will not say excitement, but to very strong expressions of sentiment as to the message, is to be referred to the committee of which at present I am the acting chairman by virtue of the rule of seniority in the Senate. What that committee shall do, what powers are given to it by the Senate, what range it has under the resolution, are very grave questions for the committee. Nobody can be more interested in that than the members of the committee.

I thought as the resolution was read after empowering and directing the committee to consider the original resolution, the original enactment, the statute in reference to the Secret Service, its abuses, if any exist, its ramifications in different departments of the Government, that in addition to that, in the closing language of the resolution, it committed to the committee the whole subject-matter in which the Senator from Texas is so much interested—the message of the President, the allusion to Congress, and everything pertaining to it. I do not say that it would not have made the task of the committee easier if this had not been committed to it, but I ask the Secretary to read the last portion of the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have the original resolution here in my hands, and I will read it if the Senator desires.

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I shall be very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. The resolution reads:

And further to report——

Mr. HALE (to Mr. ALDRICH). Read what precedes that.

Mr. ALDRICH. The whole matter is referred to the committee with instructions to report upon certain portions of the inquiry, but the committee is further directed—

To report what action, if any, in the judgment of the committee, the Senate should take with reference to that portion of the message.

I do not see how it could be possible to commit the whole question more clearly and positively to the Committee on Appropriations than by the language used.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I only heard the resolution read from the desk. I followed it as closely as I could. It seemed to me then, and it seems to me now, that the vice of the resolution consists in the fact that it calls for information respecting the secret service of the Government, calls for the number, the names, and the employment, and then directs the committee to report what action ought to be taken. Now, clearly, that direction to the committee must be read in connection with what precedes, and it all appears simply to be an effort to discover whether or not Congress was wise in withholding or limiting this appropriation. In my mind, that is not the question. Certainly that is a question that addresses itself to the judgment and even to the conscience of Congress; but the question which addresses itself to the self-respect of Congress is the imputation of the President that it was governed in limiting this appropriation by a desire to shield its guilty members. That is a matter which the resolution ought to deal with in so many words.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not read the whole of the resolution's directions to the committee, because it did not seem to be necessary. If the Senator from Texas had been observing it when it was read—probably he had better read it——

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Texas may be a little dull, but the Senator from Texas was very attentive while that resolution was being read.

Mr. ALDRICH. The directions to the committee are embraced in that portion of the resolution. The directions consist of two classes; first, that—

The committee are further directed to report as soon as practicable, from time to time, the results of their inquiry, and to make such recommendations as they may see fit with reference thereto.

That is the inquiry, as I understand the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. And they are further directed to report what action, if any, should be taken by the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Report what action should be taken about the employment of these special agents.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, then, Mr. President, if that is not the purpose, the Senator from Rhode Island has been altogether too careful of somebody's feelings. I believe in reciprocity of certain kinds. I believe in respecting the feelings of those who respect our feelings, and I believe in talking bluntly to people who talk bluntly to us.

I think the Senator ought to agree to specifically instruct the committee to inquire whether the President was justified in that imputation; and, if he was not, then that message ought to be sent back to him. No self-respecting body ought to receive a message which impeaches its honor.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the resolution has been drawn in a broad way. I do not think, if there has been any infringement on the part of the Executive on the prerogatives of Congress, that the Senate can properly consider that subject unless it goes to the foundation of the original statute, the constitution of the secret-service force, and what its mission has been under the administration. Following that, I can not see that any language could state more explicitly the duties of the Committee on Appropriations under this resolution. After going fundamentally into the whole question of the statute, whether it has been abused, whether the Secret Service has been extended too far, the resolution in addition to that directs that the committee shall also report to the Senate what action shall be taken upon the passages which have given rise to so much comment and criticism in the President's message. I would be entirely willing that all that should be struck out if any Senator so desired. I may say for the Committee on Appropriations that it is not a leisurely committee; it is not a committee that has no business and no meetings. It is an overburdened committee. There is no anxiety on the part of the committee to take up this work, but if it does take up this work and the Senate instructs it to take up this work I can not conceive that any member of that committee would object to consider the very things that labor in the mind of the Senator from Texas. It is a part of the instructions of the Senate, and I do not see how any language could make it more plain than that.

As I have said, I do not, and the committee does not, covet the duty. I wish the Senate would send it somewhere else, to some other committee or to a special committee; but if it does send it to the Committee on Appropriations, the committee will take the mandate of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Maine takes his seat, I should like to inquire whether or not, in his opinion, the Senate has been insulted?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there are a good many Senators here who have just as pointed views upon all subjects as I have. I should not want to speak for other members of this body as to whether they consider that the Senate itself, of which they are component members, has been insulted. My friend from South Carolina uses, as he sometimes does, a very strong word.

Mr. TILLMAN. If we are accused of dishonesty, of shirking the appropriation of money which is necessary for the public service because we are afraid our own shortcomings will be found out by this very same instrumentality, it looks to me as though we shall rest under the accusation of being a lot of rascals and scoundrels who belong in the penitentiary, unless we assert our manhood and self-respect and say it is not true.

Mr. HALE. I would not go, Mr. President, quite so far as the Senator does. I think there has been a great deal of restive and indignant feeling in the Senate about this matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no restlessness at the White House. They are calm and serene up there. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. I am talking about the Senate. There has been here naturally such a feeling as I have described. I think everybody in the Senate is pervaded by that sentiment. We ought, however, to proceed in a careful manner and a dignified way to take up this question as a great body of careful and conservative men. I can not conceive of any better way of merging this situation into the realm of action than the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has resorted to in this resolution. It seems to me that it covers the whole ground. As I have said, the committee will take the direction of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the acting chairman of the committee to which this matter will be referred, I shall not insist upon any amendment to the resolution, because he construes it, in the presence of the Senate, to include the power to inquire into the very questions which I have and which every other Senator here has in mind. But I will venture to say that I think it regrettable that the question of whether or not the honor of the Congress has been impeached should be in anywise connected with the question of the Secret Service, except so far as the Secret Service has heretofore been employed to investigate members of the two Houses. If it be found upon inquiry that they have been thus employed and that there were reasons for that employment, each House should take such action with respect to its own members as it may deem that its honor requires. If it were found that Congress unwisely limited the use of this money and yet was not moved thus to limit it by considerations affecting its own members, then the duty of Congress is plain, to answer this impeachment, not only of its patriotism, but of its honesty. I hardly think that, upon reflection, it will be considered a proper course for the Senate at one and the same time to consider whether it was wise and whether it was honest.

It seems to me that all other questions must stand aside until this one question is settled, whether or not the Congress was influenced by a corrupt motive to take the action which was taken with practical unanimity in both bodies.

But that is merely my individual view, and for the purpose and in the hope of relieving this question of every possible political aspect I yield to the judgment of those who are in the majority, and who are to control the course of this proceeding at last.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I do not believe any Senator in this body feels more keenly than I do upon this subject. It is true I did not hear the message read, being out of the Senate part of the time and my attention being distracted at other times, but this paragraph was soon afterwards called to my notice and that of another Senator on this side of the Chamber. I expressed then the opinion, which I have repeated in private conversation often, and which I will repeat in public now, that it was a deliberate, a studied, and a gratuitous insult to the Congress of the United States by the President.

There are considerations, however, which induced Senators on this side of the Chamber, and which are obvious to all, to await action by the majority here. We have no doubt that Senators on the other side of the Chamber feel this insult to the Senate and to the Congress as deeply as Senators on this side of the Chamber feel it. The Senate will bear witness that this morning, when the resolution presented by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] was read, I suggested from my place in this Chamber that it was not sufficiently explicit and emphatic upon the question which most concerned us, which was the self-respect and integrity of this body. I then presented—hurriedly, it is true, but sufficiently clear, I trust—a resolution which I intended to accompany the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, expressive of the opinion that it was incumbent upon this body not only to take notice, Mr. President, but to take special notice, of this paragraph of the message; and, in order that the insult might be understood and kept in the public mind as well as in the mind of the Senate, I saw proper to incorporate the entire paragraph of the message in my resolution. No man on reading that resolution, Mr. President, could fail to see where the insult was and the language in which it was couched.

When the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and at once reported back in order to force a consideration in that committee of this very question of the integrity of the Senate, I objected to unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, as the Senate knows and as the RECORD will disclose.

There is not all in the resolution as reported that I should like to see there, but, in my judgment, there is enough, in view of the assurances which we had, to call attention to and have considered what is uppermost in the mind of the Senate, namely, as well expressed by my colleague [Mr. BAILEY], the honor and integrity of this body. After the recitation in the resolution of all these matters about the Secret Service and instructions to the committee to report with reference to them, the committee is also instructed to consider and report not only about the Secret Service, but as to the message. I trust it is not inappropriate for me to say that when my opinion was asked, while the resolution was being considered in committee, I insisted that there should be explicit and further instructions to report, not only about the Secret Service, not only about the various matters as to appropriations and the uses of the Secret Service, but that the committee should be further directed to report what action, in its judgment, the Senate should take with reference to that portion of the message itself. That is the point.

I say again that this resolution does not suit me entirely—I would recite that the self-respect and the sense of integrity of this body demands that it should take special and immediate notice of the paragraph. I regret, Mr. President, that the notice which we have taken of the matter has been so long postponed; but I do believe—and I trust Senators, my colleague and others, upon consideration will conclude—that this resolution, as it has been amended when examined carefully, covers not alone the question of the use of the Secret Service and appropriations, but it provides that the committee shall consider and report to us what, in its judgment, should be done with the message or the portion of it of which complaint is made.

Of course the Committee on Appropriations is a great committee, composed of experienced and able men. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is the acting chairman of that committee, has well expressed the general situation and the general condition of affairs. I do not think we ought to have suggested to them in the resolution the question whether or not, in their judgment, the paragraph ought to be expunged, or whether, in their judgment, it ought to be returned to the President or laid on the table; but we properly instructed them broadly to report to us what, in their judgment, should be done with the objectionable portion of the message.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I inquire if the amendment has been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not yet been agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am not informed as to the character of the Secret Service of the Government, but I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Texas [Mr.

CULBERSON] whether each department of the Government has a secret service or whether there is only one Secret Service—that employed by the Treasury Department?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I do not claim to be particularly advised, but I will say that my information is that the Secret Service Bureau, or whatever it may be termed, is attached exclusively to the Treasury Department.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I assume that it must be taken for granted that we require a secret service somewhere in this Nation, employed by the National Government, for the purpose of inquiring into violations and evasions of law, and I assume that it is not the purpose of Congress to confine the Secret Service to operations regarding violations of law or evasions of law which pertain only to the administration of the Treasury Department.

I am not familiar with the legislation which has thus far been enacted upon this subject. I am not familiar with the character of the amendment which was adopted at the last session of Congress upon this subject, except so far as the President's message discloses it. I assume that the legislative department of the Government might well resent any inquiry, secret service or otherwise, instituted by the executive department of the Government regarding the discharge of the legislative functions of the Congress of the United States.

But I can not understand that Congress should resent the inquiry by the executive department of the United States into any violation or evasion of law, whether perpetrated by people outside of Congress or by people inside of Congress. I do not believe that the Congress of the United States intends to exempt its members from punishment for the violation or the evasion of law or that it intends to exempt them from any inquiry made by the Secret Service of the Government regarding an alleged violation or evasion of law.

Now, I do not believe in proceeding in heat in this matter. If the President of the United States intends to imply that it ought to be a part of the executive function of the Government to inquire into the manner in which members of Congress shall discharge their legislative functions, then I say he insults a coordinate branch of the Government. But when he simply insists that members of Congress, equally with all other citizens of the United States, shall be subject to inquiry regarding violations and evasions of the laws which have passed Congress and been approved by the President of the United States, then I say that he is not insulting Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly; I yield to him.

Mr. BAILEY. I venture to suggest that the Senator from Nevada has not read that part of the President's message. It is not any ground of complaint here or elsewhere that the President insists that members of Congress shall be amenable to all laws. In fact, I think the men who make the law are under the highest obligation to obey it when it is made. But the objection here is that the President stated in his message that the argument in favor of limiting this appropriation for the Secret Service was that if it were granted it would be used in discovering the misdeeds and crimes of members of Congress, thus not merely implying, but, I may say, expressly alleging that Congress was influenced in withholding the appropriation by a desire to protect men in the two Houses who under the use of the appropriation would have been discovered to have been criminals; and if anything were needed to strengthen that inference it is the suggestion that Congress might exempt itself from being pursued by the secret-service agents.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. With the consent of the Senator from Texas I call attention to the fact that the President alleges, or at least he indicates, that the land frauds in the West perpetrated by a certain Senator, who was convicted, were of a part with the investigation which he had been following; not that we have been breaking the revenue laws and thereby laying ourselves open to the charge of disobeying our own laws, but that he is investigating us generally—that we are a lot of rascals who need investigation. Now, there may be men here who feel that way, but God knows I do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I do not intend to establish myself, or to attempt to establish myself, as the defender of the President of the United States. I do stand here in defense of the honor and dignity of this body, and I am anxious that no action shall be taken by this body that shall in any way countenance the charge that its purpose in any of its actions was to exempt its members from the inquiry to which every other citizen of the United States is subjected regarding the violation and the evasion of law.

Now, does the President make a charge to that effect? I am not familiar with this portion of the message. I have read it only since I have been standing here. I have seen something of the discussion in the papers. I simply rise now because the Senate is about to take action upon the subject, and because it is imperative for me to speak now if I would speak at all.

I favor the resolution offered by the Senator from Texas, but in offering that resolution I would abstain from any insinuation or any indication that it is the sense of the Congress that it is exempt from inquiry—not the Congress, but each individual member—as to his violation or evasion of law.

We start off with the proposition, then, that it is essential to have the Secret Service in the Government. We start off with the admission that there is but one Secret Service in the Government, and that is the Secret Service of the Treasury Department. Are we, then, to declare that the operations of the Secret Service of the Treasury Department shall be directed only to evasions or violations of law affecting the Treasury Department? I understand the President charged that Congress, perhaps inadvertently, by its action at the last session practically confined the operations of the Secret Service to inquiries into evasions and violations of law relating to the Treasury and matters within its jurisdiction.

Now the President states:

> The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men.

I do not know whether or not that argument was advanced at the last session of Congress. I have seen in the newspapers that incidental mention of the fact was made that some members of Congress had been under investigation; and if we took that action in connection with that argument, the inference might be justified that Congress was disposed to exempt its members from inquiry and investigation relating to such matters.

I have not read the amendment that was passed at the last session, but I think it would be well for this committee to inquire into the question whether the amendment was not too sweeping in its operation, and that in our endeavor to reach after and correct abuses regarding the Secret Service we so restricted the operation of that Secret Service as to bring our action under deserved reproach. If it is subject to deserved reproach and if legislation is necessary upon the subject, it is the right and the duty of the President of the United States to call attention to it.

Under the Constitution the President of the United States is a part of legislative action. He has the power of recommendation. He can recommend the passage of laws. He can recommend the amendment of laws. He finally has the right either to approve or reject the acts which we pass; and if the action of Congress was such as unnecessarily and wrongly to restrict the right of inquiry of the Government through its Secret Service as to violations and evasions of law, then it was the duty and the right of the President to make his recommendation to Congress. He may have been unfortunate in his language; his language may deserve the condemnation of this body; and if it deserves it, it should receive it; but I trust that the Congress of the United States will not permit it to go out to the country, through any misunderstanding as to what we are doing, that Congress favored the restriction of the inquiry through the Secret Service into all evasions and violations of law by whomsoever perpetrated.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, when this resolution was read I did not intend to say anything in reference to it, and I shall say but a few words now.

I do not think we are so much interested in the extent of the appropriation that was made at the last session of Congress as we are in two questions, and I think they are the most important for the consideration of the committee: First, the committee ought to inquire whether or not the language of the President reflects upon the integrity of the Congress or of any member of Congress, because each House is the judge of the qualifications of its members, and if any member has been reflected upon it is a reflection upon the entire body to which that member belongs, for it is the duty of the Senate, if there is any member of the body who is a dishonest man, whose motives and conduct are corrupt, to expel him. So a reflection upon any one of the members of the Senate or of the House of Representatives is a reflection upon the entire body to which that member belongs.

If the committee shall come to the conclusion that the language of the President is a reflection upon the Congress of the United States, or upon any member of the Congress, then it ought to direct itself to a further inquiry as to whether the President of the United States intended that by his message. If it is a reflection, without any intention by the President to be a reflection, upon the integrity of the Congress of the United States or of its members, then the message, in my judgment, ought to be returned to the President with the respectful request to him to expunge the objectionable matter from the message. If the committee comes to the conclusion that the President intended to reflect upon the integrity of the Congress of the United States or its members, or any one of its members, then it is my judgment that the Senate ought to return the message to the President of the United States without any suggestion at all.

There ought to be, in the interest of the whole people of the country, the utmost harmony between all of the departments of the Government—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. There can not be harmony between these three departments if there is a discourtesy shown by any one department to any other department. If the President has been impolite or discourteous to this body it does not justify this body to breach the rules of propriety, politeness, or decency in its dealing with the President.

The Senate can not afford to follow such a vicious example. It can only treat it with silent contempt, which it should do in the manner I have suggested, if the President intentionally reflected upon the integrity of this body or of its members.

These remarks I believe about cover the ideas I have in reference to this matter, Mr. President, and I yield the floor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in common with Senators on this side of the Chamber, I have been animated by a wish that whatever was done in regard to this matter should have no appearance of partisanship; that it should not be considered in any way or in any wise prompted by any party consideration. For that reason, in common with other Senators on this side of the Chamber, while laboring under very great feeling in consequence of this message, I have said nothing, and others on this side of the Chamber have said nothing, waiting for the initiative of Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

I want to say that whatever apprehension we might have had that what should be said upon this occasion might have the appearance of being influenced by partisan consideration, has been entirely removed by what has been said to-day by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], from the fact that the only Senator who has raised his voice in defense of the President has been a Democratic Senator. Therefore nothing which can be said by any of us can be attributed to any other motive than the motive prompted by a desire on our part as Senators to uphold the dignity and the honor of the Senate.

Mr. President, there is much, of course, that we could say. I am unable myself to see how any Senator can doubt the character of this message, unless it be in the case of one like the Senator from Nevada, who has not read the message. I have myself read the message, and to my mind, Mr. President (the matter now having been taken entirely out of the domain of partisanship by the speech of the Senator from Nevada), it was the most deliberate, the most carefully designed, and the most skillfully worded insult that was ever sent to any parliamentary body by an executive officer, either in this country or in any other country. I would not have undertaken to say that if the Senator from Nevada had not, by his speech, shielded me from the possible construction that I was acting from a partisan motive in the matter.

Mr. President, it is my deliberate judgment that if the King of England were to send such a message to the Parliament of Great Britain there would be but one thing which would shield him from the loss of his crown. That would be the appointment of a regent.

Mr. President, I am content with the resolution under the construction put upon it by its author and by the Senator from Maine. I say I am content; the only thing with which I am not entirely content is this consideration. When a man of sensitive honor has an insult put upon him he does not stop to argue or reason with the man who puts the indignity upon him. At the same time there is this further consideration, that that which might properly influence an individual is not a proper thing to influence a body like this; and I am content, Mr. President, that there shall be in the action of this body, in its dignity and in its conservatism, as strong a contrast as possible with the intemperance of that which calls for the proposed action of this body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the resolution of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey reports from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas, and moves that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 206) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the joint resolution be put upon its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not care at this time to address the Senate in answer to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. At another time I shall want to make answer to the argument he has presented this morning. But I do not wish to address the Senate at any length until the Senate gets an answer from the Secretary of War to the resolution adopted this morning calling upon him to furnish us with information as to the employment of detectives in connection with this matter.

I rise therefore more to inquire whether there is any other Senator who desires to speak on this bill. It is now, I believe, the special order before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Replying to the inquiry of my colleague on the committee, I will say that I think no Senator is ready to proceed at this time. There are others who will debate the question.

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire whether they will be ready to-morrow?

Mr. WARREN. I shall be unable to say that until to-morrow.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio, I will say it is my purpose to address the Senate upon this question at a later date. I do not desire to do so to-morrow, however, especially in view of the fact that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] has given notice that he will address the Senate to-morrow on the subject of postal savings banks.

Mr. FORAKER. I take it from what has been stated by Senators that it will be impossible for me to get a vote before we adjourn for the holidays.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Ohio has already given a good reason for that, in that he has called for information——

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. In addition to that which we have now, information which we did not have at the last session when we made the bill the special order for this time.

I will say, if the Senator wishes my views, that there can be no vote on the bill until after the recess.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand so from the responses made. Now, I desire to inquire what becomes of this measure. It is the special order, and I do not want to have to come back here to-morrow——

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. WARREN. The Chair will state as to that, but, as I understand, after to-day it will simply be a measure upon the Calendar, to be passed upon at some other time.

Mr. FORAKER. At any rate, I will have to yield for the present. However, before doing so, I give notice that I shall call up the bill and insist upon its further consideration as soon as I return after the holidays.

Mr. CULBERSON. We on this side of the Chamber were unable to hear what was done with reference to the Brownsville bill. What disposition was made of the special order?

Mr. LODGE. It goes over.

Mr. FORAKER. It simply goes over, I suppose, and goes back on the Calendar, and I have given notice that I will call up the bill for further consideration as soon as I return after the holidays, it appearing to be impossible to get a vote before that time.

FOREST CONSERVATION.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, at the recent meeting of the national conservation commission held in this city my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] delivered a very able and admirable address on the subject of forest conservation, which, I think, contains a good deal of valuable information. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it may be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the address submitted by him be printed as a document. In the absence of objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we could not hear distinctly what was being done. What is the paper which the Senator from Utah desires to have printed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks that the address of his colleague [Mr. SMOOT], chairman of the section of forests, before the governors, state and national conservation commissions, Washington, D. C., December 10, 1908, be printed as a public document.

Mr. BACON. As I understand, that is not a commission appointed by law. I have no objection to any paper being printed which will be of information to the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will state for the information of the Senator from Georgia what I already stated, and which he did not hear, that the address contains a great deal of very excellent and interesting information upon the subject of forest conservation, which I regard as a very important subject. It is not a long address. It will not occupy more than seven or eight pages at the outside. I think it will be of real interest and real benefit to have it published.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Utah did not understand the suggestion made by me. I understand the request is that the paper be printed as a document.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A Senate document.

Mr. BACON. A Senate document. To the printing of the address as such I would have no objection if it contains such information as the Senator from Utah indicates, but if I caught correctly the announcement, it speaks of that address as having been delivered before a certain commission, in language which appeared to me to be a recognition of it as an official commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, I had no such intention, Mr. President. It is an unofficial body, of course.

Mr. BACON. Of course we know that it is not a commission authorized by law, and I simply wish that the order to print shall not be stated in language which would indicate a recognition of it by the Senate as an official body.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I entirely agree with the Senator, and I have no such desire.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that he might have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no!

Mr. TILLMAN. If it is printed as a document, it will have very little circulation. If it is worth printing at all, it should be given the widest possible circulation.

Mr. BACON. I am opposed, not to this particular paper being printed in the RECORD, but I am opposed to outside addresses being printed in the RECORD. I shall make no opposition to having them printed as a document, but I shall certainly object to having them printed in the RECORD. I do not say this because of the nature of this particular paper. I made the same objection when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], a few days since, asked that a certain address should be published in the RECORD. If we begin to load down the RECORD with every address, there will be no end of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. We are already loading it down with a great deal of worthless matter.

Mr. BACON. Therefore I shall object to the suggestion to print the paper in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be printed as a document.

ST. PAUL BRIDGE AND TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 22274) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn., was read the first time by its title.

Mr. FRYE. Yesterday the Senate passed a bill identical with the House bill, and I ask that this bill may be considered now without reference to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at or near the southerly limits of the city of St. Paul, from a point on the east side of said river in the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 9, township 28 north, range 22, in Ramsey County, to a point in lot 5, section 16, township 28, range 22, in Dakota County, all in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7777) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which the Senate bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 17, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 16, 1908.

THIRD ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE.

William Phillips, of Massachusetts, lately Chief of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs in the Department of State, to be Third Assistant Secretary of State of the United States, vice Huntington Wilson, nominated to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Roumania and Servia and diplomatic agent in Bulgaria.

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Huntington Wilson, of Illinois, lately Third Assistant Secretary of State of the United States, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Roumania and Servia and diplomatic agent in Bulgaria, vice Horace G. Knowles, resigned.

PURCHASING AGENT FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

John A. Holmes, of the District of Columbia, to be purchasing agent for the Post-Office Department, vice William E. Cochran, whose commission expired December 12, 1908.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Bryson P. Blair, of Colorado, whose term will expire January 17, 1909, to be register of the land office at Montrose, Colo. (Reappointment.)

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Julius H. Weiss, of Colorado, to be receiver of public moneys at Del Norte, Colo. (Reappointment.)

GOVERNOR OF ARIZONA.

Joseph H. Kibbey, of Phoenix, Ariz., whose term will expire February 27, 1909, to be governor of Arizona. (Reappointment.)

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

Lieut. Col. Daniel M. Appel, Medical Corps, to be colonel from December 12, 1908, vice Harvey, retired from active service.

Maj. John L. Phillips, Medical Corps, to be lieutenant-colonel from December 12, 1908, vice Appel, promoted.

Capt. Francis M. C. Usher, Medical Corps, to be major from December 12, 1908, vice Phillips, promoted.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

Frederick Clifford Rogers, of Minnesota, to be second lieutenant from December 14, 1908, vice Ecker, Ninth Infantry, retired from active service.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Sergt. Frederick Colwell Phelps, Sixth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, to be second lieutenant, with rank from August 29, 1908.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Arthur P. Nazro to be a rear-admiral in the navy from the 15th day of December, 1908, vice Rear-Admiral John E. Pillsbury, retired.

Passed Asst. Surg. Robert E. Ledbetter to be a surgeon in the navy from the 11th day of October, 1908, vice Surg. Oliver Diehl, promoted.

The following-named assistant surgeons in the navy to be passed assistant surgeons in the navy, from the dates set opposite their names, upon the completion of three years' service in present grade:

Frank E. Sellers, from August 1, 1908.

Edward H. H. Old, from September 21, 1908.

Edward C. White, from September 21, 1908.

Chaplain Charles M. Charlton to be a chaplain in the navy with the rank of commander from the 6th day of December, 1908, vice Chaplain William T. Helms, resigned.

Chaplain George L. Bayard to be a chaplain in the navy with the rank of lieutenant-commander from the 6th day of December, 1908, vice Chaplain Charles M. Charlton, promoted.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Josiah R. Baker to be postmaster at Antioch, Cal., in place of Josiah R. Baker. Incumbent's commission expires December 16, 1908.

DELAWARE.

Frank F. Davis to be postmaster at Laurel, Del., in place of David C. Moore, resigned.

ILLINOIS.

Isaac W. Arnold to be postmaster at St. Elmo, Ill., in place of Isaac W. Arnold. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

INDIANA.

Frank D. Walters to be postmaster at Monroeville, Ind., in place of Frank D. Walters. Incumbent's commission expires January 30, 1909.

IOWA.

John Buchanan to be postmaster at Eagle Grove, Iowa, in place of John Buchanan. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

William A. Gibbs to be postmaster at Armstrong, Iowa, in place of Matthew Richmond, resigned.

KENTUCKY.

George W. Hutcheson to be postmaster at Lawrenceburg, Ky., in place of George W. Hutcheson. Incumbent's commission expired December 17, 1907.

MAINE.

Montrose E. Hill to be postmaster at Old Orchard, Me., in place of Montrose E. Hill. Incumbent's commission expired December 8, 1908.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Susan F. Twiss to be postmaster at Three Rivers, Mass., in place of Susan F. Twiss. Incumbent's commission expired December 8, 1908.

MICHIGAN.

William T. Hosner to be postmaster at Romeo, Mich., in place of William T. Hosner. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

Richard E. MacLean to be postmaster at Wells, Mich., in place of Richard E. MacLean. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

MINNESOTA.

Frank R. Coughran to be postmaster at Worthington, Minn., in place of Frank R. Coughran. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

MISSOURI.

Albert T. McAdow to be postmaster at Lamar, Mo., in place of Albert T. McAdow. Incumbent's commission expired December 14, 1908.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Harry M. Cheney to be postmaster at Lebanon, N. H., in place of Mary V. Cheney. Incumbent's commission expired December 7, 1908.

NEW JERSEY.

Ada B. Nafew to be postmaster at Eatonton, N. J. Office became presidential October 1, 1908.

NEW YORK.

John M. Gilmour to be postmaster at Morristown, N. Y., in place of John M. Gilmour. Incumbent's commission expires January 14, 1909.

J. Johnson Ray to be postmaster at Norwich, N. Y., in place of J. Johnson Ray. Incumbent's commission expires January 14, 1909.

James W. Welch to be postmaster at Hamilton, N. Y., in place of James W. Welch. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1908.

NORTH CAROLINA.

J. Walter Jones to be postmaster at North Wilkesboro, N. C., in place of J. Walter Jones. Incumbent's commission expired March 3, 1907.

OHIO.

Walter Elliott to be postmaster at Ada, Ohio, in place of Walter Elliott. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1908.

George W. C. Perry to be postmaster at Chillicothe, Ohio, in place of George W. C. Perry. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1908.

Theodore Totten to be postmaster at Findlay, Ohio, in place of Theodore Totten. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1908.

OKLAHOMA.

Robert A. Diggs to be postmaster at Lindsay, Okla., in place of Robert A. Diggs. Incumbent's commission expires January 9, 1909.

Ransom H. Drewry to be postmaster at Marlow, Okla., in place of Georgia Keeton. Incumbent's commission expires March 1, 1909.

Olin W. Meacham to be postmaster at Henryetta, Okla., in place of Olin W. Meacham. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

Frank Victor to be postmaster at Afton, Okla., in place of Oliver F. Mason, removed.

OREGON.

Jesse N. Baskett to be postmaster at Freewater, Oreg. Office became presidential October 1, 1908.

Nathan E. Chambless to be postmaster at Arleta, Oreg. Office became presidential October 1, 1908.

Edgar Hostetler to be postmaster at The Dalles, Oreg., in place of Edgar Hostetler. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1908.

Charles W. Merrill to be postmaster at Bend, Oreg. Office became presidential October 1, 1908.

George M. Richey to be postmaster at Lagrande, Oreg., in place of George M. Richey. Incumbent's commission expires January 16, 1909.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Joseph B. Colcord to be postmaster at Port Allegany, Pa., in place of Joseph B. Colcord. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1908.

TEXAS.

J. W. Boynton to be postmaster at Anson, Tex., in place of Harry C. Butler, removed.

Arthur E. Foster to be postmaster at Venus, Tex. Office became presidential January 1, 1908.

Evert Johnson to be postmaster at Jacksboro, Tex., in place of Jeannette D. McConnell. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1904.

Thomas A. Pope to be postmaster at Cameron, Tex., in place of Otto C. Zavisch. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

VIRGINIA.

Charles H. Jones to be postmaster at Dry Fork, Va. Office became presidential January 1, 1908.

Albert L. Taylor to be postmaster at Parksley, Va. Office became presidential October 1, 1907.

VERMONT.

Arthur F. Stone to be postmaster at St. Johnsbury, Vt., in place of L. Downer Hazen, resigned.

WASHINGTON.

Walter G. Lynn to be postmaster at Starbuck, Wash. Office became presidential October 1, 1908.

Samuel F. Street to be postmaster at Edmunds, Wash. Office became presidential October 1, 1908.

WISCONSIN.

Herman M. Blumenthal to be postmaster at Columbus, Wis., in place of Herman M. Blumenthal. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1908.

Frank B. Goodhue to be postmaster at Whitewater, Wis., in place of Frank B. Goodhue. Incumbent's commission expired April 27, 1908.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 16, 1908.

CONSUL-GENERAL.

Horace Lee Washington, of the District of Columbia, to be consul-general of the United States of class 4 at Marseilles, France.

CONSULS.

George B. Anderson, of the District of Columbia, to be consul of the United States of class 8 at Martinique, West Indies.

Orlando H. Baker, of Iowa, to be consul of the United States of class 7 at Sandakan, British North Borneo.

Arthur J. Clare, of the District of Columbia, to be consul of the United States of class 6 at Georgetown, Guiana.

Frederick D. Cloud, of Iowa, to be consul of the United States of class 8 at Antung, China.

Percival Gassett, of the District of Columbia, to be consul of the United States of class 8 at Jeres de la Frontera, Spain.

C. Ludlow Livingston, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States of class 9 at Salina Cruz, Mexico.

John E. Rowen, of Iowa, to be consul of the United States of class 7 at Punta Arenas, Chile.

Augustus G. Seyfert, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States of class 8 at Owen Sound, Ontario, Canada.

PROMOTION IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Third Lieut. of Engineers Joseph Edward Sheedy to be second lieutenant of engineers in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to rank as such from April 16, 1908.

CHIEF EXAMINER OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

George R. Wales, of Vermont, to be chief examiner of the Civil Service Commission.

SECRETARIES OF LEGATION.

Irwin B. Laughlin, of Pennsylvania, to be secretary of the legation to Greece and Montenegro.

U. Grant Smith, of Pennsylvania, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Santiago, Chile.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION AND CONSUL-GENERAL.

Arthur Hugh Frazier, of Pennsylvania, to be secretary of the legation and consul-general of the United States at San Salvador, Salvador.

JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA.

Rufus H. Thayer, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the United States court for China, vice Lebbeus R. Wilfley, resigned.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Curg H. Lingenfelter, of Idaho, to be United States attorney for the district of Idaho.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Shadrach L. Hodgin, of Idaho, to be United States marshal for the district of Idaho.

EXAMINER IN CHIEF IN THE PATENT OFFICE.

Frank C. Skinner, of Missouri, to be an examiner in chief in the Patent Office.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Matthew R. Wilson, of Livingston, Mont., to be register of the land office at Bozeman, Mont.

Charles L. Harris, of Billings, Mont., to be register of the land office at Billings, Mont.

Thomas B. Hiskey, of Kansas, to be register of the land office at Colby, Kans.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Sergt. Frederick Colwell Phelps to be a second lieutenant in the infantry arm of the army.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

James A. Chambliss to be postmaster at Enterprise, Ala.
William B. Dale to be postmaster at Camden, Ala.
Daniel A. Ewing to be postmaster at Florala, Ala.
May T. Fowler to be postmaster at Uniontown, Ala.
A. W. Hawke to be postmaster at Samson, Ala.
Henry L. Marsh to be postmaster at Abbeville, Ala.
James W. Pilgreen to be postmaster at Calera, Ala.
Thomas H. Stephens to be postmaster at Gadsden, Ala.
Charley N. Thompson to be postmaster at Piedmont, Ala.
Byron Trammell to be postmaster at Dothan, Ala.
Robert H. Trammell to be postmaster at Lockhart, Ala.
William Wagner to be postmaster at Atmore, Ala.
Newton L. Wilson to be postmaster at Blocton, Ala.
Lea Woodruff to be postmaster at Demopolis, Ala.

COLORADO.

Francis M. Carman to be postmaster at Limon, Colo.
Henry W. Lance to be postmaster at Rocky Ford, Colo.
Griffith R. Lewis to be postmaster at Cripple Creek, Colo.
Robert S. Lewis to be postmaster at Canon City, Colo.

DELAWARE.

Frank F. Davis to be postmaster at Laurel, Del.

HAWAII.

M. T. Lyons to be postmaster at Wailuku, Hawaii.

MAINE.

George D. Libby to be postmaster at Gardiner, Me.

MISSISSIPPI.

Dozier Anderson to be postmaster at Tupelo, Miss.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Harry M. Cheney to be postmaster at Lebanon, N. H.

NEW JERSEY.

Frederick W. Bohlen to be postmaster at Maurer, N. J.
Albert M. Bradshaw to be postmaster at Lakewood, N. J.
Charles F. Burney to be postmaster at Bradley Beach, N. J.
Charles S. Day to be postmaster at New Market, N. J.
Thomas Graham to be postmaster at Point Pleasant, N. J.
Arthur F. Stecher to be postmaster at Riverside, N. J.

NEW YORK.

Arthur C. Agan to be postmaster at Fayetteville, N. Y.
N. Austin Baker to be postmaster at Salem, N. Y.
Flora E. Bassett to be postmaster at Walton, N. Y.
Thomas A. Braniff to be postmaster at New Brighton, N. Y.
Robert P. Brown to be postmaster at West New Brighton, N. Y.
Thomas A. Chisholm to be postmaster at Fort Covington, N. Y.
William H. Clark to be postmaster at Nichols, N. Y.
Orley W. Closson to be postmaster at Schuylerville, N. Y.
Henry E. Corwin to be postmaster at Bellport, N. Y.
William Cowie to be postmaster at Syracuse, N. Y.
Fred A. Davis to be postmaster at Fort Edward, N. Y.
Timothy Dinneen to be postmaster at St. Johnsville, N. Y.
Charles W. Fletcher to be postmaster at Montour Falls, N. Y.
Lee V. Gardner to be postmaster at Centerville Station, N. Y.
John F. Heim to be postmaster at Lancaster, N. Y.
J. Johnson Ray to be postmaster at Norwich, N. Y.
Durward B. Kelly to be postmaster at Griffin Corners, N. Y.
Annie Larrabee to be postmaster at Oyster Bay, N. Y.
Henry Morgan to be postmaster at Aurora, N. Y.
Jonathan B. Morey to be postmaster at Dansville, N. Y.
George Mumford to be postmaster at Milford, N. Y.
Frederick B. Powell to be postmaster at Amityville, N. Y.
William Purcell to be postmaster at Scottsville, N. Y.
Frank Stumpf to be postmaster at Stillwater, N. Y.
Alexander S. Taylor to be postmaster at Westbury, N. Y.
Mortimer R. Tefft to be postmaster at Greenwich, N. Y.
Frederick Torns to be postmaster at Lindenhurst, N. Y.
Charles K. Williams to be postmaster at Phoenix, N. Y.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Henry O. Garber to be postmaster at Berwyn, Pa.
Royal A. Stratton to be postmaster at Conneaut Lake, Pa.
Albert H. Swing to be postmaster at Coatesville, Pa.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

W. Clarence Clinkscales to be postmaster at Belton, S. C.
Allen T. Collins to be postmaster at Conway, S. C.
Alonzo M. Folger to be postmaster at Easley, S. C.
Arthur R. Garner to be postmaster at Timmonsville, S. C.
Leila Jackson Huntley to be postmaster at Cheraw, S. C.
Louis Jacobs to be postmaster at Kingstree, S. C.

TENNESSEE.

William A. Anderson to be postmaster at Bellbuckle, Tenn.
James L. Cotham to be postmaster at Hohenwald, Tenn.
William T. Smythe to the postmaster at Mountain City, Tenn.

TEXAS.

John D. Anderson to be postmaster at Miles, Tex.
George W. Andruss to be postmaster at Rotan, Tex.
W. L. Brown to be postmaster at Hamlin, Tex.
John Edwin Clarke to be postmaster at Knox City, Tex.
Harry H. Cooper to be postmaster at Nacogdoches, Tex.
C. A. Cox to be postmaster at Lott, Tex.
David C. Dodge to be postmaster at Claude, Tex.

Christian Doss to be postmaster at Palacios, Tex.
George C. Hopkins to be postmaster at Winnsboro, Tex.
J. S. House to be postmaster at Kingsville, Tex., in place of R. G. Flats, resigned.
Albert S. Jones to be postmaster at Kosse, Tex.
Evert Johnson to be postmaster at Jacksboro, Tex.
Thomas A. Pope to be postmaster at Cameron, Tex.
Joseph Stanley to be postmaster at Schulenburg, Tex.
Elisa Palacias Stockwell to be postmaster at San Diego, Tex.
Ernest R. Williams to be postmaster at Hamilton, Tex.

WASHINGTON.

John W. Conn to be postmaster at Camas, Wash.
George W. Edgerton to be postmaster at Puyallup, Wash.
Theo Hall to be postmaster at Medical Lake, Wash.
A. C. Johansen to be postmaster at Enumclaw, Wash.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate Wednesday, December 16, 1908.

Sergt. Frederick Caldwell Phelps, Sixth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, for appointment as second lieutenant of infantry, United States Army, with rank from August 29, 1908, which was submitted to the Senate on December 8, 1908.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 16, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair lays before the House the following communication.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., December 15, 1908.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The honor of the presence of the Speaker and of the House of Representatives of the United States is requested at the formal opening of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, in the city of Seattle, on the 1st day of June, 1909.

The acceptance of this invitation and the attendance of the Speaker and the House of Representatives upon this occasion will be most gratifying to the president and the directors of the exposition and to all through whose assistance this celebration has been made worthy of the cause it represents.

Sincerely, yours,

J. E. CHILBERG,
President of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to present a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the invitation extended to the Congress of the United States by the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition to attend the opening ceremony of said exposition to be held at Seattle, Wash., June 1, 1909, be and it is hereby, accepted; that the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a committee, to consist of 15 Representatives and 10 Senators of the Sixtieth Congress, to attend the formal opening referred to, and to represent the Congress of the United States on that occasion.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution and communication be referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 22274) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near St. Paul, Minn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is in the form in which all of these bills are drawn?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes, sir; exactly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And reported from the committee favorably?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes, sir; and approved by the department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

J. J. SPEIGHT.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 453.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to J. J. Speight the sum of $70.83, being the amount due him as clerk-hire allowance for services rendered the late Hon. Ariosto A. Wiley, a Representative from Alabama, from June 1 to June 17, 1908, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

N. J. FIELD.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following resolution:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 450.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Selina Field, widow of N. J. Field, late a private, Capitol police force, a sum equal to six months of his salary as such employee and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, for the funeral expenses of said N. J. Field.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

FRANK C. MERRITT.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I also offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 441.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Frank C. Merritt the sum of $112.84, being the amount due him as clerk-hire allowance for services rendered the late Hon. LLEWELLYN POWERS, a Representative from Maine, from July 1 to July 28, 1908, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of a clerk to each of the following committees, at the rate of $6 per day each, from the beginning of the present session of Congress and until the adjournment thereof, to wit:

Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture;
Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor;
Expenditures in the Department of Justice;
Expenditures in the Interior Department;
Expenditures in the Navy Department;
Expenditures in the Post-Office Department;
Expenditures in the State Department;
Expenditures in the Treasury Department;
Expenditures in the War Department;
Expenditures on Public Buildings; and Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, what are these clerks to do?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. To perform the duties of those different committees to which they are assigned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Have any of these committees ever met?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir; they have had several meetings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which ones?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. A majority of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which of them?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Well, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and, in fact, I think all of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has anybody ever seen any report of any work that these committees have done that has been of any benefit to either the House or anybody else?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. The members of the Committee on Accounts. That exhibit was made to them, and that is their reason for making this favorable report allowing these clerks. They were allowed in the first session of the present Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These clerks were allowed in the first session of this Congress in the hope that they would perform some of the duties which devolved upon them under the rules of the House—that is, to inquire into the expenditures of the various departments?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have some knowledge of two of these committees having done some work. I hardly would know that the others were in existence if it were not for reading the rules and seeing them enumerated.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. The gentleman perhaps did not make the same inquiry about the others as about the two that he knows of. They have all done some work. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not affect me. I am not reflecting on the committee at all, but reflecting on my judgment as to the necessity and propriety of giving these committees these clerks.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? Mr. Speaker, I agreed to this resolution after hearing the various chairmen of these communities and after investigating what work they had done under the resolution granting these clerks at the last session of Congress. These gentleman insisted that they ought to have these clerks made annual clerks. The committee declined to grant that request. If the gentleman will examine the report of these committees filed in the House, the committee of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] is chairman, the committee of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] is chairman, the committee of which my friend the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] is chairman, and the committee of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] is chairman, they will find that these committees have, in the short time in which they have had these clerks, undertaken to carry out the statement they made in the House, that they would do work in these committees.

It is true all of them have not done so; but quite a number of them have. I can not recollect the names of the committees that have reported bills containing valuable information to the House and country. I myself did not at first think that the clerks for these committees were necessary, and can not think that all of them are necessary; but it is very difficult to discriminate between these committees, and therefore we have agreed to the resolution granting the appointment of clerks for this session. After investigation, after inquiry, after hearing these various gentlemen who are chairmen of these committees, we have agreed to this resolution, that they shall have the same clerical assistance as was given them last session for the next session. It will not amount to much. They insist that they shall have it, and that the work has been done, and has been well done. If the gentleman from New York will investigate, he will find that very valuable information has been given to the House and country by these committees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have made some investigation, and with the exception of two of these committees, I do not know of any information of any value to anybody that has been obtained by these committees.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. What two are those?

Mr. FITZGERALD. One is the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department, which did conduct some investigation, endeavoring to ascertain how the money was expended in connection with that department. The other committee was the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, which did some work.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department has made a very valuable report here on investigation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I do not think this case needs any extended argument, but I will yield to the gentleman for a while.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York stated that only two of these committees that he had heard of had done any work. There is on the Calendar, in addition to the two committees which he mentioned, a report from the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is three.

Mr. MANN. I was just with the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor in a committee where we desired to have hearings set, and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] stated that every Monday he was engaged all the morning in the work of this expenditures committee, and although the other committee was all present he would not be able to attend the meeting on Monday; and he informed us as a matter of curiosity to me that they were doing a considerable amount of work, looking over the expenditures of that department. If these committees are beginning to do this work, I think they ought to be encouraged to continue, if it costs a little. Last year I remember——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I spoke about the gentleman's committee—the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MANN. I know; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER], chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, last year when the post-office appropriation bill was under consideration, gave to the House very valuable information which he derived from the investigation on that subject; and I know that last year the House committee on the distribution of rooms gave him a room, in which he conducted hearings for a long time, and he conducted an investigation which I think has obtained a great deal of information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I had the gentleman in mind, but overlooked him in stating the committees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL MESSENGER FOR HOUSE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I also offer the following resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House compensation at the rate of $100 per month during the present session to one additional messenger, to be employed under the direction of the Postmaster of the House, for duty in the branch post-office in the House wing of the Capitol.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

EMPLOYEES' SALARIES FOR THE MONTH OF DECEMBER.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 206) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say, for the information of the House, that this is the usual resolution, and it is necessary to have it passed to-day, so that the disbursing clerk can get up his accounts in time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 6155, and move that the House further insist upon its amendments to the Senate bill and ask for a conference. On that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6155) "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered nine, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land subject to entry under this act do not have upon them a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may in his discretion designate such tracts of land, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same as required by this act."

And that the House agree to the same.

F. W. MONDELL,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
JNO. W. GAINES,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
C. D. CLARK,
A. J. MCLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House do further insist on its amendments to the Senate bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two as to this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. It is the enlarged homestead bill. It is a Senate bill, was amended by the House, and went to conference. The conference report came to the House, and there was an objection to the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the difference between the Senate and the House?

Mr. MONDELL. The principal difference between the Senate and the House is an amendment on which the Senate insisted that we provide for a certain class of homestead in this bill in territory to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

The House objected to that amendment, and I will say to the gentleman that the conferees on the part of the House were not favorable to that amendment; but the Senate having agreed to all of the other amendments of the House, we felt that it was necessary to come to the House upon their insistence and present that amendment. We now ask to go into conference and further insist upon the bill as the House passed it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When the Senate put that amendment on the bill did the House agree to it?

Mr. MONDELL. The House refused to agree to the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Refused on your motion?

Mr. MONDELL. It did.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What reason did the Senate give for wanting to tack an amendment onto your bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that it was a Senate bill, and the House committee amended the Senate bill by striking out this particular provision, as well as a number of others; but in conference the Senate conferees insisted upon this particular provision.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, after you get into conference are you going to agree to the Senate proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. As one of the conferees, if appointed, it is my intention that we shall not come back unless we have the bill as the House passed it. We intend to stand by the decision of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Is this the homestead bill to increase the quantity of land of each homesteader in certain of the States and Territories?

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. KEIFER. From 160 acres to 320 acres?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the House, after debate, voted to pass this bill, over my protest, and later the House refused to agree to the conference report, and there it stands. The bill proposes to increase the size of homesteads from 160 to 320 acres, and do other things. I am opposed to the bill and report. I have been one of the conferees, I believe, twice. As a conferee, of course I had to sign the conference report, but I am not going to do it any more, opposing the bill and report as I do. I do not think as it stands it should become law. The House has passed on it deliberately, refused to approve the report, and it and the bill are now on the Speaker's table. There are other land matters that ought to be considered this session. There is business other than land matters that ought to be considered, and I do not think we should take so much time going back into conference on a matter that the House has deliberately refused to agree to, when I do not believe the House will ever agree to the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming will please give attention to the Chair.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have been in conference with the gentleman from Wyoming——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee please suspend for a moment? The Chair asks the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming. The Clerk will read the following indorsement.

The Clerk read as follows:

On Saturday, May 23, Mr. MONDELL moved to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the bill S. 6155. After debate, a second being ordered, the House refused to agree to the conference report by a vote of 150 to 100.

The SPEAKER. Now, it seems that the Senate agreed to the conference report. The House refused to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report. Now, that is not equivalent to a rejection of the conference report.

The House merely refused to suspend the rules and agree to it; so that it seems that the conference report is still pending and awaiting action of the House. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that he withdraw the motion already made and dispose of the conference report. The question would be on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The House has refused to agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The House refused to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

Mr. MONDELL. That vote, however, Mr. Speaker, very clearly indicated the views of the House on the subject, and I was of the opinion that the motion I made was in order, to wit, to go into conference on the bill.

The SPEAKER. But the House has not as yet disposed of the conference report. The House can do it, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. MONDELL. The House refused to agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. But the motion at the last session was to suspend the rules. Now, the House refused to suspend the rules, and the conference report is still before the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I move that the House disagree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, it is in order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. I now move that the House further insist on its amendments to the Senate bill, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House further insist on its amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MONDELL, Mr. VOLSTEAD, and Mr. ROBINSON.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 22879) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved January 23, 1908.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of St. Louis shall have authority to construct the bridge mentioned in the act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved January 23, 1908, under and subject to the limitations and restrictions mentioned in the act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved June 25, 1906, if the actual construction of the bridge therein authorized shall be commenced within one year from the approval of this act and completed within three years from same date.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, in line 8, strike out the word "eighteen" and insert the word "nineteen."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PENAL CODE.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11701, the codification of the penal code.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] it occurs to me that those who are opposed to it have misinterpreted its scope and purpose and have wandered a good ways from the real merits of the amendment. It is insisted that in the exchanges, so called—misnamed, in my opinion—there are many transactions in cotton futures that are entirely legitimate. It is urged that the spinners go upon the floor of the cotton exchange in New York, or through the members of that exchange, buy future contracts against cotton which they have actually contracted for, and that such transactions are entirely legitimate and are advantageous and should not be prevented. I call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the language of the amendment, which does not in any way attempt to hamper any legitimate transaction upon this so-called "cotton exchange."

The amendment is not what I would have it, and it does not go as far, in my opinion, as it should go. I would greatly prefer the bill which was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], but this will at any rate forecast the opinion of Congress on the subject. Like the old fellow who entered his horse in the race, and, when reminded that he had no chance to win, said:

I know I ain't, but I want them durn fellows to understand that I'm agin 'em.

That, at least, will be the effect of this amendment. It is a mistake to say that this amendment will interfere with legitimate investment in cotton.

Listen to it—

That no letter, etc., containing any advertisement, etc., of any contract which is made for future delivery of any product or products of the soil, etc., without agreeing and intending that the article, etc., shall be actually delivered or received in kind, etc., shall be carried in the mails.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, what does that language refer to, the letter, account, or newspaper? Read it and tell us to what it refers.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It refers to any letter, postal card, or any printed matter that can be sent through the mail that relates to the sale or contract for the purchase of futures in cotton—to those contracts where there is no intention on the part of the parties to deliver the cotton sold.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How would it be possible for the Postmaster-General to determine whether a letter containing a record of the sale of a future delivery was intended by the parties to that contract to be delivered?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There are a great many crimes provided for on the statute book the essence of which is the intent of the party. It is a question of administration of the law; a question of proof. The facts in the case will be submitted to the proper authorities and they will render their judgment on those facts.

[The time of Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted five minutes more.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Suppose this amendment should become a law and on the following day the New York Sun was to publish in its record a stock transaction of the sale of 500 bales of cotton for future delivery, as a part of its news item. Would it not be guilty, under this section, unless it went to the party and ascertained whether it was the intention of the party to deliver and the intent of the other party to accept the goods?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not know whether it would or not.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will read the bill, he will see that it would be.

Mr. GARRETT. Then, that will not hurt any legitimate business.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The effect of it will be to close the newspapers absolutely to publishing any of the records of stock transactions on the Stock Exchange of New York. It is perfectly apparent, I think, without any argument, that no newspaper is going to take the risk of being haled into the criminal court because it may publish a transaction that it does not know anything about.

Mr. GARRETT. How far would that go toward stopping the dealings in futures?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I want to know whether the gentleman intends that all publications of stock reports are to be excluded because this does it at once?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, let me proceed with the argument that I was making. This colloquy between my friends is interesting, but it is coming out of my time. There is no objection on the part of those who produce cotton—and I refer to no other kind of futures, because I understand nothing about them—to having a man invest in that cotton, because we all understand perfectly well that investment tends to buoy the price of any article, but transactions upon the New York Cotton Exchange are not investments in cotton; they are investments in future contracts; they are investments in fluctuations. Investment in cotton tends to the betterment of the cotton trade, to buoy the prices. Investments in fluctuations tend to increase fluctuations. For instance, about three years ago, in the month of February, as I remember, the fluctuations on the New York Cotton Exchange in July cotton varied more than $20 a bale in one month's time.

I have many constituents who produce 1,000 bales of cotton annually. Here is a fluctuation of $20,000 in the value of the product of their farms on the New York Cotton Exchange in one month. Does anybody believe that makes for the orderly conduct of a great business? Does anybody believe that that promotes the cotton industry? Does anybody believe that it has any effect except to either depress abnormally or to advance abnormally the price of a product in which the producer and the consumer and the spinner are equally interested, and whether it goes up or down injures one or the other? The president of the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association, Mr. MacColl, in his testimony before a committee of this House, has said that there are thousands and thousands—I quote his language—of spinners in New England who never go on the cotton exchange, who never purchase these future contracts, and that in his opinion this future dealing has resulted in tremendous evil—and I again quote his language—to the cotton industry of this country. That is the testimony of President MacColl, of the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association, and it is the opinion of all the associations of cotton producers in the South.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. My inquiry was, will this amendment accomplish the gentleman's purpose, and is it not very much broader in its terms than the accomplishment of that purpose?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This amendment, as I stated before, does not go as far as I wish it did go. I would very much prefer the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], but this amendment is a long step in the right direction, and I hope it will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Let me finish my reference to Mr. MACCOLL's statement. Every man who defends this so-called cotton exchange tells of the necessity it is to the spinners. The case is stated in this way: A cotton spinner having some goods to be delivered in October buys 1,000 bales of October futures. When October comes he calls for the cotton, and if it is not forthcoming he sells his futures and buys the cotton from some one who can deliver it. Is that not a perfectly legitimate transaction? So much for the theory, Mr. Chairman, but what of the facts? If a spinner in England wants to buy cotton he can purchase it on the Liverpool Cotton Exchange, because that is, in fact, what it purports to be—a cotton exchange. But New York has no cotton exchange which in the remotest degree deserves to be so called. It is not operated for the purpose or in the expectation that it will in any way facilitate or promote the exchange of cotton. No man who desires to invest in cotton would think of going to the New York Cotton Exchange. Buy cotton for future delivery as you may, but if you should ever do the unexpected and freakish thing of demanding the delivery of the cotton so contracted for the rules of this exchange, in relation to which your contract must be construed, are purposely drawn so as to make your demand ridiculous. They keep on hand for the purpose some hundred and fifty thousand bales of dog-tail, unmerchantable cotton which they tender to you and which under their rules you must accept. You buy 1,000 bales at 10 cents. You want the cotton. For that reason you went to a cotton exchange. Instead you are offered the cash. You do not want cash, you want cotton. You are thereupon advised that under the rules of the exchange they will deliver you 1,000 bales of their worthless dog tails and pay you 3 or 4 cents differential in cash. Now, why should a spinner or anybody else who wanted cotton—not contracts, not margins, not fluctuations, but cotton—either for consumption or for investment, why should he go to the New York Cotton Exchange, where he knows in advance that he can not get cotton? Here is what Mr. MacColl says about this future business, speaking for the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association, of which he is president. He was before the Committee on Agriculture, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] was interrogating him—

Mr. SIMS. I would like to have you define what you mean by the term "speculation."

Mr. MACCOLL. I think that it is very well understood that there is a large number of people connected with the speculation in cotton, raising and depressing the price.

Mr. SIMS. Professional operators?

Mr. MACCOLL. Yes.

Again, he says:

Mr. MCCOLL. My opinion is that the spinners of this country have used the future market to a very small extent. Lately they have been forced to use it more, but they have not used it to any large extent in years gone by.

Now, listen to this:

There are thousands and thousands of manufacturers who have never bought a bale of futures.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that the speculators are divided into bulls and bears and that the effect of their operations is nil?

Mr. MACCOLL. If there is no evil in it, it is not worth while for us to waste time about it. We think it has been a tremendous evil in the last three or four years.

And so, Mr. Chairman, we have the manufacturers, who consume the cotton, and the planters, who produce it, both denouncing the business of this sham exchange; both believing, as they may well believe, that its operations are inimical to the real legitimate cotton business of the country.

We produce about twelve or thirteen million bales of cotton annually, and they sell about 100,000,000 bales on this so-called "cotton exchange." There is a saloon in my town called the "Cotton Exchange," and that name indicates with as much accuracy the character of the business there conducted as it does in the great metropolitan city above the door of this cotton humbug. Cotton is one of the great staple products of this country. The business prosperity of one-fourth of the States of this Union is predicated upon it. Our planters produce some twelve or thirteen million bales annually, and they would be the last to do anything to hamper or to discourage investment in it.

The more who enter the market to buy cotton the better for the planter—but buying cotton and buying futures are two very different things. One is the product of the soil, the reward of labor and of honest enterprise. The other is the product of the imagination, and no man can profit in it except his neighbor suffer equal loss. If you purchase futures and win a thousand dollars, it follows of course that the man who sold you must lose a thousand dollars. That is not enterprise; it is not industry; it adds nothing to the sum total of the country's wealth; it is, Mr. Chairman, without intending to be offensive, and with perfect respect for these gentlemen who engage in it—it is gambling—and gambling in that which does not belong to them.

On the other hand, the planter may sell his crop to the spinner at a price that yields him a fair return for his labor, and still the spinner's investment may be an entirely satisfactory one to him. It is never contemplated in any legitimate trade that neither party can profit unless the other lose. On the contrary, both should and usually do gain by the transaction.

The planter produces a thousand bales of cotton, and of course desires to secure the highest possible price for it. The spinner desires to purchase that cotton at as low a price as possible. It is entirely proper, entirely praiseworthy if another party who is in no way connected with the manufacture of cotton buys this thousand bales from the planter, hoping that he may subsequently sell it to the spinner at a profit. That is investment in cotton, and, to my mind, it is immaterial whether he pays part cash or all cash or no cash. Now, note the difference: Two gentlemen on the New York Cotton Exchange who never saw a bale of cotton observe these negotiations and one bets that the price of cotton will go up and the other that it will go down, and both set about to organize their forces to turn the market. To this end false reports are circulated, combinations are entered into, and all the machinery known to intrigue and cunning is set in motion to force the price of cotton either up or down—to the confusion, to the dismay, and sometimes to the ruin of the men engaged in the real cotton business. This is investment in fluctuations—and how that business flourishes! In February, 1904, July cotton on the New York Cotton Exchange fluctuated from 17.55 to 13.02—$20 a bale in a single month—and when July came cotton sold at 10.18, a difference of $37.50 a bale.

How much cotton passes through this cotton exchange? I have no figures before me for the year just ended, but I find in a speech delivered on this floor last spring by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] the figures for some previous years which will answer my purpose just as well. I quote the figures furnished by the gentleman from Tennessee with very much confidence, Mr. Chairman. I always follow his lead with satisfaction and with assurance, because I know he is always informed, always accurate, always honest, and therefore always right. New Orleans received 2,296,971 bales last year, and had 31,964 remaining on hand at the close of the season; Galveston received 3,891,695 bales, and had 30,820 on hand; Savannah received 1,668,633, and had 8,593 on hand; while New York, whose cotton exchange sold 90,000,000 bales, received 23,108 bales, and had left over 169,975.

Phantom cotton, spook cotton, cotton that never was and never will be! An inexhaustible supply against an inexhaustible demand—as long as Mr. Sully can stand on his feet and say, "I buy," and Mr. Brown can muster the strength to say, "I sell." One million, ten million, fifty million bales! In the meantime the planter who has cotton to sell, and the manufacturer who desires to purchase it must stand by in confusion until one of these worthies is "forced to the wall." The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee simply says to these "investors," "You shall not use the mails of the United States to carry on any such business," and I believe that ought to be the law.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment offered is to prevent the transmission through the mails of all communications relating to the gambling in futures where the object is to make a fictitious sale. It is true that the amendment does not go far enough; but as we are now dealing with the question as to what class of matter shall go through the United States mails, it is for us to decide the question at issue as presented. This is both a moral and economic question. The Congress of the United States has rarely decided a great moral question wrong. Congress passed a law forbidding lottery matter from being transmitted through the mails, and the lottery business in this country was killed.

Allusion was made on the floor of this House yesterday to the Louisiana State Lottery. After four years of bloody strife between the two sections of this country, when business was demoralized in the South, a horde of adventurers flocked like vultures to our beautiful Southland. All kinds of pillage and plunder were engaged in. During the reconstruction period laws were enacted which were abhorred by the moral element of our people.

During this period the Louisiana State Lottery flourished. It was the most demoralizing institution ever protected by the laws of any country. The clerk in the store would rifle the cash drawer of the merchant, the servant would abstract from the cash which was to purchase provisions from the market, the confidential secretary and cashier would pilfer from his employer to get funds to purchase lottery tickets, in the hope of drawing a capital prize. At last the virtue and intelligence of the people became aroused. The question as to whether the charter of the lottery company should be renewed was submitted to the people of the State of Louisiana. The lottery company offered to pay $1,000,000 a year for the renewal of its charter; but the proposition was rejected and was voted down by the people by an overwhelming majority.

Within the five minutes' time allotted to me under the rules of this discussion it is not possible to properly present the question before the House; but I wish to state that beside the Louisiana State Lottery and this question, the lottery pales into insignificance.

The gambling in futures is just as seductive to the adventurous and reckless as the lottery was; but with the lottery, when the money was put in it was spent, there was only a financial loss. Each one buying a ticket lost $1 if it was a monthly drawing and $10 if an annual drawing, and had one chance in a hundred to draw a prize. But in stock gambling the rights and interests of the great toiling masses are involved and hazarded without their volition and positively against their consent.

Dog-tail cotton is put up as a standard of value in the New York Cotton Exchange, and the speculators bet whether it will go high or low at a certain period. Twelve million bales of cotton are raised and 100,000,000 bales are sold annually. Cotton is worth ordinarily $50 a bale, and it only requires $1 a bale to buy cotton on the future market.

Any unreliable, impecunious person who can raise $100 can buy $5,000 worth of cotton, with the only risk of losing the $100 if the price of cotton falls.

If a man should buy real estate worth $50 an acre and put up $1 an acre on his purchase, the man who sold him the real estate could take it back, if it was not paid for, by repaying back the $1 per acre. The buyer and the seller would be made whole. But in cotton-future dealing the most that could be required would be to produce the dogtail cotton, if it was a New York contract, and even this is not required.

This cotton-future buying is gambling pure and simple and does give and is intended to give a fictitious value to one of our staple agricultural products.

What is said with reference to cotton applies to other commodities which are usually manipulated by the bucket shops.

During the session of the last Congress, when the lamented General Meyer, from New Orleans, La., rose upon this floor and stated that the New Orleans Cotton Exchange courted the investigation which was then demanded, we were met with objections from New York, just as we are now. It is to be regretted that the investigation which was provided for did not result in more substantial good. It was to be hoped that, after the facts as set forth in the report were made public, the fraud order would be issued preventing the use of the mails, as was requested; but it was not done, and it now devolves upon this House to determine whether this tardy act of justice shall be longer delayed.

The situation has become so intolerable that even the governor of the State of New York on the 14th instant appointed a committee of nine—

To inquire into the facts surrounding the business of exchanges in New York and to suggest what changes, if any, are advisable in the laws of the State bearing upon speculation in securities and commodities; or relating to the protection of investors; or with regard to the instrumentalities and organizations used in dealing in securities and commodities which are the subject of speculation.

They will find that some of the New York railroads are capitalized at $200,000 per mile and that the average capitalization of all the railroads of the country is about $70,000 per mile, while many of them are not worth one-fifth of that amount. But when the stocks and bonds are sold at the exchanges they are sold on the basis of their capitalization. They will find a similar condition of affairs in oil stock, steel, coal, copper, and other commodities controlled by the speculators. But when it comes to agricultural commodities we find them using dog-tail cotton as a standard of values.

This stock jobbery is gambling in its most pernicious form, as it corners the market of the commodity of the producer who earns his living by the sweat of his brow and forces him to pay tribute to the sharper and the manipulator, who, instead of being a boon, is an incubus upon society.

I have noted with sorrow the fortunes bankrupted and the homes made desolate by the machinations of these wily schemers, and while I do not speak from experience, as I have never taken part in a game of chance, I know that if this amendment is adopted it will bring happiness to many a saddened household.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I stated that I believed the cotton exchange of New York was willing and anxious to be investigated at the time the Burleson resolution was before the House.

Mr. WATKINS. I remember the gentleman from New York just at that time in the discussion made the remark that the organization of which Harvey Jordan was chairman was as much a gambling concern as the New York Cotton Exchange was.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. I said that organization, like one somewhat similar, was engaged in a movement to restrict the crop to be planted in cotton in order to bull the price, and should be investigated just the same as exchanges against which the producers were making complaints.

Mr. WATKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the governor of the State of New York day before yesterday made an appointment of nine members of a committee for the purpose——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, as we are pressed for time, I ask for the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD and desire to include in my remarks the object and purpose of this appointment made by the governor of New York day before yesterday—the governor of the State which the gentleman has the honor of representing.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the House for a short time while I undertake to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. In his defense of the New York Cotton Exchange, an exchange that is sucking the very lifeblood of the cotton producers of the United States, he said the sale of 100,000,000 bales of cotton in one season was easily explained; that it was like the sale of real estate—that one lot would be sold many times on the same day. Mr. Chairman, let me show you the fallacy of his argument. It is admitted that the New York Cotton Exchange in one season sells a hundred million bales of fictitious stuff that it pleases to call "cotton;" this, too, when the entire cotton crop of the United States is only about 12,000,000 bales.

When a lot of land is sold, it may change hands 1,000 times in a week, but it is the same lot, and you are not selling a thousand lots when you have only one. A perfect chain of title operates from the man who first bought to the man who last owned the piece of land, and the delivery of the title is a delivery of property. How different is this speculation in cotton futures! We grow about 12,000,000 bales, and yet the New York Exchange puts into competition with this real cotton 100,000,000 bales in a season, with never more than 100,000 bales in the city of New York, and I dare say that there is not a hundred thousand bales there to-day. These gamblers are selling something that is not in existence, and they are bringing this fictitious stuff into competition with real cotton and are thereby working great injury to the honest toiler who produces the cotton. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. I wish the gentleman would explain how it is that the transactions of the New York Cotton Exchange affect the price of cotton. I have been endeavoring to get some explanation of that and I have been unable to do so.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will reply briefly to the gentleman. It affects it in this way: The members of the exchange offer for sale and sell something that they call cotton; no delivery is made, their sales do not in any way aid the producer, because no demand is made on him for real cotton, and real cotton does not figure in the exchange transactions. One gang will bet that the price of cotton will go up and the other gang will bet that the price will go down, and the price that they fix upon the fictitious stuff becomes the price of the real cotton, and the producer is robbed annually of millions of dollars. It is simply gambling, and the men who want cheap cotton join forces with the bears, and these forces united constitute a greater power than their competitors, the bulls, and the price of cotton goes down and down without regard to the law of supply and demand. And yet, Mr. Chairman, some of the gentlemen tell us that the gamblers' exchange is necessary to the cotton business and is the friend of the producer. Is the lion the friend of the lamb, and does his existence promote the happiness and well-being of the lamb? If so, the gambling exchange is necessary to the happiness and well-being of the cotton producer. The exchange, as conducted to-day, is a stupendous vampire sucking the industrial lifeblood of the cotton producer. I have seen the gamblers, in their effort to reduce the price of cotton, quote the price at 9 cents when spot cotton was actually selling for 10 cents, and I have seen the bears whip the bulls and reduce the price of cotton 1½ cents per pound in a single day. Let me read to the gentleman from New York what the Atlanta Journal has to say about the fluctuations in the price of cotton, caused by the present conduct of the cotton exchange. It says:

The fluctuations in the market come without apparent cause; it is not a question of increase or decrease in the crop or in the world's call for the raw or manufactured product; it is purely a question of strength between two sets of gamblers lined up in opposition each to the other; it is an out and out subversion of the law of supply and demand.

And another has said:

All the producer asks is the elimination of this artificial element on the trade and the restoration of the natural law of supply and demand. It is not an unreasonable demand; its fulfillment will affect no legitimate interest. It is purely a question of justice to the producer of the greatest of American crops. That justice may be tardy, but it is decreed and its coming is inevitable.

And another has truly said:

But the opportunities that have been given to men who neither grow nor spin cotton, nor are legitimately interested in its distribution, to bring about ruinous fluctuations in the price of raw materials is an evil more prejudicial to the cotton business than any other which now exists.

Again he says:

The great cotton industry does not exist for the cotton exchange. The cotton exchanges should only be allowed to exist in so far as they contribute to the welfare of the legitimate business of growing and manufacturing cotton.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. HEFLIN. In a moment. I would ask the gentleman from New York, Suppose some man on the stock exchange, who had no right to do so, should rise in his place and offer to sell Pennsylvania Railroad stock. Immediately those holding the stock would cry out against it. They would say that to put it on the market would seriously affect the stock, and it is not for sale at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. What would be the situation then?

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman please, that is just what is done. He is perfectly free to do that if he can; but if he tries to get the stock at a lower price than he should pay, the people who have it will not sell. There are always two conflicting forces—those who want the stock to go higher and those who want it to go lower.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman is mistaken in a part of his contention; but suppose it is done as he says it is, and that is, if the railroad stock is sought at a lower price than the owners think it should bring, they will not sell. The gentleman has made clear the point that I was trying to make, and that is that the real owners of the railroad stock will not sell unless they desire to do so. But how is the owner of cotton treated? He is not consulted at all about the hundred million bales of fictitious stuff sold in the New York Exchange annually. He is forced, under the law, to stand and see ruinous prices produced by the gamblers in the exchange, who never tilled the soil or saw a cotton field. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. Is it not a fact that the Pennsylvania Railroad stock is sold on these exchanges by men who do not hold a dollar's worth of stock, the same as cotton?

Mr. HEFLIN. No, sir; except through some broker or member authorized to sell.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, does the gentleman believe that Mr. McCarra is anxious to have the price of cotton go up to have spot cotton increased?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not think he would like to see it go up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He wants to see it depressed, does he not?

Mr. HEFLIN. As a rule the spinner wants to buy the raw material as cheaply as he can, and the producer wants to buy the finished product as cheaply as he can; but he has no gambling exchange to help him in this matter.

We want a fair price for our cotton, but on account of the conduct of the exchanges we are not receiving it now.

Mr. Chairman, the producer must be relieved of the outrageous and destructive competition to which he is now subjected by the speculator who offers upon the exchange a fictitious product which he can not and does not intend to deliver. These gambling exchanges buy and sell a fictitious product, and the price they fix determines the price of the entire cotton crop. This obnoxious method deprives the farmer of his right to a voice in fixing the price of this important product—a right which is accorded other producers.

The South wants an honest market and such prices as will follow the unhampered operation of the law of supply and demand. We want to return to the principle which is as old as commercial intercourse itself, and that is this: That the seller shall be compelled in good faith to deliver the commodities sold at the time and place specified in the contract. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. I should like to have five minutes, Mr. Chairman, in which to close debate in favor of the amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this question close within fifteen minutes. I want to reserve ten minutes of that time to myself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Make it twenty minutes and give these gentlemen five minutes apiece.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Then, I move that the debate close in twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] moves that the debate close within twenty minutes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close with twenty minutes' debate on a side.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that debate be closed in forty minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

[Mr. FERRIS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN].

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Chairman, very much has been spoken here about stock gambling. I believe we are all against stock gambling, but the great question is, What effect will this amendment have, if it passes, in doing away with it?

I think it is one of the most crude, unfinished bills that has ever been before this House, and no lawyer or judge will be able to say what it really means. Simmer it right down as far as newspapers are concerned, and you will find that it reads, in substance, that no newspaper shall be carried in the mails containing any notice or advertisement of any contract made for future delivery of anything whatsoever, without agreeing and intending that the article shall be actually delivered. Now, do you want the newspapers to be mind readers and find out whether the goods that are offered for future delivery are really intended for delivery, or do you want them to receive a sworn agreement that those articles shall be delivered? I think, as the amendment now reads, it certainly ought not to pass.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Yes.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. If the gentleman will read a little further along, he will see that the amendment provides that if any newspaper "knowingly" publishes, and so forth. The word "knowingly" means willfully. Evidently the gentleman did not read it all.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. It is such a complicated amendment that it is almost impossible to determine what it does mean.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman ought to read the amendment before he tries to criticise it.

[Mr. CRAIG addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. There are seventeen minutes on one side and ten on the other.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state at the outset that with much of what has been said in behalf of this amendment, or at least of the principle that it embodies, I am in hearty accord. I do not question the statement, made by practically all the gentlemen who support it, that the business of these exchanges is largely gambling. I believe that is true. More than that, I believe it is gambling with loaded dice. [Applause.] But while I concede all that, nevertheless I venture to hope that this committee before adopting a proposal so serious will consider very carefully the magnitude of the interests affected by it. For my part I can not help feeling that an attempt to deal with this evil by such a procedure as is contemplated in the amendment now before us can result in nothing but failure, confusion, and a worse condition than that which we are all anxious to remedy.

First of all let me answer the suggestion of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, that a proposal to codify the penal laws is a proper occasion for the adoption of such a measure as this. Gentlemen must realize that measures for the codification of laws have been peculiar to the history of no one country. They are inseparable from the experience of every civilized people. The necessities of civilized existence require the adoption of laws at one time which subsequent conditions render inexpedient or insupportable. Frequently it happens that the same subject-matter will cause the passage of laws differing radically from each other owing to varying phases of popular feeling. Still more frequently it happens that laws passed to meet certain conditions become obsolete as these conditions themselves become modified or wholly changed. Finally, these contradictory, obsolete, or superfluous statutes become so numerous that the whole body of the law is rendered unwieldy if not entirely inoperative. To meet such a state of affairs every civilized society is driven sometime or other to codification, that provisions enacted under different conditions and found by subsequent experience to be wholly inconsistent with each other may be harmonized, and that there may be expunged altogether from the written law provisions no longer applicable to actual conditions. But codification never contemplates the adoption of an entirely new measure radically changing the existing law and incorporating into a political system an entirely new method of industrial or commercial procedure.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I have but very little time.

Mr. GARRETT. Has the gentleman offered no amendment to this bill embodying new law?

Mr. COCKRAN. No, sir; not one. I was very careful in every amendment that I offered and in every suggestion that I made while this bill was under discussion a year ago to explain that I was governed by the same conception of what is proper to be done or attempted in a codification of laws that I have just endeavored to describe and define. Codifications are not new elements in the experience of civilized nations, and therefore I think everyone here realizes precisely what a codification is intended to accomplish.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCKRAN. I can not. I have very little time, and I want to go at once to the substance of the measure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I only wanted to ask the gentleman if he had introduced any bill on this subject.

Mr. COCKRAN. No, sir; I have not, and I will tell the gentleman why. I am glad the gentleman has put the question. I have not introduced a bill to deal with this subject because I do not believe myself capable of framing a measure that would deal with it effectively. I am as eager as he is to stop gambling on stock exchanges or cotton exchanges or any other exchange, but I have grave doubt as to how that evil can be prevented without working greater evil to the body politic. Every gentleman that has spoken on this subject has conceded that we must differentiate between speculation, which is not only legitimate but is laudable, and gambling, which is vicious and ought to be prevented. We are all agreed on that. Will any gentleman undertake to say that he is competent now to define the difference between gambling and speculation, and define it so clearly that every person who reads the statute embodying his views will be able to differentiate between one and the other?

No one would venture to suggest that speculation be prohibited. To arrest speculation would be to suspend industry. Every step in productive energy is speculative.

Speculation is the motive power of all commercial enterprise. It underlies every form of productive activity. Every revolution of the wheels in a factory, every order placed with a merchant, is prompted by some conception of the future demand for some particular commodity. The farmer, when he decides what seed he will plant in a field, is speculating on the future demand for the crop it will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that debate is limited to forty minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That does not prevent the committee from extending the gentleman's time by unanimous consent. I ask that the request be submitted, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue, without taking it out of the time allotted, for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to suggest that when we wanted to give an hour's time to the debate the gentleman from Pennsylvania opposed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague from New York may be extended for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, many transactions in the stock exchanges, we all know, are pure bets upon the future course of prices. In many instances these ventures are practically nothing more than bets upon the course which some individual intends to pursue with reference to a corporation that he controls. Under the stimulus of such betting the prices of many stocks fluctuate widely. For instance, let us take one, the stock of the Union Pacific Railway. The price of that stock soared wonderfully on the stock exchange little more than a year ago owing to heavy speculations as to what Mr. Harriman intended to do with respect to dividends. If he concluded to increase the rate of dividends, the price of the stock would in all human probability increase. If he decided to let the rate of dividends stand, the price of stock would inevitably decline. Now, Mr. Harriman all along knew perfectly what he intended to do. Mr. Harriman, therefore, could bet upon the course of that stock with an absolute certainty of success, just as the gambler with loaded dice can bet with certainty of winning. In the ultimate analysis there is no difference between the speculator betting on inside information and the gambler betting with loaded dice, yet one is protected by the law, the other condemned by the law. Why do men load dice? They do not load them merely to effect a combination between lead and ivory. They load dice so as to be certain before every throw whether a three or a four or a five will turn up, and then bet on an outcome which is never doubtful. Mr. Harriman, or any other man, in exclusive possession of knowledge that must affect the price of any stock and who speculates in that stock is gambling with loaded dice. Whether he distributes this peculiar knowledge among his friends or keeps it to himself is simply a question whether the gambling with loaded dice is done by a coterie or by a single individual. The character of the transaction is the same. And whether it be carried on by one man or a group of men, it remains a vicious thing.

More than that, it is prosecuted on such an extended scale that not merely does it affect the morals of a community, it seriously affects the business life of the country. Stock transactions form the basis of many, perhaps most, bank loans. Gambling is never a satisfactory basis for business enterprise—least of all is it a safe basis for the operation of banking institutions, around whose solvency our whole industrial life revolves.

But how are we going to deal with this evil—an evil which I admit, is of the most portentous character, one that imperatively demands treatment immediate and effective, but treatment, remember, that touches a most delicate subject. Gentlemen must realize that this evil, grave though it be, is the product of a movement entirely wholesome—decisively beneficent. Stock gambling is, so to speak, a by-product of legitimate speculation. The problem before this House and before this country is to end stock gambling without arresting legitimate speculation. For if in prohibiting this occasional gambling by a few you arrest the great tide of speculation, you do what? Why, you restrain, embarrass, perhaps prohibit, that general cooperation in production which is the very essence of civilization. You prevent my money and yours from seeking legitimate investment in all the various fields of industry, where while earning for you and for me a profit higher than we could earn ourselves at the same time it operates to stimulate the activities of labor and to increase the volume of production on every side. The Representative who would risk disturbing seriously this delicate, complex machinery of production by a sweeping amendment to existing law, thrown into a proceeding looking merely to codification, and who in an attempt to stop gambling, which everyone holds vicious, would imperil all speculation, which everyone holds healthful, is exactly in the attitude of a man who, anxious to protect the friends of a bank, would blow up the bank building because he feared that the money drawer might possibly be pilfered by some individual employee.

The magnitude of this evil I do not seek in the least to belittle. Gentlemen, I think, will bear me witness that I have endeavored to describe it in terms of absolute candor. But while realizing the importance—the pressing importance—of dealing with it, I believe it would be better ten thousand times that we submit for a while to occasional violations of right by a few men who abuse their control of great corporations and great financial resources to engage in speculations which are in no way less reprehensible than gambling with loaded dice, rather than attempt to correct this wrong by hasty and ill-considered legislation, which must almost inevitably arrest the entire progress of our industrial life, impair our capacity for production, make it doubtful whether any newspaper can safely circulate the slightest information concerning transactions on these exchanges, where the values of all products of human industry are fixed and determined. I believe firmly that with proper consideration in this body a law may be framed which can effect these two results, without which legislation on this subject would be of doubtful value and, I believe, in the last degree dangerous. First, define accurately the distinction between speculation and gambling, and then while leaving legitimate speculation the widest field, prohibit gambling by penalties that will be effective. Let the law officer know just what is gambling that should be prevented and what is speculation that should be encouraged. Let the citizen be apprised of what constitutes an offense that the law condemns and what is a legitimate enterprise that the law sanctions. Let the newspaper know what transactions they can report as wholesome features of our productive life, and what they must suppress as mere encouragements to gambling. When that is done, when these distinctions are made clear so that everyone can ascertain them, then nobody will vote more cheerfully than I in favor of legislation that will prevent gambling, just as I am protesting now against legislation that may interfere with industry. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I am as heartily in sympathy with the motives behind this amendment as any gentleman upon this floor. If we could by our vote in this House enact a law to prevent the purchase of stocks, cotton, corn, or wheat, or the sale by any person of property which he does not own for purely gambling purposes upon the market, I should vote in favor of it. The question with me is whether this bill accomplishes the purpose for which it was offered, or whether it would not do things directly opposite to the wishes of those who favor it. For instance, it would be impossible under the plain terms of this proposed amendment for any newspaper to publish any account of any stock transaction or give the daily quotations and transactions of the stock, cotton, or grain exchanges, because, while if all that has been stated here is true, many, perhaps most, of those transactions do not involve actual transfers of ownership or possession, it would not be possible for that newspaper to know which of those transactions were genuine, or whether, in any case, the parties intended that there should be an actual delivery of the stocks, bonds, grain, or cotton purporting to have been the subject of the contract.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have only three minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Then the newspaper would not be guilty.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then nobody would be guilty, for if anybody is included here by name it is the newspapers. They dare not even publish an account, they dare not under the terms of this proposed amendment even refer to stock gambling. That is under the very terms of this amendment—

Or publication of any kind or character referring or relating to what is commonly called "dealing in futures, stock gambling," etc.

Under the very terms of the amendment a newspaper could not lawfully go through the mails if it contained the usual reports of the transactions of the exchanges which are considered among the most important items of news. When two people make a contract which on its face contemplates an actual purchase, sale, and delivery of an article of legitimate commerce, how can a newspaper or any third party determine that the real intention was something else? The entire amendment reads thus:

That no letter, postal card, circular, book, newspaper, pamphlet, writing, or other publication containing any advertisement, notice, account, or record of any contract which is made for future delivery of any product or products of the soil, minerals, meats, stocks, bonds, or anything whatsoever, tangible or intangible, without agreeing and intending that the article or stock or asset which is the subject of such contract shall be actually delivered or received in kind, or relating to any contract wherein any party thereto in whose behalf such contract is made acquires the right or privilege to demand in the future the acceptance or delivery of such article or asset without being thereby obligated to deliver or accept same; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, money order, or other instrument of payment or obligation for any such contract or transaction hereinabove defined; and no notice, letter, writing, or publication of any kind or character referring or relating to what is commonly called "dealing in futures," "stock gambling," or other names or terms intended to be understood as relating to such contracts as are herein described, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier.

That whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than two years, and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed.

Now, the question with me is whether the amendment—which I do not believe was drawn by the gentleman who introduced it; he is skilled in the use of language to accomplish his purpose—the question with me is whether this amendment if put upon the statute books would not nullify itself; would not do more of injury to the cotton planter, the sugar grower, the producers of mineral, the owners of stocks and bonds, than it would do of good to anybody.

The very quotations upon which the planter relies to know what his crop is worth or what he can obtain for it, and thus be protected against sharpers, could not be published in safety by any newspaper in the United States if this amendment were enacted into law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman let me ask a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can not we adopt this amendment and then further perfect the amendment here in the House or in conference, instead of having no law upon the subject?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not believe in legislating or adopting a bad measure or one that does not accomplish what we desire in the hope that it will be amended somewhere else. The better way when we adopt a measure is to have it as nearly right as possible in the first instance.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Could it not be done both ways? Is it not a perfectly legitimate method of doing it and is it not done on a great many bills?

Mr. OLMSTED. It is legitimate to adopt an amendment which does not accomplish your purpose if you choose to legislate in that way, but it is very bad legislation. When we are by legislation creating new statutory offenses affecting a wide range of subjects, very important interests, and many thousands of people who may become liable to its heavy penalties of fine and imprisonment, it is particularly important that we legislate with such care and precision that there can be no doubt of our intention and no doubt that the enactment will effectuate that intention.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the committee we are proceeding under the five-minute rule, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been yielded time——

Mr. OLMSTED. I will cease at the end of three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already consumed four minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then I withdraw one minute of my remarks.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, what time is there at the disposal of those who favor the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes for those who favor the amendment and eight minutes for those opposed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in favor of this amendment, but I do not want to take up the time which legitimately belongs to the gentleman from Tennessee, the author of the amendment. I can not express what I desire to say in less than three or four minutes.

Mr. GARRETT and others. Go ahead.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my gratitude to the gentleman from Tennessee in permitting me to speak in his time. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], and I agree very heartily with him on the subject of gambling in stocks and grain, and I think with him that it is a great evil. The facts are, I know of no greater evil in America than the evil of gambling in stocks and grain, and I believe that some time Congress will legislate so as to destroy that evil or in a large degree minimize the effect of the evil, and I think that is a legitimate work for us to do at this time.

It is argued by gentlemen here that this matter ought to be referred to a committee and carefully considered by a committee of this House. That means no legislation of any kind. It means that the evil shall continue to exist.

The matter was called to the attention of the House of Representatives some months ago by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] when he first gave notice of his amendment, and he even gave notice of the language of the amendment, so that this Committee on Revision of the Laws and every Member of this House has had full opportunity to examine this amendment for the purpose of determining whether it would accomplish the purpose sought to be accomplished by the gentleman from Tennessee. And it is a remarkable thing, it seems to me, that able lawyers on the floor of this House, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], if you please, who is an able lawyer, and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws [Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania], that they did not give to this amendment the careful consideration it ought to have had and at this time be ready to present to the House an amendment to that amendment that would accomplish the purpose intended by the gentleman from Tennessee. [Applause.] And if that had been done, we could have legislated without doing any injustice to any legitimate enterprise whatever.

I do not believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will accomplish all that he hopes for, but I think it is an amendment in the right direction, and when adopted by this House it goes to a conference committee, and that conference committee, consisting of able lawyers, as it will, one of them being the chairman of this Committee on Revision, and in whose legal ability I have the greatest confidence, will report back to this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol a law that, in my judgment, will do away with gambling in stocks and grain, and in that way we will get the legislation the country demands and that it is entitled to at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will not hastily adopt this amendment. In the State of New York we raise $5,000,000 of our state taxes by tax of transfers of stock. Most of that comes from the transfers that take place on the stock exchanges. Our governor has appointed a commission to find out what the evils are and recommend legislation necessary to weed them out. I do not understand that Governor Hughes regards the mass of transactions from which the State raises such a large revenue as illegitimate. All he aims at are the evils. He insists, as in so many matters he has wisely and courageously insisted, that before legislation there shall be deliberate study. That is what we should have here. There is disagreement on the most elemental facts. Germany legislated on the subject twelve years ago, but has changed its legislation recently. Its experience should be studied. I mention these matters in order to call to the attention of the committee how important it is to go slowly and how important it is that this matter should first be thoroughly investigated.

Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, so that I may have printed in the RECORD an article from yesterday's New York Times, giving Governor Hughes's letter appointing the New York commission, and also three articles by Professor Emery, of Yale, two of them dealing with the German law attempting to regulate speculation on exchanges and the other dealing with the general question of regulating such speculation.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is stock gambling tolerated in New York because the State gets $5,000,000 out of it yearly?

Mr. PARSONS. No; it is not; but there are kinds of stock speculation in New York that are considered legitimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. I desire to print the following from the New York Times of December 15, 1908:

HUGHES INQUIRY INTO WALL STREET—COMMITTEE OF NINE BANKERS, LAWYERS, ECONOMISTS TO INVESTIGATE EXCHANGES—WELL-KNOWN NEW YORKERS—EX-MAYOR SCHIEREN, PROFESSOR CLARK, S. H. ORDWAY, HORACE WHITE AMONG THOSE ON THE COMMISSION.

ALBANY, December 14, 1908.

Governor Hughes to-night announced the appointment of a committee of the State bearing upon speculation in securities and commodities, or quire into the facts surrounding the business of exchanges in New York and to suggest "what changes, if any, are advisable in the laws of the State bearing upon speculation in securities and commodities, or relating to the protection of investors, or with regard to the instrumentalities and organizations used in dealing in securities and commodities which are the subject of speculation."

The committee named includes Horace White, author and editor; Charles A. Schieren, merchant, formerly mayor of Brooklyn; David Leventritt, former justice of the supreme court; Clark Williams, state superintendent of banking; John R. Clark, professor of political economy in Columbia University; Willard V. King, banker, president Columbia Trust Company; Samuel H. Ordway, lawyer, New York; Edward D. Page, of New York, member of the firm of Faulkner, Page & Co.; and Charles Sprague Smith, director of the People's Institute, all of New York City.

The commission is to serve without compensation, and it is understood that all have signified their willingness to act. The commission has been asked by the governor to report as early as practicable.

THE GOVERNOR'S LETTER.

To each member the governor to-night sent the following letter:

"GENTLEMEN: At the last session of the legislature I recommended that provision should be made for suitable inquiry into the facts relating to speculation in securities and commodities, with the view of ascertaining the manner in which illegitimate transactions might be prevented and legitimate business safeguarded.

"As I stated in accepting renomination, I had in mind in making this recommendation such an expert inquiry as was made into banking conditions, the result of which was the passage of highly beneficial measures. In this Commonwealth, the vast commercial and financial transactions of which represent the activities of the entire country, it is of the utmost importance that legislation affecting business and exchange should be the result of deliberate study and that we should neither threaten business stability by ill-considered measures nor, on the other hand, invite agitation or impair confidence by ignoring abuses and by failing to provide suitable correction.

"It is with this view that I request you to act as a committee for the purpose of collating facts, receiving suggestions, and making such recommendations as may seem to you fitting with regard to the following question:

"What changes, if any, are advisable in the laws of the State bearing upon speculation in securities and commodities or relating to the protection of investors, or with regard to the instrumentalities and organizations used in dealing in securities and commodities which are the subject of speculation?

"WITHOUT COMPENSATION.

"It is not my intention to limit you in the consideration of any phase of the matters submitted, and I am confident that your carefully formed opinions, being those of men known for their interest in public questions and their acquaintance with affairs, and accredited to the community by high reputation, will be of the greatest value.

"I must ask this public service without offer of compensation or indemnity for expense, as I have no authority to subject the State to any obligation in connection with your appointment. But I know that your generous action in serving the community will be highly appreciated and will afford another and most welcome illustration of the public spirit of our citizens.

"I shall be glad to receive your report at as early a date as you may find practicable. I have the honor to remain,

"Very respectfully, yours,

"CHARLES E. HUGHES."

Governor Hughes recommended to the extraordinary session of the legislature this year that a similar commission be appointed, but the legislative committee to which the recommendation was referred failed to report it.

In his speech of acceptance, to which he refers in his letter, Governor Hughes said, in part:

"I have no sympathy with fanciful schemes for the regulation of business with arbitrary legislation. But it is important to the maintenance of business stability and to the prosperity of honest enterprise that suitable opportunity should be afforded for the proper dealing with all questions that are presented, to the end that such remedies may be provided as, after competent consideration, may be found advisable."

APPENDIX A.

THE RESULTS OF THE GERMAN EXCHANGE ACT OF 1896.

The German exchange act has now been in operation for more than a year. It is the most elaborate attempt ever made to regulate speculative markets, and as such is worthy of careful attention, especially in view of the demand for similar legislation in other countries. In the United States the "antioption" movement has temporarily subsided, but its reappearance is probably only a matter of time. In France a similar agitation is making itself felt, and the ministry has already promised a commission of inquiry; while it is not improbable that a similar course will be followed in England. In these countries the agitation seems chiefly confined to speculation in food products. In Germany, however, the movement has been more far-reaching. The new act is not a single experiment, but a group of series of experiments which include at one point or another pretty much all the methods that have been suggested for the control of speculation. In considering the results of the act, I shall not attempt a systematic treatment of its main provisions,[a] but shall deal chiefly with the later developments in its operation, with special reference to the difference between German and American conditions.

1. GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE EXCHANGE ACT.

The immediate events that led to the enactment of the law were certain disastrous banking failures in Berlin in 1891, which involved excessive speculation and fraudulent treatment of clients. In 1892 a commission of inquiry was appointed by the Imperial Government, and was intrusted with a consideration of the whole subject of the Bourse. Despite objections that might be urged regarding the make-up of the commission and its methods of procedure, its report is an authoritative and impartial utterance, and the accompanying evidence constitutes the most valuable collection of information to be found regarding exchange business in Germany. The printed evidence covers 3,600 folio columns, and includes the testimony of bankers, brokers, merchants, millers, manufacturers, lawyers, economists, and journalists. Besides this mass of material, there is a considerable body of special reports and statistical collections.

The report of the commission appeared in 1893 and at once aroused great interest. Having been intrusted with the duty of making practical suggestions, to serve as a basis of legislation, the commission did not hesitate to recommend decided reforms. In its report the German readiness to provide government regulation and control was evident. Its suggestions were greeted by the opponents of the exchange as half-hearted and by its friends as useless interference. The attitude of the commission was, however, one of comparative moderation. Its recommendations aimed at a better organization and control of the exchanges, a diminution of speculation on the part of outsiders, and a greater protection to the investor against the issuing of worthless securities. The commission recognized, however, that the development of a large body of dealings for future delivery is a normal incident of commercial evolution, that such dealings are necessary in modern commerce and that it is impossible to distinguish the desirable from the undesirable trading by any outward forms.

The relation of the act, as passed, to the proposals of the commission shows what tendencies furnished the real strength of the movement toward "reform." The bill as it came from the Bundesrat was more radical than that prepared by the commission, and made clear that the Government was prepared to take steps toward meeting the demands of the agrarians. Even these concessions, however, were useless to put off the war of extermination that was demanded by this party. In the Reichstag the agrarians made an onslaught on the speculative system, and forced the Government to accept proposals far more radical than it had been prepared to advocate. The chief of these was the prohibition of future trading in grain and in "industrial" securities. For the time being these radical clauses overshadowed in importance the rest of the act, which in many respects embodied the ideas of the commission. In fact, the original measure, which was chiefly devoted to the conditions of the stock exchange and was the result of an agitation caused by stock speculation, became in process of enactment more especially an attack on the produce exchange. The agrarians cared much less about the stock exchange than about speculation in food products. It was this form of speculation which they believed to be especially injurious to their own interests. Their arguments were identical in thought and language with those of the antioptionists in this country.

The act was passed June 22, 1896, but, with the exception of a few clauses, was not to go into effect until January 1, 1897. The act, however, was not complete in itself, but was to be supplemented by orders and rules issued by the different bodies which, under the act, were to exercise control over the exchanges. It is necessary, then, in the first place, to consider the manner in which the new act divided this authority.[a]

[a] This has already been done for American readers in the admirable article by Dr. Ernst Loeb in the Quarterly Journal of Economics for July, 1897, to which reference may be made for details of the act not considered in this place.

The primary authority over the exchanges was placed in the hands of the state governments. These might, however, transfer the immediate supervision and control of each exchange to the chamber of commerce [b] of the municipality where the exchange is situated. In any State where a minister of trade existed it was he who was to exercise the authority of the state government under the act, and this authority was to be in no way diminished on account of the part played by the local chambers of commerce.

The state government, among other things, was required to issue or approve an ordinance for each exchange, and to appoint a commissioner for each exchange, who, as the representative of the government on the spot, was to be charged with the general duty of seeing that the law was enforced. By the side of this general power given to the state governments reserve powers of importance were vested in the Bundesrat, which was empowered to exempt any exchange from the provisions regarding a state commissioner and from those regarding price quotations, and to regulate "future" dealings in particular commodities and the admission of securities to trading. To represent the Bundesrat in these matters an exchange commission was provided, to consist of at least 30 members, elected in part from nominations by the chambers of commerce and in part representing agricultural and industrial interests. There was furthermore required for each exchange a commission charged solely with the question of admission of securities to trading. The organization of this commission was left by the act to be determined by the different exchange ordinances, and in Berlin the exchange ordinance turned the matter over to the Aeltesten-Kollegium.[c]

With this system it might be supposed that the exchanges would be left to elect their own officials without interference. But under the act the state governments have the right to provide for the representation of agricultural interests in the governing boards of produce exchanges. The Prussian Government saw fit to exercise this right, and the ordinance for Berlin required that 5 representatives of agriculture and 2 representatives of the milling business should be appointed by the ministers of agriculture and of trade and industry, respectively. As will be explained later, the secession of the produce dealers from the Berlin Exchange interrupted the carrying out of the project, but it may be well to illustrate the system of control by considering the situation in Berlin as it would have been if acquiescence had been complete.

The Berlin Exchange is a single exchange with two departments, one for stocks and one for produce, and its governing board is a single body. Under the provisions of the act this body would have consisted of 39 members—15 elected by the members of the exchange who deal in securities, 9 by those who deal in produce, and 8 by the Aeltesten-Kollegium, with 5 appointed by the minister of agriculture and 2 by the minister of trade. The exchange is, by its ancient organization, under the supervision of Aeltesten-Kollegium; by the late act it comes also under the supervision of the government commissioner, and is subject to the orders issued by the minister of trade. It is at the same time under the eye of the exchange commission representing the Bundesrat, while the Bundesrat may at any time issue orders affecting its most vital interests. Furthermore, all questions as to the admission of securities are subject to the judgment of still another separate commission. This extraordinary multiplication of authorities has been carried even further by an order issued by the Prussian minister giving certain functions to still other officials—for Berlin to the president of the province of Brandenburg and the city of Berlin, and for other exchanges to the presidents of the provinces in which they are situated.

In accordance with the division of control, certain ordinances supplementary to the original act have been issued by the different authorities. The Bundesrat isued two in 1896, regarding the quotation of prices and the listing of securities; and the state governments have at various times issued both general orders and special regulations for individual exchanges.[d] Thus, the minister of trade and industry issued an order for Prussia November 14, 1896, and one for Berlin December 4; while very substantial changes were made by him in the regular rules of the Berlin Exchange, approved December 23, 1896. In this connection may be mentioned the enactment of a new law (the so-called Depotgesetz) in July, 1896, concerning the deposit of securities with brokers or bankers. This was passed as supplementary to the exchange act.

II. THE EFFECT OF THE ACT ON THE PRODUCE EXCHANGE.

The drastic measures against the produce exchange naturally absorbed public attention at the time when the law went into force, and it will be well to trace first the course of events that followed the prohibition of futures in grain.

Section 48 of the law defines "exchange dealings for future delivery" (Börsentermingeschäfte) in the case of securities or commodities as purchases for delivery at a certain fixed time or within a fixed period of time, when made according to trade rules adopted by the governing board of the exchange for future trading, and when for such transactions on the exchange in question there is an official determination of prices. And section 50 prohibits exchange dealings for future delivery in securities of mining and manufacturing companies and in grain and mill products. It also empowers the Bundesrat to forbid such dealings in any other commodity. What the outcome of this prohibition would be was a matter of much discussion and anxious anticipation. That the grain dealers would at once give up future trading was not to be expected, and the feeling was general that a new organization for informal trading would be formed.

Before the act went into effect a new question came into prominence. As already said, the Prussian Government, acting under authority given in the act, decided to appoint representatives of agriculture and of the milling business to serve on the governing boards of the exchanges of Prussia. About the same time charges were publicly made by some of the Agrarians that false quotations for grain had been deliberately put out by certain exchanges, notably that of Halle. Such attacks on their honesty, combined with the determination of the Government to force outsiders into the governing boards, roused the produce dealers to a high pitch of anger. They felt that the Government was taking an attitude of hostile suspicion and was appointing spies to insure honesty on the part of their elected officials. Up to this time the smaller exchanges had not looked with entire disfavor on the prohibition of futures, which it was hoped would drive some business from Berlin to the local "spot markets." These events, however, brought them into line in opposition to the Government, and in the last days of December two or three of the smaller exchanges (Halle, Mannheim, and others), rather than comply with the law, gave up their organization. In Berlin the action of the dealers was somewhat dramatic. Elections of the members of the governing board were to come off in December. The Aeltesten-Kollegium and the stock exchange each duly elected its quota to the board, but the produce dealers refused to elect. This left the produce exchange without organization. On the 1st day of January the grain dealers left the exchange building in a body, giving up all membership and privileges in the exchange, and proceeded to take up their quarters on the opposite corner in a variety theater known as the "Fairy Palace." This exodus was ostensibly a protest against the attempt to force the representatives of agricultural interests upon their board. On the following day the stock exchange adjourned to pay their seceding brethren a visit and to cheer heartily their course of action. Thus the appointees of the ministers were left without any presiding board to belong to and without anybody to preside over.

The new body organized in the Fairy Palace as the "Free Association of the Produce Exchange," which was an already existing body widened to meet the new exigencies. A reorganization soon took place, and the name "Free Association of Produce and Grain Dealers of Berlin" was adopted in order to avoid altogether the word "exchange." A vigorous press discussion followed these events. The exchange party talked much of injured honor and the maintenance of their independence.

The agrarian press held up the refusal of the grain dealers to admit agriculturists to their board as proof that they were afraid to have their true methods brought to light. In this discussion the main point, the question of future dealings, was temporarily obscured. Could such dealings be legally continued or not? It is not unfair to say that the agitation over the appointments to the boards was to some extent a mere pretext of the grain dealers for their secession, which was really carried out to enable them to continue their future dealings. The grain dealers maintained that their new dealings did not fall under the prohibition of the act. That prohibition was only of "exchange dealing for future delivery;" while their trading, it was argued, did not constitute "exchange dealing." They were not organized as an exchange, there was no official determination of prices, and no use was made of the trade rules of the produce exchange. In fact, the printed contract forms adopted by the new organization contained the express declaration that the established usages of the grain trade were not there in force. All business was done under the general commercial law governing delivery on contracts. The established methods of settlement and clearing and other similar conveniences were given up, and the business reverted to the methods employed before a long period of speculation had perfected the market machinery. The object of this action was, of course, to avoid the prohibition as it was worded in the act.

Under these conditions business went merrily on. There had been stagnation and uncertainty at the close of the year, but, the Rubicon once crossed, courage somewhat revived. The press reporters were present to secure the (nonofficial) quotations for publication, and for some months business was carried on much as before. Grain was still bought and sold for future delivery, and the short sale was as common as ever. Yet some influence of the act was felt. In the first place, the cruder methods of business were naturally a check to expansion, while the uncertain nature of the whole proceeding kept outsiders from coming into the market as freely as before. The falling off in the amount of trade, however, was not greater than might occur through other causes during dull times.

In the meantime the first excitement quieted down, and a more moderate discussion was carried on in the press and by pamphlets as to the legality of the business of the fairy palace. There was apparently ample ground for difference of opinion. The question turned upon the definition of an "exchange." If the association of the fairy palace was not an exchange, its business did not fall within the prohibiting clause. Any definition of the word exchange was purposely omitted from the act, a fact that was at once recognized as furnishing plentiful material for a legal contest.[a] In any case the question was a purely legal one That from the standpoint of economics the association constituted a grain exchange, was beyond question. But under German law an exchange had been supposed to exist under the approval and the control of the Government, to have a semipublic nature and to perform a public function in providing an official determination and quotation of prices.

Under these uncertain conditions the Government remained inactive. The agrarian press grew increasingly bitter in its criticism of the Government's unwillingness to enforce the law, and the opposition press delighted in goading them. In the Prussian Landtag the matter came to discussion several times, and the minister of trade was attacked equally by the two factions—by the Liberals for the surrender of the Government to the agrarians in the first instance and by the agrarians for the minister's failure to "enforce the law" and suppress the new organization. It was roundly asserted by the agrarians that, if the new organization were continued, the law would prove a farce. In March the government commissioner on the Berlin exchange advised the Government that the Fairy Palace Association was an exchange,

[a] The principle of external control of exchanges was well established before the passage of this act. There was, however, no uniformity in the application of the principle; and outside of Prussia the control was indeed slight, resting, as a rule, in the hands of a semipublic organization of the merchant body in each locality. In Prussia, in addition to local control, the exchanges were all under the authority of the minister of trade. One of the good features of the act was the establishment of a uniform rule for the whole Empire regarding the organization of the exchanges, though this uniformity may be partly counteracted by varying action on the part of local authorities.

[b] In every German city of any importance the merchant class is organized in a formal body, which receives special recognition from the Government. The nature of these organizations is fixed by a general statute, which grants them certain privileges and imposes upon them certain duties of control in mercantile matters. They are thus at once organs of trade interests, and to some degree organs of public administration. These organizations are usually known as "chambers of commerce." (Handelskammern). The Berlin body is called the "Merchant Corporation," and its authority is exercised through its Aeltesten-Kollegium, or College of Elders, to which frequent reference is made below.

[c] Supra, p. 286, note.

[d] In general, it may be said that the Prussian Government has gone beyond the governments of the other States in the severity of its regulations.

[a] For reasons not very easy to understand, the definition of "exchange trading," given in section 48, was not regarded as of importance in deciding the question at issue.

but it was not till May that the Government moved. In reply to an interpellation by the agrarians, the minister of trade (von Brefeld) had expressed the uncertainty of the Government on the point involved, and had finally announced his intention of taking such steps as would bring it into the courts for decision. Accordingly, May 11 the grain dealers were notified that, as the Government deemed their organization an exchange, they were required by the act of 1896 to send in a set of regulations for the approval of the minister. This the grain dealers of course refused to do. Accordingly, June 11 the police authorities called upon them to give up at once their meetings in the Fairy Palace, on penalty of being put out by force. This at once put a stop to all trading. At last the full force of the law seemed about to be felt.[a] All speculation in grain for the moment ceased. What was to be the outcome?

The immediate results were probably not so startling as had been anticipated. In the first place, the agrarians quickly found a new bugbear. It would be interesting to know what were the feelings of the minister of trade toward these gentlemen when, only two weeks after the closing of the Fairy Palace, he was again interpellated (June 25) regarding his failure to carry out the provisions of the act. The complaint this time was regarding the so-called "Early Exchange" (Frühbörse). This organization consisted of numerous small dealers who met regularly before the opening of the exchange, in a special room of the exchange building, for cash transactions in many kinds of produce. Being chiefly devoted to small dealings on a cash basis, it offered no parallel to the "curb trading" in Chicago, which takes place before exchange hours. It was claimed, however, that the grain dealers had now come into this market and were using it for speculation. The minister explained the real nature of the market and declined to satisfy the agrarian demands by suppressing it as an exchange. The incident is of importance only as showing the temper of the agrarians, and because they have since repeatedly held up the Frühbörse as a proof of the half-hearted way in which the law has been enforced. As to the facts in the case, though some speculative trading may now take place in this market, it is of a "professional" nature and of little economic importance. The organization fulfills none of the functions of an exchange.

With the cessation of speculation the grain business did not cease. Crops are grown and are consumed, whatever the particular machinery of the market. But the grain business entered upon a new phase, owing to the lack of a central quotation of prices. The exchange had furnished a market in which prices for all periods of delivery were fixed, and the local markets throughout Germany had naturally followed the central market in complete dependence. The exchange traders had loudly maintained that the abolishment of the central market would disorganize trade and make all grain business uncertain, because of diverse and fluctuating prices. The agrarians had replied that they wished to make the local markets independent of Berlin speculation and so to fix prices according to "actual" conditions of supply and demand. They certainly accomplished their purpose, so far as destroying the predominance of the Berlin market was concerned. With the closing of the Fairy Palace the grain trade was deprived of all daily quotations that were of value for the whole country. The inconvenience of such a condition to the trading class is evident. The farmers themselves, moreover, soon felt the inconvenience. As the new crops began to come into the market they were left to their own judgment regarding prices. There was no longer a daily exchange price by which to check all offers.

The local higgling of producer and trader had full play. The course of events since then has been largely a series of efforts to replace the quotations of the speculative market by central quotations of another sort. In some cases local trade bodies, in other cases the local governments, have taken the initiative. Several flour exchanges (Mehlbörsen) have been organized in order to secure the publication of regular quotations. Similar action has been taken by two or three bakers' associations. The most important local price lists published have been those of the local boards of agriculture (landwirthschaftskammern) in different districts of Prussia.[b] The crying need, however, has been that of a central price list to serve as a guide to the whole country. It has even been advocated in all seriousness that the Government should establish a bureau to collect local quotations from all quarters, and, on the basis of these, periodically to fix arbitrary central prices. The uselessness of such a policy is apparent.

A central bureau of the boards of agriculture was, however, finally established during the autumn of 1897—not, to be sure, to fix prices arbitrarily, but to collect and publish uniformly the prices registered in actual transactions at many points. The bureau issues, accordingly, a price list of three parts. First are given numberless quotations of local "spot" transactions over the whole Kingdom. This formidable array of figures is of little value. The prices in each place are determined by local conditions, fluctuate in arbitrary fashion, and indicate nothing to outsiders. They vary according to differences in quality (which are many) and according to the special terms of delivery in each contract. The second set of figures consists of prices at a few important markets—Berlin, Stettin, Danzig, and others. These are quotations of actual sales and of definitely fixed qualities, and are meant in some way to supply the place of the earlier exchange quotations. For this purpose they are utterly inadequate. Prices, to be of more than local importance, must represent more than local conditions. In the prices of the speculative market all the changing conditions of demand and supply throughout the world are registered. It is the mistake of the agrarians, and apparently also of the Government, to imagine that they can abolish the exchange and yet maintain such quotations. A demand has been made by the agrarian press and by boards of agriculture for the establishment of a large "spot" market in Berlin, and the Government has declared its intention[c] to do all in its power to secure such an organization. But markets are not made by governmental decrees, nor can a mere traders' market have the influence of an exchange. Without speculation Berlin prices depend primarily on the conditions at that point alone and furnish no such guidance for other places as do prices determined by world conditions. Berlin prices now are only prices at which transactions have been made. They were formerly prices at which sales might be made. That is, the farmer or trader in the country was formerly sure of a market at the quoted price. He had only to telegraph his broker and the thing was done. The difference between these two kinds of prices can scarcely be exaggerated.

The third set of prices published by the central bureau consists of foreign prices. This list can be of only slight importance to the average producer. It is significant, however, of an important effect of the prohibition of future trading, namely, the increased importance to the grain trade of the foreign markets. Formerly the foreign influence acted directly on the Berlin Exchange, which set the price for the whole country. Besides the more careful observation of foreign prices, much German trade has now gone directly to foreign exchanges. In the first place, professional speculators, shut out at Berlin, transferred their operations, to a considerable extent, to Amsterdam and Budapest, and even, it is asserted, to Chicago. These dealings can be carried on by telegraph from Berlin; the foreign brokers, however, get the commissions.

In the next place, the large "hedging" transactions of grain dealers are now placed on foreign exchanges. Grain dealers everywhere now insure the greater part of their purchases by counter transactions on a speculative board. It was predicted that the new act would interfere with this process; but it may be said of the prohibition of futures, as it has been shrewdly said of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, that its success in one State is possible only through its nonexistence in some neighboring State. The effect of this prohibition on the German grain trade would be far more disastrous were it not for the exchanges of Holland and Hungary. It is probable, however, that traders insure less regularly than when the Berlin market existed—that is, in many cases they carry their own risks. The margin between the buying price and the market price is, of course, widened to meet this risk. Under these conditions the advantages are all with the big grain houses. The small dealer finds his position precarious. It is asserted, and the statement is a priori reasonable, that the disturbed conditions make both dealers and millers more cautious in buying, and that this caution reacts to the disadvantage of the producer.

A very interesting question is that as to the general effect of a suppression of short selling on prices. The cry of the antioptionist in all countries is that short selling is the chief cause of low prices. It was thought in some quarters that the German act would furnish a test of this theory, but unfortunately little light has been shed on the question. The prohibition of futures came at a time of rising prices throughout the world, but, in view of the activity of all exchanges outside of Germany, this rise can in no way be attributed to German legislation. The Liberal press in Berlin repeatedly declares that German prices have lagged far behind prices in foreign markets, and attributes this to the absence of the speculative demand at home. The agrarians, however, maintain that German prices are always lower than foreign prices, but that the difference is less now than under the old system. In view of the great differences in grades of grain in the different markets, a difference exaggerated by the present conditions in Germany, any comparison of home and foreign prices is likely to prove misleading. It would be unwise to draw any general conclusions as to the relation between short selling and prices.

The existing conditions are satisfactory to neither side in the dispute. Several efforts have, therefore, been made toward a reconciliation. On July 10 there was a conference of representatives of the grain dealers, of the Merchant Corporation of Berlin and of the Brandenburg Board of Agriculture. Neither side was willing to make any concession. Again in November the minister of trade called a conference, in which, however, the grain dealers refused to participate. At this conference none of the Agrarians expressed a desire to have the act repealed, though there was criticism enough of the existing situation. As beneficial results of the act they claim that grain gambling by outsiders has diminished, that increased importance has been given to local "spot" markets and that prices are determined by local supply and demand, rather than by speculation. Their approval of the last feature, however, seems largely theoretical; for every attempt is being made to secure quotations of a more general value than those of the local markets. The Agrarians, in fact, while not satisfied, are not able (or willing) to trace any of their trouble to the provisions of the law. Their ire, then, is directed to what they deem the half-hearted action of the Government.

In the first place, they complain that a more reliable determination of prices has not been introduced, and demand a compulsory declaration to some authorized body of every sale of grain, stating in each case the quality, conditions of transfer, and price. One can hardly believe that the Government will listen to a demand so antagonistic to private rights and so impossible of enforcement. Compulsory declaration (Declarationszwang) is, however, the slogan of the Agrarians in the press and in parliament; and one of their leaders, von Ploetz, has confidently predicted (in the Landtag, February 25, 1898) a majority for such a measure in the Reichstag.

Their other chief demand is the suppression of such speculation as still continues. Reference has already been made to the charges against the Early Exchange in this regard, but a word should be said of a new development in the same direction. At the time of the closing of the Fairy Palace it was declared that, if the dealers were not to be permitted to meet for their trading, they would still carry it on "from office to office" by the use of the telephone or otherwise. Under such a method anything approaching the free speculation of the open board would be impossible. But an ingenious scheme was devised. An unoccupied hospital was secured, and there the dealers established offices in the adjoining booths. In this close proximity, and with a constant running about in the corridors, they are able to carry on a considerable trade, and yet claim to be dealing, not on any board, but in their private offices. This seems to add the only element necessary to give to the whole proceeding the air of opera bouffe. This establishment arose in the early fall (1897), before the decision of the court was given regarding the closing of the Fairy Palace. If that decision is sustained on the appeal, this trading "from office to office" will be unnecessary. In the meantime it serves as a convenient point

[a] The later history of the police order closing the Fairy Palace is interesting. The Free Association entered complaint against the police authorities and the matter came before the administrative court (Bezirksausschuss) for adjudication. The arguments were such as suggested above. On November 20, 1897, the court gave its decision, to the effect that the Free Association did not constitute an exchange, and revoked the police order of May. The decision was based partly on technicalities of administrative law, partly on economic considerations. It is sufficient to note that great weight was given to the fact that no official quotation of prices had occurred under the Free Association and that the published prices had not been absolutely trustworthy. Thus again the official price list was emphasized as an important element in the legal conception of an exchange. The court further decided that, even if the Free Association had been an exchange, the police had no authority to close it. An appeal has been taken to the higher court (Oberverwaltungsgericht), and its decision is awaited with great interest. The grain dealers, however, have not yet seen fit to reestablish their former market.

[b] The Polizei-Praesidium of Brandenburg also issues a price list.

[c] Von Brefeld, in the Landtag, January 25, 1898.

of attack for the disappointed agrarians. The Government, however, declines to take any action in the matter till the final decision of the court fixes the legal position of such bodies. As a matter of fact, the establishment in question affords opportunity for the professional speculators to continue their business only on a small scale. It is far from supplying the place of an exchange or of the former assembly at the Fairy Palace. It has no controlling influence over prices and is of little importance in the real grain trade of the country. If, however, the appellate court decides in favor of the grain dealers, it may prove the starting point for the reestablishment of the speculative market.[a]

III. EFFECT OF THE ACT ON THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

Registration.—Before entering upon a discussion of the provisions of the act relating more specifically to the stock exchange it may be well to consider the fate of the so-called "exchange register." The commission of inquiry, in its report of 1893, advocated the public registration of all persons dealing in futures on the produce exchange. The main object of this provision was to check speculation among the vast body of ill-equipped outsiders, who, for the most part, speculate secretly, and would be very unwilling to have their neighbors and those with whom they have business relations know of their operations. It was thought that publicity would keep a majority of this element out of the market. A small registration fee was recommended, both as an additional deterrent and, at the same time, as a possible source of revenue. The commission, for various reasons, thought such a register should apply only to dealers in produce, but the Reichstag went further and provided a register for both the produce exchange and the stock exchange. Registration was not made obligatory, but it was enacted that a future contract between parties either of whom was not registered should not be valid or enforceable at law. It was further provided that, in the case of contracts between registered parties, neither party in default could plead an agreement of non-delivery in a defense of wager.[b]

At the last moment, after the provisions for registration had been agreed upon, the clause prohibiting all futures in grain was added to the act. Hence, in Berlin, the great grain market, the register for produce dealers was a complete dead letter. No one would register himself as carrying on an unlawful business.

In Hamburg, the center for transactions in coffee and sugar—commodities in which future trading is allowed—the result was slightly different. The Produce Clearing House refused to deal with persons not registered, and accordingly 92 firms, including the leading houses, registered. The advocates of the register, however, had meant to have it reach the large body of outsiders; the registration of commission houses was not regarded as of any importance. But the outside public in Hamburg did not register at all. The Berlin Stock Exchange register proved a like fiasco. In the first year only 60 names were enrolled, and of these 19 were not registered again (in November, 1897) for the second year. Only one name on the list was that of a private individual.[c]

The supporters of the idea of an exchange register—and they were many—were altogether at fault in attaching decisive importance to the legal validity of contracts in such a body as a stock exchange. What they failed to see was that fidelity in meeting engagements there is neither a matter of law nor even, as the brokers claimed, one of honor. It is a question of survival. Business can not continue without it; hence the slightest deviation finds prompt punishment from the exchange itself. In this regard an incident of the Hamburg Exchange is worth noting. In July, 1897, a produce dealer, having lost on a transaction, refused to make good the contract on the ground that he was not registered, and that therefore the contract was not binding. This was an isolated instance of what the framers of the law expected to prove common in case of nonregistration. But the law had also instituted an elaborate court of honor to act in matters of interest to the exchange. That body promptly met and expelled the offending member for dishonorable conduct. The episode has its amusing side, in that one article of the statute created a body which is evidently destined to make another article inoperative.[d]

Membership.—To the American observer the most interesting feature of the exchange organization in Germany is the combination of the elaborate external control described above with a comparatively open membership. The question of the regulation of membership has figured prominently in the discussion over reform. The new act, however, makes few changes in existing conditions. It leaves the regulation of admission to the rules of the particular exchange, specifying, however, certain classes to be excluded from admission in any case. The excluded classes are women, bankrupts, and offenders at law.[e] This restriction can hardly be called onerous. The rules of the Hamburg Exchange grant admission to "every respectable person of the male sex." Any stranger may go to the exchange and make such trades as his cash or credit permits. It is the great meeting place of dealers in all sorts of commodities—of brokers, bankers, shipowners, underwriters, and many others. An exporter receiving an order for a cargo of mixed goods for the Far East can contract for his various goods and for his ship, insure his cargo, and sell his bills, all on the same exchange.[a]

In Berlin admission to the exchange (including the right to transact business) is not entirely unrestricted, as in Hamburg, but still is very free. Not to enter into detail, it may be said that all members of the merchant corporation have a right to entrance cards without any payment and that any other business man of standing can receive a card on complying with certain formalities and paying a nominal fee.[b] Moreover, clerks in the employ of any person entitled to membership receive cards at the request of the employer, but can not trade on their own account.

During the discussion of reform measures before the passage of the act it was proposed in some quarters to elevate the general character of German exchanges by restricting the membership. The proposal, however, met great opposition, as tending to favor the wealthy firms at the expense of the small brokers and to increase the influence of the "money power."

Official quotations.—Much greater attention is paid on the Continent than in the United States to the question of an official quotation of prices. It has already been pointed out that an official determination of prices apparently forms a necessary part in the legal conception of an exchange. That the enormous transactions of the Chicago Board of Trade, for example, should be carried on with no authoritative regulation of the price list seems inexplicable to one accustomed only to the usages of German exchanges. There are, however, some advantages in the German method, and the control of quotations is, perhaps, especially important where the practice of the broker acting as a principal toward his customer is highly developed. This practice will be explained in another place.

It is unnecessary to describe in detail the method of determining and quoting prices.[c] The method formerly differed somewhat on the different exchanges. As a rule, however, the control of prices was in the hands of a special class of brokers. These were the "sworn brokers," a survival of the time when all brokers were public officials under oath. The regulation of prices had been regarded as so distinctly a function of the broker class that when the new class of "free brokers" began to increase in importance this regulation was still reserved to the "sworn brokers." The new act nominally puts an end to the existence of the "sworn broker," but at once reinstates him under a new name as a "quotation broker" (kursmakler). The members of this new class are officially appointed and are under oath.

The official price list is controlled nominally by a committee appointed by the directors of the exchange, but actually by the quotation brokers. In making up the prices these brokers are obliged to consider only the contracts they make themselves. Other transactions may be considered at the discretion of the governing board. The quotation brokers are divided into groups, each concerned with certain specified securities, and no one of them can buy or sell securities outside of his specialties.[d]

Under any conditions it might seem an imperfect method to leave the official price list to be made up from transactions which may represent only a fraction of the total dealings in a given security, for the quotation brokers are not likely to secure a preponderating share of the trade in competition with the private brokers. But to make matters worse, the new act itself, while establishing the class of quotation brokers in such an elaborate fashion, greatly interferes with the fulfillment of their function. This is one of its several similar inconsistencies. The act has increased in decided measure the volume of business done outside the exchanges, transfers being made in the banks themselves, and this has been partly at the expense of the quotation brokers. The more their business dwindles, however, the less adequate it is as a basis for the determination of official prices. This consideration introduces the broader question of the relations of the banks to the exchange and to their customers.

Banks and exchanges.—The great banking institutions in Germany stand in closer relation to the stock exchange than do banks in this country. This is largely due to their composite nature. A Berlin bank of the first rank, besides doing a regular deposit and discount business, deals "on 'change" on commission for a large body of clients, buys and sells great quantities of securities on its own account, underwrites and floats new issues, reorganizes old companies and promotes new ones, and may even buy up a company and carry on its business. It engages in every field of financial activity. A very large part of the commission business in the case of securities is in the hands of institutions of this nature. Consequently, the "stockbrokers," the firms doing merely a commission business "on 'change," play no such important rôle in Berlin as in New York. They are overshadowed by the banks.

According to German law, the broker has in many cases the right to act as principal. Article 376 of the commercial code reads:

"In case of a commission for the purchase or sale of commodities, bills, and securities that have a market or exchange price, the agent is authorized, when the principal has not otherwise ordered, himself to deliver as seller the goods which he was ordered to buy, or himself to take over as purchaser the goods which he was ordered to sell."

This right of entering into the transaction as principal (Selbsteintrittsrecht) in no way alters the agent's claim to commissions and [a] For lack of space it is impossible to discuss here the effect of the exchange act on the trade in other kinds of produce than grain and flour. The restrictions of the act, though not extending to a prohibition of futures, seem nevertheless to have cut into speculative dealings in coffee, sugar, and cotton, and thus also into trade in the "actual commodity." It is well known that the establishment of future trading in Havre in 1881 greatly increased the coffee business of that port at the expense of Hamburg. The latter city regained its position only by establishing a future trading system also. Now the report of the Hamburg produce clearing house (Waarenliquidationskasse) for 1897 asserts that in the first year of the new act both the real and the speculative coffee trade of Havre have greatly increased in proportion to that of Hamburg. The sugar trade is said to have suffered yet more.

[b] This clause was meant to simplify the legal status of contracts for future delivery in regard to the question of wager; but, if the considerable body of legal discussion over the exact meaning of this clause is any indication, the desired end can hardly be said to have been reached.

[c] Some hard feeling was caused by the decision of the leading banks (those constituting the so-called Stempel-Verein) to register. The great majority of the brokers were strongly opposed to any concession to the vexatious rule and felt bitter at the action of the banks. These, however, argued that the interests of their customers were too important to permit of any risks; a desire was manifested also to convince the Government that the haute banque was in all ways law abiding.

[d] For an account of the court of honor and its functions, see the article by Doctor Loeb cited above, p. 286, note.

[e] To be exact, the third class consists of those who have lost their honorary civil rights (ehrliche Bürgerrechte). This occurs only through one's conviction of some offense punishable by imprisonment, and not even in all such cases. Furthermore, these rights are generally lost only for a specified time, after which the offender may again be eligible for admission to the exchange.

[a] Evidently the Hamburg Exchange is something more than an exchange in the strict sense of the word. This openness to all business, however, has not proved compatible with a large speculative trade, and in recent years various associations have been formed of the dealers especially interested in coffee, or sugar, or cotton, or some other commodity. These associations hold separate meetings, where all dealings in futures take place, and outsiders can trade only through members of the association. Though admission to these associations is comparatively easy, they are a distinct beginning toward special exchanges with limited membership, similar to the American type.

[b] Compare this with the price of a "seat" on the New York Stock Exchange, ranging from $18,000 to $30,000.

[c] In the case of cash dealings on the Berlin Stock Exchange there is an official determination of prices, which is something very different from a mere registration of sales in open market. For this interesting process see Loeb, in the Jahrbücher für Nationalökonomie u. Statistik, 3d ser., Bd. xi; also references in the note at the end of the present article.

[d] It should be said that an official quotation is not obligatory. A security may be dealt in without being admitted to the official list. This, however, occurs rarely in the case of important securities.

costs. As an offset to such privileges, the agent (under the code) had only to show that his price was the market price at the moment of sale. The chances for unfair treatment of the client under these conditions are obvious. In case the bank or broker already held the securities, the highest price for the day could be regularly charged. In case he bought in the open market and the price rose during the day, he could claim that the original purchase was for his own account, and then turn the securities over to his client at the higher price, making the amount of the difference (the so-called "Schnitt") in addition to his commissions. Whatever the exact method adopted, the broker could evidently secure for himself all the advantages of fluctuations within the given time.

The new act attempts to make such action impossible. It does not change much the wording of the code, but adds certain restrictions to it. The clause above quoted remains the same, except that in the case of securities the broker can act as principal only when there is an officially determined price for the security in question. The provision that the price should be the market price at the time of the transaction is supplemented by a clause fixing this time as the moment when the notice of the transaction is sent to the principal. By fixing an exact moment as the time of the transaction, a definite price is established at which the transfer must be made, and a choice from all the prices of the day is no longer allowed the broker. In case of delay in giving notice, no price higher than the closing price may be charged; and, where the order specifies the price of a particular moment (opening price, closing price, etc.) the transfer must be made at that price. A provision of great theoretical importance is that, in case to carry out the order a transaction is entered into with a third party, the client shall be charged no price higher than that of the transaction in question. If, then, the client's securities are purchased in open market, the broker can not take advantage of a later change in price. Furthermore, where formerly, in absence of special notice, the assumption was that the agent was acting as principal, it is now provided that, unless the agent distinctly declares himself as the purchaser or seller, he is assumed by law to have made the transaction with a third party.

Closely connected with these provisions is the act of July 5, 1896, regulating the matter of securities deposited by customers. Formerly securities bought on margin and carried by the broker might be turned into the latter's general holdings and used by him to enlarge his own transactions. The customer had only (in practice) a general demand claim against his broker for a given quantity of the given securities. In this way it was possible for a broker on receiving a purchasing order to pretend to purchase, collect a carrying charge for securities which he did not hold, and use the "margins" of the customer for speculative purposes of his own. Certain cases of gross misuse of deposited securities seemed to make legislation imperative. The act of July 5 requires that securities held in trust shall be kept in distinct parcels, marked with the name of the owner, and used only on the owner's order.

This act and the provisions of the exchange act just considered were apparently wise measures for the control of unquestioned abuses. It is doubtful, however, whether the new legislation will have effects of great importance. In the first place, unscrupulous brokers can defy the law with little fear of detection. The provisions that control the broker in acting as principal will make his operations less easy, by fixing a definite price for his transaction with the customer; and, if there were only one customer to consider, the chances of fraud would be slight. The broker, however, is carrying out numerous orders at the same time, both selling and purchasing orders. To prove that any particular transaction on the exchange was in pursuance of any particular order is impossible; hence the price paid the third party can not control the transaction. In the same way, if notice is sent the customer before the close of business, it is impossible to show just what was the price at the moment of notice, which by law is the price to be charged. With the ceaseless variations of the market, the exact time of any quotation is hard to determine. So in various ways an unscrupulous broker still has opportunity to speculate at the risk of his clients. It is too early to say what the actual result of the new legislation will be. It is stated by some persons well qualified to judge that the restrictions of the law have been sufficient to stop the practice of making a Schnitt. If this is so, there is no certainty that the practice will not be renewed as soon as the first fear of the law wears off.

If we turn, in the next place, to the commission business of the large and honorable institutions, we find little change brought about by the new regulations, save perhaps a vexatious increase in bookkeeping. The regulations were in the main already followed by them in practice. In many cases the securities of customers were kept separately and used only in the owner's transactions. So, too, the banks, when acting as principals toward their clients, completed the transactions at a fair market price, without attempting to make "the turn of the market" at the client's cost. Such action was never regarded as honest by the best institutions. Nevertheless, the provisions of the law are evaded so far as possible, to insure against any possible contests with clients; and thus the fair dealing of the banks depends not at all on the law, but solely on their own integrity. The act regarding deposited securities forbids any waiver of its provisions, except by special agreement in the case of each separate deposit. Consequently, the banks have inserted in all blank forms of contract the printed proviso that the provisions of the act are waived for that contract. By this simple change in the printed blanks the act of July 5 has been made a dead letter. In the same way the clause establishing a presumption that a commission order has been carried out by contract with a third party, unless notice to the contrary is given in advance, is made inoperative. The clause can not, under the law, be directly waived, but the same thing is accomplished by a general statement from the bank to all customers that it in every case fulfills the order by acting as principal. This is made one of the trade rules (Geschäftsbedingungen) that every client must accept. In this way, so far as the legal nature of the transactions is concerned, every "commission order" is nothing but a contract of purchase or sale between the customer and the bank, both acting as principals. At law there is no "commission" about the business at all. There is, then, no longer any force to the provision regarding the price paid in the transaction with a third party, which was to control the price as between broker and client. The counter transactions made by the bank on the exchange are entirely distinct transactions, though of course determined in their amount and nature by their dealings (as principals) with their clients.

The final result is a curious one. The large banks receive large orders for the purchase and sale of securities, carry them out by themselves, selling to and buying from their customers at the market price, and in most cases make counter transactions on the exchange. This puts them into almost the same class as the London jobbers, and enables them to make a distinct jobbing profit. At the same time they pose as commission houses, and charge their customers with regular brokers' commissions and the "usual costs," such as interest and the stamp tax. If a customer puts in a buying order for the next "account," the bank, if it happens to own the securities, may transfer them to the customer, charge him with commission and "costs," charge him further for carrying the securities, and buy back the securities (perhaps at a profit) when he wishes to sell, again charging him with commission.

A very interesting result of these practices is the development of the banks as independent markets for securities. With the great number of their customers in this field, they naturally receive very many buying orders and selling orders that exactly correspond. By acting as principal in every case the bank can offset all such orders without dealing on the exchange at all. Further, the bank is probably an underwriter of several new issues and prepared to furnish these to all buyers. It can also use its own large holdings of securities in temporarily meeting buying orders for which there are no corresponding selling orders, or, in the opposite case, can add to its holdings without inconvenience. In this way an increasing volume of business is being done outside the exchange, and this is greatly stimulated by the restrictions the new legislation puts on exchange trading. The exchange in so far declines in importance, and the large banks, through whom all this business goes, become increasingly influential. The banks still have counter transactions of great extent to make in open market; but these, though determined by the orders received from customers, are also influenced by the operations of the banks themselves. The market becomes increasingly a bankers' market, and the influence of a large part of the outside public is felt only indirectly through them. The meaning of the reference above made to the small transactions that serve as a basis for the official quotations is now clearer. As the banks do not employ brokers to any great extent, their large transactions are perhaps not directly considered in making up the prices. The quotation brokers (and all private brokers, for that matter) complain bitterly of the falling off in their own business due to the large transfers which the banks make in themselves (in sich).

Admission of securities.—Closely connected with the questions involved in the above condition of affairs are the provisions of the new act regarding the admission of securities to exchange trading. These provisions are devised for the better protection of the public against unsound securities, with which the market is being constantly flooded. The first innovation is the provision prescribing for each exchange a commission on listings, one-half of which shall consist of members not entered in the stock-exchange register. The object in view was to have half the members of the commission disconnected with dealings in securities, and hence (presumably) more disinterested. Since the exchange register, however, has proved a farce, this object is not attained under the wording of the statute. It is the duty of this commission to demand from applicants for listing the information necessary to an intelligent opinion on the investment and to see that the facts are put at the disposal of the public. The commission is not supposed in any way to affirm the soundness of an undertaking by granting it a place on the list, but merely to secure an honest statement of conditions from which the investor may form his own judgment. The policy here involved has been the subject of much discussion since it was first taken up by the commission of 1893. Certain extremists advocated a government commission that should pass judgment on the desirability of investments offered to the public. It is not difficult to see the evils that would result from any such official recommendation. The action of even such a commission as is now provided is likely at times to prove misleading to the public.

The act provides for the issue of a prospectus by every applicant for listing, the character of which has been prescribed in minute detail by the Bundesrat in its order of December 11, 1896. A prospectus, as now issued, is a formidable document and fills a large amount of newspaper space. The public has, however, never been accustomed to pay much attention to such statements; and it is to be feared that the formidable dimensions of a prospectus under the new requirements will discourage independent investigation and will merely confirm the natural tendency of the outsiders to "follow their leader."

The protection of the public was further considered in increasing the responsibility of any house putting new securities on the market. Formerly the responsibility fell chiefly on the promoters who framed the prospectus. Now, in case of false statements or a suppression of facts, either purposely or through gross negligence, the underwriters who float the issue are jointly liable with the original promoters. In case of a fall in the price of the security (such fraud or negligence being proved), an action may be maintained against either party to recover the difference between the existing price and the price of the plaintiff's purchase or that at which the issue was first put on the market.

It is too early to tell what the results of these efforts at reform will be, but there is reason to hope that they will prove of real value. Though in some respects they impose vexatious requirements to little purpose, on the whole they constitute a distinct step in the right direction, and have received the support of not a few of those who strongly opposed the act as a whole.[a] The Liberal press is not prone to criticise the Government for undue leniency in enforcing any part of the law; but the action of the Prussian Government in exempting certain mortgage banks from the requirements regarding a prospectus (which under the act it is entitled to do) has called out severe criticism from this quarter.[b]

Another important clause in this part of the act provides that, in case of the transformation of an existing business into a stock company, its securities shall not be admitted to trading until it has been in business one year in its corporate form and has made public a statement for the year. This provision also was framed with a view to the protection of the investor, though it is hard to see why the formation of a stock company to carry on an established business should be more dangerous than the formation of such a company to begin a new business. The first result of this clause was great activity in the formation of new companies before the date at which it was to go into effect, July 1, 1896. In the first half of 1896 a large number of industrial concerns were changed into stock companies and their securities listed. Since then, in view of the new restrictions, the number has been small. It may be difficult for even an honest and solvent company to run its business a year without getting its securities on the market. As the restrictions of the law do not apply to an additional issue of a stock already listed, the tendency is for such concerns to become absorbed in existing companies rather than maintain an independent existence. When an established house is changed into a stock company it can turn its securities over to a company already in the field, and these securities may be met through an increased issue by the old company of stock which can be brought into the market at once. These arrangements are made largely through the banks, which more and more are finding a lucrative field in the development of industrial undertakings on a large scale and in the ceaseless amalgamation of such companies. The restrictions of the exchange act have given an added impetus to industrial concentration, and not least in its influence has been the clause requiring a year's delay in the listing of the securities mentioned.

[a] At a conference of the various committees on listing (zulassungsstellen) held in Berlin in November, 1897, it seemed to be the general opinion that the contents of a prospectus under the new law are too complicated and include too many unimportant details to serve their real purpose.

[b] See the Frankfurter Zeitung, February 18 and March 4, 1898.

A less important but more striking effect of this clause was the formation, before the act went into effect, of companies especially designed to take over the securities of such concerns as came under its restrictions. In some cases these companies were confined to particular fields of enterprise, as "general electric" companies and the like. A more extreme type is illustrated by a Dresden corporation known as the Stock Company for General Industrial Purposes (Aktiengesellschaft für allgemeine Industrie). These companies increase their own stock in proportion to the securities taken over by them, and put this stock on the market at once. In this respect they have some of the features of a trust. The new issues are not trust certificates, but they represent securities of separate companies, and form an object of speculation in their stead.

Dealing for the account.—Finally, we may consider the workings of the clause prohibiting all exchange dealing "for the account" in certain classes of securities. The results of this clause are none the less interesting for having been confidently anticipated by everyone at all familiar with the nature of exchange transactions. Prior to the act business on the German stock exchanges had been conducted according to London rather than New York methods. The difference is familiar. In New York "futures" are practically unknown on the stock exchange. Almost all transactions are for delivery on the day following the contract. Speculative buyers who are unwilling to take the securities over for cash provide for their being "carried" at a fixed carrying charge. Short sellers, conversely, borrow their stocks for the next day's delivery. In many cases, of course, this amounts to the same thing—that is, those who have bought and are not ready to take over the securities loan them to the short sellers for the deliveries which they are bound to make. Settlements and clearings occur daily, and loan contracts run indefinitely from day to day. In London, on the other hand, transactions are "for the account"—that is, for the fortnightly clearing. In Berlin the methods are the same, except that for most securities the account is at the end of the month. Transactions are said to be pro ultimo. These are distinctly time dealings. The Berlin operator may speculate on the fluctuations of a month and wind up his transaction before the monthly settlement, in the same way in which the New York dealer can speculate on the ups and downs of a single day. Such contracts are like the "futures" of the produce exchange, except that the time of delivery is fixed for a specific day.

Such being the conditions of business, the act forbids all "exchange dealing for the account" in the case of securities of mining and manufacturing undertakings, and in all cases where the total capital stock is less than 20,000,000 marks. The question of the need of speculative dealings in securities of a smaller total than this need not be raised at this point. This attempt to prohibit time dealings in industrial securities is a radical step. It rests upon the belief that speculation in such shares does not serve the same economic purpose as speculation in, say, public funds, and also upon certain experiences in the manipulation of these securities not unlike our own experiences with "industrials." To overcome the prohibition of the clause in question, two ways were open. In the first place, the question as to what constituted exchange dealing for future delivery was as indeterminate as in the case of grain; and, following the lead of the grain dealers, "trading for the account" might have been arranged with a view to avoid its classification as exchange trading. This would have involved giving up the existing rules, the machinery of clearing and the official quotation of prices. But for the stock exchange a much easier way was open. Instead of avoiding exchange trading, it was far more convenient to avoid future trading. This was accordingly done, and a system of cash trading in the specified securities was substituted for the previous transactions "for the account." It was well understood before the act went into effect that a policy of this kind would be adopted. The report of the commission of inquiry some years before had emphasized the fact that speculation in securities does not depend upon the method of dealing for future delivery, and that the New York Exchange furnishes an example of speculation on an enormous scale without time dealings. Hence the commission had declared impracticable the prohibition of time dealings in any class of securities. The Reichstag, however, was blind to such obvious facts.

Before the act went into effect the brokers' companies (Maklerbanken)[a] and the leading banks had arranged a definite policy and had sent to their customers printed regulations regarding the new form of trade in industrial securities. It was announced that customers might place orders for cash purchases or sales, and that the securities would be carried for the purchaser's account or securities provided for him if he had none for delivery. All settlements were to be made at the end of the month. Of course interest charges for carrying have now to be reckoned into the account. It is worth noting that it is provided by many of the banks that, where there is an interest charge against the customers, it shall be 1 per cent above the prevailing bank rate; and where the interest is in the customer's favor, it shall be 1 per cent below the bank rate.

The new arrangement is evidently like the New York method in principle. It works, however, very differently in some respects. Since the banks fill every order by acting as principals, there is no necessity for such active borrowing of stocks and money as follows the close of each day's trading in New York. The customer who sells short, for example, is merely debited with the given amount of stock on the books of the bank. The bank, with its large body of customers, will generally find such a sale offset on its books by a corresponding purchase. Such balances as remain which the bank does not wish to carry itself will determine its counter transactions on the exchange.

[a] The Maklerbanken are stock companies that enter into relation with free brokers and guarantee their contracts. A broker connected with such an organization brings purchaser and seller together only through the medium of the Maklerbank. If he receives an order to buy, he at once fills the order by giving up the Maklerbank as seller, and only then does he secure a selling order, whereupon he gives up the Maklerbank in turn as buyer. The broker has the benefit of improved credit, and the Maklerbank makes its profit from a division of the commissions.

Thus the provisions of the act that aimed at the suppression of speculation in an important class of securities have succeeded only in changing the form of that speculation.[a] Doubtless in some cases the speculation has diminished, since as yet the public is not used to the new procedure. It also works to the disadvantage of the customer. How far any inconvenience will be felt in the future it is too early to say; but it may be confidently asserted that if economic conditions demand an increase in the issues of "industrials," there is nothing in the present arrangement to check an active speculation in such securities. As it is, trust certificates do not come within the limitations of the law. A test case was made of the dynamite trust, which claimed to be not a "manufacturing company," but merely an organization for the ownership of securities of manufacturing companies. This claim was allowed by the governing board of the exchange in Berlin, and trading by the old method continued.

The ultimate results of the exchange act can not yet be determined, but its immediate results are sorry enough. It aimed to stop speculation in grain; and in the effort to do so it has disorganized the grain trade, increased the risks of all dealers, deprived farmers of reliable central quotations, driven business to foreign exchanges, diminished the importance of Germany in the grain markets of the world, and, last, but not least, engendered bitterness and strife between different elements of society that may affect political issues for years to come. All this might have been worth while if it had been accompanied by the suppression of the gambling propensities of any considerable proportion of the population. But of the former outside speculators on the Berlin Exchange some have transferred their dealings to foreign markets, some find an opportunity still open in the new hospital exchange, some have turned their attention to the stock exchange, while others doubtless find consolation in "playing" the state lottery or in other devices for the gratification of the gambling instinct. It would be unfair not to credit the law with some check on gaming transactions, but it would be unwarranted optimism to think that the partial suppression of merely one form of gambling can be very far-reaching in its moral results.

When we turn to the stock exchange we find little reason to believe that the outside public has diminished its operations. Where speculation has been made difficult at one point, it has increased at another. The recently published bank reports for the year 1897 show a material gain over 1896 in the earnings of the large banks from commissions. Against this should be put a probable loss on the part of the smaller brokers.

Looking at other provisions regarding the stock exchange, we find many harmless regulations and some desirable ones. Those, however, from which the most good was expected have shown themselves of little use. The exchange register is a farce, the prohibition of futures in industrial shares is completely evaded, the regulation of the commission business is incapable of enforcement, and so on. The most important net result of it all is the way in which the whole scheme plays into the hands of the large banks. This fact is reiterated in every financial letter and every bank report. The provisions chiefly responsible for this have been described above. They only accentuate a movement already very marked, and one fraught with great advantage as well as with grave dangers. But it is a strange commentary on this class of legislation that such provisions as those regarding the listing of securities, commission dealings, and the trade in industrial shares should have been passed by a legislative majority that was actuated by suspicion and hostility toward the "money power."

HENRY CROSBY EMERY.

BOWDOIN COLLEGE, Brunswick, Me.

APPENDIX B.

Ten years' regulation of the stock exchange in Germany.

CONTENTS.

The three evils of speculation, page 5; The three methods of regulation, page 7; Provisions of the act of 1896, page 8; Importance of time dealings, page 9; Effect on the produce exchange, page 12; New forms of contract on stock exchange to evade law, page 13; Legal uncertainty, page 15; Decisions of courts against new methods, page 16; Effects of act, page 17; Confessed failure, page 18; Fluctuations and manipulation increased, page 18; Undesirable public not excluded, page 20; The new act of 1908, page 22.

The German Government has just repealed (April 9, 1908) certain stringent provisions of the law of 1896 enacted to control speculation in stocks. This has been the result of a vigorous agitation and lengthy discussions, especially in the last few months. In the same period there has been a widespread demand in favor of restrictive legislation in this country, a demand which has had the rather vague support of the President and of the governor of New York. It is, perhaps, not to be wondered at that these two opposite movements should occur at the same time, but it would certainly be inexcusable for Congress or any legislature to move rashly without a consideration of the failure of the German experiment; for it must be admitted that the German law has proved a double failure. It has been a fiasco so far as accomplishing its purpose is concerned, and it has produced evil results that were not intended. A brief examination of the workings of the act of 1896 is not only timely, but teaches also a permanent lesson as to the dangers which lurk in legislative regulation of financial methods, even after the careful consideration which was given to some parts, at least, of the German act.

The real and supposed evils of speculation may be summed up under three heads:

(1) The manipulation of prices (in the case of commodities) to the detriment of the consumer or producer. Sometimes it is the dread of corners and the extortion practiced against the consumer which calls out the criticism. More often, however, the criticism comes from the producing interests, who claim that the prices received for their commodities are reduced by the supposedly nefarious practices of the short sellers.

[a] It seems to be the general opinion in Germany that the substitution of cash dealings for time dealings will always bring about an increase in the width of price fluctuations. It is said that this has resulted in the present case. Loeb (in the Quarterly Journal of Economics, 1897, p. 423) gives as two reasons for this the smaller amount of the transactions and the absence of a strong, short interest to maintain prices on a fall. This doubtless applies in the case of a cash business that is unfamiliar to the public and unperfected in its workings, as is the case in Berlin, but it is not inherent in the form of cash trading. The dealings of this nature in New York are enormous, and the shorts have the same steadying influence there as under a system of time dealings.

(2) A similar manipulation is charged in the case of stock speculation. This may affect the innocent investor unfairly, or it may have the result of making a given industry too dependent on stock-market influences in its management. This was the feeling which led to an important section of the German act. It was thought that certain industrial enterprises were being run altogether too much with an eye to stock fluctuations and too little with an eye to technical efficiency. The same feeling has found frequent expression in this country, especially as to certain railroads and "industrials" in recent years.

(3) The third evil is the demoralization which extends over a wide public from their indulgence in speculation beyond their means and in a purely gambling spirit.

What shall be said of these three classes of evils? The evils of manipulation are enormously exaggerated. It would be idle to deny that there is any such thing as "rigging the market," but it very seldom lasts long enough to injure the farmer or the consumer. The speculators may be hurt by the tricks of their rivals, and the millers or spinners sometimes growl because of the tactics of the dealers in the wheat or cotton markets, but these are interests which know pretty well how to protect themselves. Certainly no reasonable argument can be made for the claim that speculation reduces prices to the producer. On the contrary, the exact opposite is the case, since it reduces greatly the margin between the farm price and the price of the central market. This, however, is not the place for a discussion of the beneficial effects of speculation. It is only necessary to indicate in passing that the first class of evils is largely imaginary and calls for no interference to protect an innocent public.

The evils of the second class are somewhat harder to estimate, but are also doubtless exaggerated. It is true that in individual cases corporations have been managed with a view to making money out of the fluctuations of the stock, rather than by increasing their earning capacity. It is true that sometimes the influence of "the stock-exchange end" has seemed to absorb too much the energy and attention of directors, but it is very hard to draw any sharp line of distinction. The two things can not be separated, and it should be remembered that, barring absolute fraud, the fluctuations are but the inevitable reflection of the effects of management. In most cases it is not the speculative activity of stocks which affects the character of the management, but the character of the management which affects the speculative activity.

The evils of the third class it would be difficult to exaggerate. Important as the benefits of speculation are, they are purchased at this fearful cost. Everyone must wish that the evils could be abolished. Only the ignorant person, however, supposes that this can be done easily or that it necessarily calls for legislative action. Two questions arise: First, whether or not the evils of "outside" speculation are a necessary cost of the benefits of speculation, i. e., whether the elimination of outside speculators would interfere with the performance of the natural economic function of speculation; and if not, whether, secondly, any measures may be devised which will really remove the evils or check them without interfering disastrously with the course of legitimate business. The experience of Germany throws important light on both of these problems.

As there are three classes of evils, so there are three possible methods of regulation:

(1) To distinguish between the different kinds of transactions, permitting some and prohibiting others.

(2) To distinguish between different kinds of securities or commodities, permitting exchange transactions in some and forbidding them in others.

(3) To distinguish between different classes of speculators, allowing the practice to some, but not to others.

The German exchange act of 1896 aimed to reach all the above evils and adopted all three methods of regulation. It is not proposed here to go into a history of that act or to refer to any but its most important provisions.[a] It should be said, however, that the original bill was the result of a very remarkable inquiry made by a special commission, whose report constitutes the most important body of material on the whole subject of speculation. The proposals of the commission, recognizing as they did the necessary and legitimate function of speculation in modern business, were relatively moderate. In the Reichstag, however, the agrarian party had the upper hand and much more radical provisions were included in the act as finally passed. Without considering the regulations providing for a closer government supervision of exchange dealings, we may note at once the three most important provisions:

(1) All "exchange dealings for future delivery" (Börsentermingeschäfte) in grain and flour were forbidden.

(2) All "exchange dealings for the account" (Börsentermingeschäfte) in the shares of mining and industrial companies were forbidden.

(3) An "exchange register" was established in which was to be entered the name of every person who wished to engage in exchange transactions for future delivery. Contracts made by two persons entered in the register were declared binding and exempt from the defense of wager. Where either party was an unregistered person the contract was void.

The object of this last provision is obvious, namely to exclude undesirable persons from the field of speculation. At first sight it seems a simple and at the same time ingenious device, the assumption being that clerks, cashiers, professional men, in fact most of the so-called "outside public," would be unwilling to publicly announce themselves as indulging in speculative transactions, by entry in the register, while dealers or brokers would not dare to do business with unregistered persons because of the danger that such parties would fail to settle in case of loss. Thus at a stroke the undesirable element would be eliminated and speculation confined to the professionals of adequate knowledge and capital. The complete failure of the experiment will be explained below.

The two former provisions, it will be seen, turned on the distinction between different commodities or securities. The prohibition of futures in grain aimed to do away with the first supposed evil, the depression of prices from short selling, while the prohibition of futures in mining and industrial shares was intended to remove the second danger mentioned above, undue speculative influence in company management. Before considering either of these let us note the way in which the first method of regulation—that is, discrimination between different kinds of transactions—came to be introduced. This requires a brief explanation of certain peculiarities of German methods of dealing on the exchange and of certain German legal conceptions.

[a] For a fuller account see references at the close of this article.

In the first place it should be noticed that on the German exchanges, as on practically all exchanges in Europe, stocks are dealt in by time dealings similar to the "futures" in our grain markets. On the New York Stock Exchange practically all contracts are made "regular way," i. e., for delivery the next morning. If the purchaser wishes not to pay for his stocks at once, he must borrow money on the stocks in order to carry them. If the seller is trading on the short side, he must borrow the stocks (putting up the money) in order to make delivery. On the Berlin Exchange the custom had always been to buy or sell per ultimo, or "for the monthly account," as it is called in London. This means that delivery and payment were postponed till the settlement day at the end of the month. Under this method there is no "option" of a month in which to make delivery as in the case of wheat futures, but the transaction is a future contract with a fixed time for delivery. In case the trader wishes to operate for a longer period he can easily shift his contracts ahead at the end of the month by means of "contango" transactions (Prolongationsgeschäfte).

As a result of this fact, speculation in stocks as well as in produce had come to be associated in Germany with the idea of time contracts. To be sure it had been pointed out, before the commission and elsewhere, that the two are not essentially connected and that very active speculation takes place in New York by means of cash or "spot" dealings. Despite this, however, it was assumed by the lawmakers that a prohibition of time contracts meant a prohibition of speculative transactions.

In the next place there are certain formalities connected with dealings on the Berlin exchange unfamiliar in American usage. Chief among these is the official quotation of prices by the official brokers (Kursmakler). These points have to be kept in mind if one is to understand the legal problems which arose and the various methods of overcoming the provisions of the act to which resort was made. What the law actually made unlawful were "exchange dealings for future delivery" (Börsentermingeschäfte) (a) for all persons in case of grain and in the case of mining and industrial stocks, (b) for unregistered persons in the case of all other securities. The question then arises, "What are exchange dealings for future delivery?" The famous section 48 of the act attempted to give a formal definition by statute. Such contracts were to be understood to be contracts which (a) provided for delivery on a fixed day or within a fixed option, (b) were made according to the regular rules of the exchange, (c) for which there was an official quotation of prices.

To anyone familiar with the various forms of future dealings on different exchanges, it is evident that the two latter characteristics are by no means essential to such dealings. If the intention was to stop all speculative transactions in the given articles, it was a fatal blunder to specifically prohibit only certain highly technical forms of contract. It was a perfectly simple thing to substitute other forms which would avoid the limited definition of the act. How far judicial interpretation might be extended to cover such substitute forms was, of course, a matter to be determined only by experience. The situation, it will be seen, was this: "Exchange dealings for future delivery" were prohibited altogether for certain classes of articles, and unlawful in any case for unregistered persons. Since, as a matter of fact, the outside public did not register at all, the problem was to devise new forms which would be lawful both for the prohibited articles and for the excluded (unregistered) parties. This might be done by (a) substituting cash dealings for time contracts, or (b) substituting other forms of time contracts for "exchange futures" as technically defined. Both methods were adopted according to the circumstances.

A large part of the discussion over the act of 1906 has centered about the technical legal problem as to how far the new methods were lawful. It is not possible to give in this article any full account either of the new forms or of the legal problems to which they gave rise. A brief summary will be sufficient. In the first place, a word must be said about the prohibition of grain futures, though this article is intended to deal primarily with the problems of the stock exchange.[a]

So far as speculation in grain is concerned, the use of the "spot-delivery" contract alone is evidently impossible on account of the seasonal variations in the supply. Some form of future contract is necessary. But it is evident that contracts for future delivery are made everywhere in the business world entirely independent of speculation. Every manufacturer has occasion both to buy his raw material and to sell his goods for delivery at some future date. Such contracts in general must of course be lawful according to commercial law, and were so in Germany. The grain dealers accordingly resorted to "futures according to the commercial code" (handelsrechtliche Lieferungsgeschäfte). These were distinguished from "exchange transactions" by the fact that the special regulations of any exchange did not apply to them; they were not to be settled through any clearing house or other organization of the produce exchange; no official quotation of prices was made, and the legal provisions as to default by either party differed from those in force in the case of exchange dealings. It is not necessary to discuss these distinctions in detail. Important as they may be for legal purposes, they are not of great importance from the economic point of view, except in so far as they meant a return to old-fashioned methods and a giving up of the conveniences of an up-to-date settlement and clearing process. This is exactly what was at first involved. The problem was to reestablish these conveniences in such a way that it could still be claimed that these transactions were not of an "exchange" character (börsenmässig).

The subsequent events partook of the nature of opera bouffe. In the first place the produce exchange was dissolved by the action of its own members, who left in a body the day the law went into force. They proceeded to do business in a variety theater on the other side of the street. After some months of a restricted and uncertain business, they received notice that their dealings were considered contrary to law and resort was made to a hospital, where by occupying separate rooms the claim might be set up that they were dealing from office to office according to ordinary commercial methods and so under the general commercial law. Besides this, it was necessary to avoid all semblance of having anything like the old exchange rules to govern the transactions, such as rules fixing the units of quantity for sales, establishing "contract grades" as to quality, or fixed periods or "options" of delivery, or finally, an official clearing house for settling contracts and differences. The old provisions as to quantity, quality, and time of delivery could be maintained informally by the tacit agreement of custom. On the other hand, for a dealer to settle every contract by separate delivery in each case was impossibly burdensome, and even the transfer of a delivery notice subject to indorsement from office to office was inconvenient and cumbersome. Consequently a private agency arose, offering to carry through settlements for those who chose to patronize it. This was a practical reestablishment of the clearing house.

[a] The evil results of this legislation in the case of the grain trade were discussed somewhat fully by the present writer in an article written ten years ago and referred to below. It was based on the operations for the first year of the act only, but as the events of the last ten years have merely reenforced the opinion there expressed, it is not necessary to repeat the argument.

Thus it will be seen that the new methods of dealing were simply the old "futures" in a new and yet somewhat old-fashioned dress. The law had not stopped such dealings. It had merely made them more crude in form, forcing the commercial world to give up the conveniences which experience had shown serviceable. In doing so, however, it hampered the performance of the legitimate function of speculation. This fact the authorities quickly discovered, and even the agrarians, while still denouncing the continued activities of the traders, realized that the complete abolition of the produce exchange had its disadvantages. Trade was disorganized, and the old barometer of market conditions, i. e., the quotation of prices on the central exchange, had disappeared. Strenuous efforts were made to substitute official figures collected and tabulated by an official board, but proved confessed failures. Finally in 1900, after much negotiation, the traders returned to the exchange, still forced, however, to keep to the cruder devices in order to avoid the law, and even then in great uncertainty as to the legal status of their contracts.

In the case of the stock exchange various new methods were adopted. These depended in the first place on the necessity of avoiding the provisions as to mining and industrial stocks, and secondly on the difficulties involved in the requirement for registration. Further, the character of the contracts between brokers or bankers themselves differed from the contracts between these and their customers.

So far as mining and industrial securities were concerned three kinds of contract appeared in the case of business on the exchange.

1. Some attempt was made to substitute the contracts for delivery according to the commercial code similar to those described above for grain. These, however, did not become important for two reasons: First, the absence of public quotation of prices made them nearly useless; and secondly, in view of their doubtful legality (later so declared by the court in the case of such securities) it was easier to resort to cash dealings, since these were not prohibited and were more available for stocks than for produce.

2. The large banking houses resorted primarily to regular cash dealings, with, however, some differences both from the customary cash transactions of the Berlin exchange and also from the well-known New York method. According to the regular methods for cash dealings contracts were settled not according to the prices fixed in each case, but according to an official price which would most nearly equalize the supply and demand. This method was not deemed available for transactions on a large scale, and contracts were made according to the fluctuating prices of the moment as had been the case in dealings for the account. The problem of settlement was not met, as in New York, by borrowing of stocks, but by the maintenance of large deposits of securities in the Bank der Berliner Kassenverein, against which "red checks" were drawn and the final balance struck daily, as in the case of cash deposits in a bank. There was thus a balancing of orders to deliver and orders to receive, as in the case of a depositor's ordinary bank balance. This worked very well for the great banks which could hold large blocks of stock on deposit. The ordinary brokerage concerns, however, were forced to resort to a different method, since they could not afford such holdings of securities and had no such working capital.

3. This method was a somewhat devious device. It might have been expected that the New York method would be adopted, but that method involves difficulties which the German financial world considers very dangerous and which they wished to avoid. The practice of daily borrowing stocks for delivery and money for carrying which prevails in New York necessitates an immense loan fund and leads to enormous fluctuations in the rate on call loans, with frequent money stringencies. This strain the Berlin market could not, or at least would not, stand. Consequently contracts were made which nominally were cash transactions requiring delivery and payment the next day, but under which it was understood that settlement would not be really enforced on time. Still more to avoid the danger of call loans, it was understood that settlement should be regularly postponed to the end of the month.

These contracts differed from the old-time dealings in the important fact that interest had to be paid during the intervening period before settlement; also in the fact that the ordinary machinery of the exchange for settlement and clearing could not be used. Thus they were at once more costly and more cumbersome. But it is evident that they were really time dealings in essence and that the appearance of cash dealings was simply a somewhat flimsy cloak to screen them from the law.

The above methods were adopted for contracts on the exchange, where the main object was to avoid the appearance of time dealings. The contracts between the banks or brokerage houses and their customers were made in the form of "dealings for future delivery under the commercial code." This was due to the fact that the German law regarding agent and principal is much more lenient than American law.

The right of the broker to act as principal (Selbsteintrittsrecht) is well recognized in the case of stock transactions. The exchange commission of 1896 recommended a restriction of this right, but the new law, making no provision against it, really forced an increase of the practice. As shown above, the old-fashioned time dealings were not available for the forbidden securities on the exchange, while cash dealings were too burdensome for the customers. Consequently the transactions of the outside public did not appear in large measure directly on the exchange, but were settled in the brokerage offices themselves. This further drove business to the large banks (who do a regular commission business) because of the greater facilities afforded by their large funds of cash and securities. An additional change was that, since there was no dealing for the account on the exchange floor, cash prices had to be used as a basis for these contracts, and the customer was charged interest till the time of settlement.

In the case of securities in which future dealings were permitted, the only problem was to evade the provision as to entry in the exchange register, since for unregistered persons exchange dealings for future delivery were void. This was done by adopting the general principle of the dealings "under the commercial code." It is not necessary to describe the variations in detail.

The above accounts will indicate the somewhat chaotic nature to which business had been reduced in its effort to clothe itself in lawful forms. The courts had in the main held that such transactions were not wagering contracts, and hence void, unless it was agreed by both parties that delivery was not contemplated and a mere payment of differences was the only obligation incurred. As a matter of fact, no such contracts occur on any reputable exchange in the world, though judges frequently fail to see it. The German civil code went further and made such contracts void where one party intended only to wager "on differences," provided that the other party should have known it. To this was now added the prohibitions of dealings in particular classes of securities and commodities and the provision requiring registration. This latter provision aimed to make the legal question perfectly clear; transactions by registered persons to be lawful, by unregistered persons unlawful. As a matter of fact, as shown by the above account, it made "confusion worse confounded."

Numerous decisions of the highest court were naturally necessitated by cases arising in which the defense of wager was set up by the loser. The first important decision was that of the first division of the Reichsgericht (October 12, 1898). This was a Hamburg case, where shares had been purchased for an unregistered customer "under the commercial code," all resort to the rules of the exchange being excluded in the contract. The court held that the character of a "future" was not to be determined according to the definition in section 48, but rather according to its economic characteristics. The contract was held void. A later decision (October 28, 1899) upheld this decision in the case of a somewhat similar contract under the rules of the Darmstädter Bank. A decision of June 27, 1899, turned on the attempt of the fiscal authorities to tax twice the current account transactions (Kassakontokorrent), described above, on the ground that there were really two sales. The court held that the transaction was a single one, being really a time contract. The question of legality was not directly raised, but as the sole reason for that form of contract was to give it the appearance of a cash transaction, the inference was that it would have been held void.

Under these decisions it will be seen that the dealings with outside customers had no standing in law. The leading banks made strenuous efforts to require registration and to refuse all dealings with unregistered persons, except in the way of pure cash transactions. These attempts failed completely. Not only the general public, but also the smaller brokers and the provincial banks, refused to put their names in what they called the "gambling register." Cash dealings could not be enforced as long as there were those who would take their chances of having customers refuse to meet losses. For twelve years a large part of all business in stocks and grain in Germany has been carried on either without the protection of law, or at least under the burden of legal uncertainty.

We may now briefly consider what the good and evil results of this state of affairs may have been, and what lessons are to be drawn from Germany's experience.

The first evident conclusion is that it is extremely difficult to stop speculative transactions by legislation. It ought to be evident without an appeal to experience. As long as men have the right to own and exchange property, and as long as the value of such property fluctuates, the effort will be made to gain an advantage from such fluctuations. If the attempt is made to prescribe certain forms as illegal, new and evasive forms will be discovered. If the lawmaker is resolved to reach transactions under every form, he is obliged to prohibit contracts which are essential to legitimate trade. In that case such contracts will be made in defiance of law, and merchants will be reduced to the sole protection which the gambler has, the ordinary good faith of the party with whom he deals. It is a fact that speculation can be carried on by means of ordinary commercial contracts. No special devices are necessary, though the ordinary methods of commerce as to settlements and clearings may be more fully developed. To attempt to discriminate between the form of contract in the cases of trade and speculation is simply to irritate and not to cure.

But if legislation can not stop speculation, it can seriously hamper it. The German market was greatly restricted under the operation of this act. This was due to two causes, (1) the necessity of resorting to cruder methods, and (2) the legal uncertainty of many transactions. It is hardly necessary to show this reaction by statistics. Something is indicated by the receipts from the tax on stock transfers, which fell from twenty million marks in 1895–6 to thirteen million in 1902–3. Telegrams received at the offices of the exchanges fell 18 per cent from 1893 to 1902, and in other offices increased 43 per cent. The main question is, Was this diminution of business and consequent narrowing of the market desirable or undesirable? To those who believe that all speculation is bad, any legislation which restricts business of this kind may seem in so far good, even if it has evil effects in other ways. To form an opinion on this point we must consider the supposed evils and the desired improvements. These were given at the beginning of the article under three heads, the prevention of manipulation to the injury of producer or consumer, the prevention of undue speculative influence on industrial management, and the exclusion of the weaker element of the public from the speculative market. Of the demoralizing effects of this legislative experiment on the grain market enough has been said elsewhere. We may turn to the question of speculation in "industrials." It will be recalled that of the possible methods of regulation two were combined in this case, viz: (a) a discrimination between forms of contract, since time dealings were excluded and cash dealings allowed, and (b) a discrimination between different stocks, since this prohibition applied only to industrial and mining shares. The experiment offers a good test of the two methods. In briefly stating the results, statistical proof will not be given, because to be of any value it would have to be more extensive than space here will allow. The factors, other than legislation, affecting relative prices, degrees of fluctuation, and expansion and contraction of business are too manifold to make partial statistics really significant. It may be said, however, that the views expressed are not determined by the claims of interested parties alone. They go no further, for instance, than the statements of the Government itself in the explanation of reasons for repeal attached to the amendatory bills of 1904, 1906, and 1907.[a] The German Government certainly can not be accused of overfriendliness to the exchanges, and its frank confession of error is all the more significant for that reason. "The prohibition of trading for the account in mining and industrial shares," says the report of 1907, "has proved injurious to the public, without accomplishing its original purpose." Whatever evils of speculation there were, it declares, have been increased by forcing a resort to new methods of dealing. Two factors have combined to make the change, the substitution of cash dealings for time dealings, and the narrowing of the market. The results may be summarized as follows:

(1) Fluctuations in prices have been increased rather than diminished. The corrective influence of the bear side of the market having been restricted, the tendency to an inflated bull movement was increased in times of prosperity. This in turn made the danger of radical collapse all the greater in proportion, as the bull movement was abnormal. The greater funds needed to carry stocks on a cash basis further increased the danger when collapse was threatened. The result was an increased incentive to reckless speculation and manipulation. Says the report in 1907: "The dangers of speculation have been increased, the power of the market to resist one-sided movements has been weakened, and the possibilities of misusing inside information have been enlarged."

[a] See references in bibliographical note.

(2) The money market has been increasingly demoralized through the greater fluctuations in demand for funds to carry speculative cash accounts. The New York method is held in abhorrence by German financiers, who attribute to it, in large part, the wild fluctuations in New York call rates, the frequent "money panics," and the tendency to reckless "jobbery." In proportion as the new Berlin methods approached the cash-delivery system of New York these evils have appeared there.

(3) The business of the great banks has been increased at the expense of their smaller rivals. The prohibition of trading for the account made it difficult for the latter to carry out customers' orders because the new methods required large supplies of both cash and securities. Furthermore, an increasing share of the business of the large banks came to be settled by offsets among their customers, and the actual exchange transactions became a proportionally small part of the total transfers.

(4) This had a twofold effect. Business within the banks is done on the basis of exchange prices, but these became more fluctuating and subject to manipulation as the quantity of exchange dealings were diminished and were concentrated in a few hands. The advantages of a broad, open market were lost. The object of the act had been to lessen the speculative influence over industrial undertakings. Its effect was to increase it.

(5) Finally the effect of interference, increased cost, and legal uncertainty was to drive business to foreign exchanges and diminish the power of the Berlin Exchange in the field of international finance. The number of agencies of foreign houses increased four or five fold, and much German capital flowed to other centers, especially London, for investment or speculation. This in turn weakened the power of the Berlin money market, so that even the Reichsbank has at times felt its serious effects.

If we turn now to the second great object of the act, the elimination of the undesirable public element from the field of speculation, the confession of failure is even more complete. In one sense the fate of the famous exchange register is laughable, but in a deeper sense it is genuinely sad, for the object was a worthy one and the new scheme was adopted with high hopes. Its failure was inevitable, since it did not remove the temptation to speculate. The men who felt this temptation most, and whose position least warranted their yielding to it, were of course the very last men to have themselves registered. In fact, the whole public revolted. The number of registrations never reached 400, which number would not begin to cover the banking and brokerage concerns. The number of "outsiders" registered never reached 40. Even the conservative banks had to choose between giving up all such business and dealing with nonregistered parties.

Now, as we have seen, speculation in the German market was checked in considerable measure. Was at least this object of exclusion being accomplished; and if so, was it desirable? There is every reason to believe that it worked rather the other way.

(1) The uncertainties of the new situation were most likely to exclude the cautious and well to do from participation in the market. The man of adequate means, accustomed to occasional and reasonable speculative ventures, was more willing to await developments and avoid chances. The reckless gambler of small means was less likely to be disturbed in his practices.

(2) The act aimed to establish legal certainty by means of registration. It proved a direct incentive to fraud. The customer was not legally liable on his contracts; therefore every reckless and dishonest little plunger who could get a broker to trust him could take a "flyer," with everything to gain and nothing to lose. This was made all the more an inducement because the law went further than the law of wager and allowed the customer to recover margins from his broker. Cases increased rapidly in the courts and the worst element of the public was active to the relative exclusion of the better. Instances even occurred where a man would play both sides of the market at once through two different brokers and simply refuse to settle on the losing contract.

To make matters worse this germ of fraud infected a superior class as well. It was not only the little gamblers, but too frequently the dealer of repute, the well-to-do merchant, or even the banker, who appeared as defendant in such cases. Business honor, the boasted Glaub und Treue, suffered a severe shock. The law by increasing uncertainties and removing legal protection defeated its own ends and demoralized business until the situation became intolerable.

(3) As affecting this phase of the question reference should be made again to the transfer of business to foreign exchanges. Morally and socially it is as bad for the German public to speculate in cheap mining stocks on the London Exchange as to do so at home. The flow of German funds into the market for South African securities would indicate a further way in which the purposes of the act were defeated.

(4) Finally the question must be faced of the effect of eliminating the public from the speculative market even if it could be accomplished. It is sometimes supposed that such a result would be all benefit with no injury. On the contrary, the real and important function of speculation in the field of business can only be performed by a broad and open market. Though no one would defend individual cases of recklessness or fail to lament the disaster and crime sometimes engendered, the fact remains that a "purely professional market" is not the kind of market which best fulfills the service of speculation. A broad market with the participation of an intelligent and responsible market public is necessary. The writer ventured this opinion some years ago at the cost of considerable criticism. The German experience would, however, seem to bear it out. A narrow professional market is less serviceable to legitimate investment and trade and much more susceptible of manipulation.

After much agitation and continued opposition by extreme agrarian enemies of the exchanges, German business has at last been relieved of these burdens, so far as the stock exchanges are concerned. This article goes to press before a copy of the act of April 9 could be secured, but the act follows in the main the government bill presented last November. It is in a sense a compromise measure. The agrarians yielded no jot on the matter of grain futures. The prohibition remains intact and is backed up by even severer measures. The grain brokers have now threatened to close the produce exchange altogether. They found some comfort, however, in the assurance of the authorities that "hedging" operations would not be considered under the ban of the law, rather cold comfort, however, since "hedging" transactions can not be made, or at least can not be much protection to the merchant without a broad market.

On the other hand, industrial and mining stocks are now readmitted to trading for the account, and, what is more important, the stock exchange register is abolished. For this is to be substituted practically the so-called commercial register (Handelsregister), which includes practically the whole mercantile class, and in which, of course, registration signifies nothing as to participation in speculation. Some attempt at exclusion is, however, maintained. The law still excludes "hand workers," and all such whose occupation does not reach beyond what is called "small business" (Kleingewerb), even if they are included in the commercial register. On the other hand, certain evidently fit persons are admitted even when not registered.

Whether any attempt to make distinctions of this kind between persons will be of any practical value remains to be seen. The courts in this country have sometimes taken the means or occupation of a person as evidence of whether his dealings with a broker were legitimate or gambling. It seems a somewhat dubious method which, logically extended, would lead to much confusion. And yet if the stock exchange world will not assume a responsibility itself, it must expect attempts at interference. When brokers give up trying to entice unfit persons into speculation, when they establish a standard under which no man will act knowingly as agent for a customer who is plunging beyond his means, and when stricter customs as, for example, requiring higher margins are enforced, they will have a better right to protest against the criticisms directed against them. The worst evils of the stock speculation can certainly be better done away with by reform from within than by legislation from without.

HENRY C. EMERY.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE.

The details of the stock exchange act of 1906 can be found in two articles: Ernst Loeb, "The German Bourse act," Quarterly Journal of Economics, July, 1897; H. C. Emery, "The German exchange act," Political Science Quarterly, June, 1898. A bibliography of the literature to that time may be found in these articles. Of the voluminous later literature, two studies may be especially recommended: Chr. Knipper, "Der Berliner Effektenhandel unter dem Einflusse des Börsengesetzes," 1902 (Schmoller's Forschungen, vol. 20); F. Goldenbaum, "Auflösung und Wiederherstellung der Berliner Produktenbörse" (Schmoller's Jahrbuch, 1900 and 1901). Much statistical material is given in the Denkschrift of the Centralverband des deutschen Bank- und Bankiergewerbes, Berlin, December, 1903. Able discussions are to be found in Verhandlungen des Allegmeinen Deutschen Bankiertages, first session in Frankfort, 1902, second session in Berlin, 1904; third session in Hamburg, 1907. Among current discussions the files of Die Bank Archiv are especially valuable, including some of the best articles.

The three amendatory bills are accompanied by the government arguments in favor of reform, and also (especially that of 1904) contain valuable appendices, giving statistics, judicial decisions, and the like. Entwurf eines Gesetzes betreffend die Aenderung des Abschnitts IVdes Börsengesetzes, February 19, 1904. Same title, November 28, 1906. Entwurf eines Gesetzes betreffend Aenderung des Börsengesetzes, November 22, 1907 (Verlag Carl Heymanns, Berlin).

APPENDIX C.

SHOULD SPECULATION BE REGULATED BY LAW?—LESSONS FROM GERMAN EXPERIENCE.

[By Henry Crosby Emery, professor of political economy, Yale University; author of "Speculation on the stock and produce exchanges of the United States."]

President Roosevelt's tentative suggestion in his recent message showed unwillingness on his part to express any opinion as to how speculation might be regulated, but indicated an opinion that has become increasingly widespread in the last few months, that some kind of legislation in restriction of speculation is desirable. It was about time to expect some such general wave of feeling, since history proves that these movements recur at pretty regular intervals. It is a striking fact, however, that the agitation in this regard should become prominent in this country at exactly the time when the German Government has taken steps toward a modification and partial repeal of the famous stock-exchange act of 1896. It shows how little attention is paid to experience in matters of legislation, that many reformers in this country should be so confident in this matter without realizing that the ten-year experiment which has been made in Germany has clearly demonstrated itself a failure.

It is, of course, natural enough that agitation of this kind should arise. The evils of speculation are great and are perfectly apparent. The extent to which outsiders of small means are tempted into speculation beyond their capital, with frequent cases of embezzlement as a result, is something that may give even the most careless a deep concern. The mistake, however, on the part of the public lies in an indiscriminate criticism of all speculation regardless of whether it is beneficial to legitimate business or not, and in the complete failure to distinguish between cause and effect. In most cases speculation is held responsible for conditions which it has in no wise engendered, but which are on the contrary the very causes which have brought speculation into being.

In the first place, it is well to recognize what we mean by speculation. The simplest definition is that speculation consists in buying and selling commodities or securities with an idea of making profits out of fluctuating values. As distinguished from ordinary trade, speculation is concerned with taking advantage of fluctuations over a period of time in the same market, while trade is concerned with the purchase of commodities in one market and their sale in another. This does not mean, of course, that the two markets must be geographically separated. The word "market" here is used as meaning a group of buyers and sellers. The trader may buy of the manufacturer and sell to the wholesaler, or buy of a jobber and sell to a retailer, or as a retail merchant he may buy of the wholesaler and sell to the consumer. All of these different parties may, of course, be situated in the same locality, and yet are distinct groups which constitute markets. Speculation does not deal with permanent differences of price which exist between different markets, but deals with the fluctuations from time to time which take place in the same market. Why do such fluctuations occur? Simply because the conditions of supply and demand are always changing. It is the exception rather than the rule for any article of commerce or any piece of property to maintain a perfectly stable value. Since the demand of society is constantly changing, values must constantly fluctuate, and as long as values fluctuate speculation must take place. It is not conceivable that, in a system of buying and selling such as we have, values could go up and down without somebody being benefited or injured, or without men consciously attempting to secure the benefit or avoid the injury by their purchases and sales. Speculation has always existed wherever buying and selling has existed—ever since the days when Joseph cornered the grain supply of Egypt as reported in the book of Genesis. As long as private ownership of property is allowed and the value of property varies, speculation will continue.

There is only one way in which speculation can be stopped altogether, and that is by giving up the system of private property and adopting the socialist state. One of the best books ever written on the subject of speculation was written by the Frenchman Proudhon, sometimes called the "Father of Anarchism." He described accurately and brilliantly the operations of a speculator on the exchange and showed clearly the function of speculation in the modern system. He, of course, was opposed to the whole business because he was opposed to the whole system of property rights, but he recognized much more clearly than many more conservative writers that one is the inevitable outcome of the other.

It will be seen, then, that speculation is not a product of stock and produce exchanges. Speculation existed long before them, and it was only when speculation from natural causes became more and more important that men engaged chiefly in speculative trade formed organizations in order to adopt a general system of rules for the conduct of such business. The real cause, then, of the modern exchange is modern speculation; and the real cause of modern speculation is to be found, so far as commodities are concerned, in the marvelous improvements in the method of transportation and communication which have made the market for staple commodities a world market, in which prices are determined by the conditions of supply and demand of many different sections separated by thousands of miles. Under such conditions fluctuations are inevitably much more dangerous and much less easy of prediction than under the old conditions where each neighborhood was the market for itself. So far as speculation in stocks is concerned, this has been the inevitable result of the enormous multiplication of securities, due to the extension of corporate methods of business, which in itself is the result of huge modern enterprises demanding contributions of capital from a large number of small investors. The material progress of the last half century would have been impossible without such investment. Such investment would have been impossible without the multiplication of such securities of varying values, and the multiplication of such securities inevitably brings about speculation.

Now, since these commodities and securities inevitably fluctuate in price, somebody must take the risk of these fluctuations. The purchase of any piece of property involves risk. The property may fall in value after the purchase has been made. Some forms of property are more uncertain in their value than others, and some particular articles of consumption are of such a peculiar nature that they lend themselves particularly to speculation, but in any case, whether or not we have speculation organized on the exchanges, there are genuine risks here which must be carried. Some people speak as if all dealing in securities should be of a pure investment nature. They fail to realize, however, that investments themselves become speculative in proportion as speculation pure and simple is abolished. Investment means primarily the purchase of income-yielding property in order to get an annual income, rather than to make profits from the fluctuations in capital value; but since capital value does fluctuate, investment involves the risk of loss, and, as will be pointed out more fully below, this risk of loss to the conservative investor is made very much less when he has an active speculative market for the disposal of his property.

Still another distinction that must be made is that between speculation and gambling. In the broadest sense, of course, there is a gambling elements, not only in all bets but in all our activities. If gambling means simply the taking of unreasonable risks, almost every act of our lives might be accused of having a gambling element by those whose opinions as to what risks are worth while differed from ours. To build a factory in the hope of making money, to purchase a yacht in the hope of having pleasure, to go on a summer vacation, to go to a new play at the theater, to take time to listen to a sermon by a new clergyman, each of these may in a sense be said to be "a gamble." We can, however, make a sharp distinction between risks which directly involve money profit or loss and those which do not. All business risks are of the former kind. There are, however, other risks which may be taken, such as betting on cards or on horse racing, where money risk is involved. The peculiarity of such forms of gambling, however, is that the money risk is artificially created and is not a necessary part of the original action. This is not true in the case of buying and selling property. Every transaction of buying and selling necessarily involves a risk. Betting on merely incidental results of particular contests is the assumption of a risk which did not exist before the bet was made. It would seem as if a fair distinction of this kind might be made, speculation being defined as the assumption of inevitable business risks of fluctuating values; gambling as the assumption of purely artificial risks in connection with some fortuitous event. It is true that on the part of a great many people speculation and betting are undertaken from the same gambling motive, and yet the results are so different in both cases that it is needlessly confusing to speak of the two as if they were one and the same thing.

The distinction appears more clearly when we realize that all kinds of artificial games may be devised for betting purposes. On the other hand speculation never arises artificially. Wherever it has vitality it is always the result of natural causes. Men can not speculate in any kind of commodity. They can only speculate in certain commodities in the case of which the natural conditions of supply and demand are such as to demand it. Speculation on a large scale in commodities began in this country in cotton at the time of the civil war. In the case of wheat it began when the market for wheat became a world market and therefore an extremely uncertain one. That speculation can not arise artificially is proved from the fact that it does not occur in commodities where these conditions do not prevail. There is considerable speculation in coffee but no speculation in sugar, the reason being that the conditions of supply in the case of sugar in this country are determined by a single corporation which fixes the price. On the other hand, on the Continent, where the conditions of supply are different, speculation in sugar is important. A learned German scholar who made a careful investigation of the history of the rise of speculation in all its forms stated as his final conclusion that speculation arose everywhere in response to natural causes and to supply an actual need.

Given then these genuine risks which result from our modern economic system, it at once appears that a certain portion of the population are inevitably attracted by the possibilities of profit which inhere in the existence of such risks. Those who are naturally speculative in temperament gravitate inevitably toward speculative ventures. They wish to take big chances in order, if successful, to make big gains. Here arises a serious evil. The speculative temperament does not always go with good judgment or ample means for carrying out transactions of this kind. On the contrary the opposite is very likely to be the case. Hence arise all these evils referred to above in the way of a large amount of so-called "stock gambling" on the part of those who have no business to run such risks. But besides men of this type there are also men of large resources, with knowledge and experience and great shrewdness, whose temperament leads them into transactions on a large scale in the way of assuming risks of this kind. There are some people who would have us believe that, no matter what the character of the person concerned, all such speculative dealings are undesirable. Let us look, however, at the other side of the picture.

Just as those of a speculative temperament are willing to assume risks of this kind, those of the conservative temperament, on the other hand, are able to avoid them. The speculators have appeared as a separate class for the assumption of risks which otherwise would have to be borne by the ordinary business man himself. No better illustration of this can be given than the so-called practice of "hedging" in the wheat market. What some ignorant people like to refer to as the "old-fashioned, conservative method" of wheat dealing consisted of the merchant buying wheat of a farmer, shipping it to a distant market and selling it at such a price as he could get. This, instead of being a conservative kind of business, was an extremely risky kind of business. In the same way the miller in the old days bought his wheat, made his flour, and then sold it at such a profit as he might secure. This again was a very risky business since the price of wheat might rise or fall by a large amount between the time of its purchase and the sale of the flour. To-day practically all regular wheat merchants and millers hedge against any such risks by making countersales or purchases in the speculative market. When a miller buys wheat to turn into flour he promptly sells short on the exchange to a speculator, and when he sells his flour he covers his short line. As a result he is unaffected by the price fluctuations in the world market. Whether the price in the world market goes up or down, what he makes on one transaction he loses on the other, and he is thereby enabled to do a genuinely conservative business and secure the ordinary profits of the manufacturer. This is true, in lesser measure, wherever there is a speculative market for any article of commerce. Wherever there are men who are always willing to take the chance of buying the article or selling the article, the position of those who do not wish to take chances is made just so much easier. They can at any moment shift the risk.

That this has been a great advantage to the farmer no person who knows anything about the facts can possibly doubt. In the old days a dealer would not think of buying wheat from the farmer at anything like the price at which he could sell it, less the cost of transportation. He had to allow a large margin for the risk of falling prices, and ordinarily would offer the farmer from 5 cents to 10 cents a bushel under the ruling price in the central markets. At the present time since he can at once make a hedging sale by telegraph on the Chicago Board of Trade, the dealer will buy the farmer's wheat on a margin of 1 cent a bushel or less. The difference between these two margins redounds to the benefit of the farmer.

The same thing holds true of the stock market. The small investor, whose money is absolutely needed for the carrying out of many of our great enterprise, is entirely at a loss as to where to invest his money unless he has the guidance of some expert market opinion. If there were no organized market for securities in which men were constantly buying and selling in the effort to take every advantage of the fluctuations, many men would have to make a large part of their investments in complete ignorance of the nature of the enterprise in which they were investing. It may be said that they do this to-day, which is true enough in the sense that the average small investor in railroad or industrial securities knows nothing about the business or the possibilities of dividends from any knowledge of his own. What he does know, however, is that a large body of shrewd and capable men on the lookout for any change in industrial conditions have, by their purchases and sales, registered a price which represents the market opinion as to the value of that security. He therefore can buy it with a fair degree of confidence. Furthermore, the slightest change in the conditions of the company in question will be reflected by a change in the price of the security. If the market is continuous, and no market for securities can be continuous except a speculative market, he has the opportunity to change his investment at any moment and always at the market price, which reflects the opinion of the moment.

It is evident, then, that this division of society into the speculative and the conservative elements, although it may bring havoc to certain persons in the speculative group, has very important advantages in the opportunities for careful and intelligent action on the part of the conservative group. In so far as we do away with business which is purely speculative, we make all business, whether in the purchase of commodities or investment of capital, more speculative than it otherwise would be.

There are those who fail to see altogether the natural function played by speculation in meeting these inevitable price fluctuations, because they are convinced that speculation is itself the cause of price fluctuation. Nothing could be more misleading than this latter statement. It is true that when speculation is active it has its effect on prices, which sometimes rise or fall because of purely speculative elements, but primarily the speculation is the result and not the cause of fluctuating prices. This again is proved by the fact that speculation only arises in the case of certain articles or securities. It is impossible to artificially start speculation in a security the value of which is naturally stable. It would be possible to do this if it were true that speculation is the cause of the unstability of prices. Of the many securities dealt in on the New York Stock Exchange relatively few are what is known as "active stocks." The majority of them are dealt in to a much smaller extent and are subject to much smaller fluctuations. The reason for this is that the character of these securities is better known, their likelihood of yielding dividends much more certain. Many securities which are now inactive were once the most popular for speculative purposes. The reason of the change is not that the whim of the speculator has changed, but simply that they have passed through the ordeal and have proved themselves of stable value.

Many securities which are now active will doubtless go through the same career.

It is perhaps a debatable question whether or not speculation tends, on the whole, to lessen the extent of fluctuations. It doubtless increases their frequency, but theoretically the effect should be to lessen the extremes. In an active speculative market there are always those who, when stocks are soaring, keep a cool head and look forward to the time when the reaction must come. These men are the much maligned short sellers, who, by selling short, keep the price from going as high as it otherwise would. On the other hand, when the slump does come, stocks do not go as low as they otherwise would, because the covering sales of the short sellers come in as a supporting factor in the market. The claim is made, on the other hand, that the excitement of speculation, and sometimes the manipulation of big speculators, will lead to extreme prices in one direction or the other which would not arise under much more normal conditions. It is very hard to prove statistically how far speculation acts in the way of moderating fluctuations, because of the many other factors that affect values at any particular time.

On the whole, the argument is in favor of those who believe that speculation tends to lessen the extremes of variation. Certainly the worst cases of highly inflated values, as also of complete collapses, have come in the case of securities not dealt in on the stock exchange. In this connection valuable testimony comes from Germany. The act of 1896 forbade all sales for future delivery in the matter of mining and industrial securities. This did not stop speculation in such securities by any means, but it changed the method by which such speculation was carried on; it hampered the normal trading in such securities in the speculative market, and, whether or not solely on account of this hindrance, the succeeding years show much greater fluctuations in prices than had occurred before. That this hindrance was in large measure the cause of the wider fluctuations may be pretty readily accepted when we recognize that the Government itself, in its explanation of the bill introduced last November to repeal this prohibition, stated as its reason for doing so the fact that the prohibition had entirely failed in its purpose and had led to even more speculative fluctuations than had occurred before. Certainly the German Government, in view of all that it has done in the way of restriction, can hardly be accused of being a mere advocate of the stock exchange. What is more noteworthy in this regard is the effect of changing from a broad and continuous market to a restricted market. Not only in the case of those securities in which such dealings were forbidden, but in the case of many other securities as well, it was shown in time of crisis that the fluctuations in Berlin were much more severe than in London or Paris. In the absence of evidence to the contrary it may be assumed that the restricted character of the German stock market, brought about by repressive legislation, was the reason for this condition.

The real problem, then, regarding the regulation of speculation is whether or not it is possible to take such action as will secure the benefits of speculation and exclude its evils. This involves two separate problems—first, as to how far certain kinds of speculative business may be set off as undesirable; secondly, how far certain classes of speculators may be excluded.

If we attempt to discriminate between different speculative transactions, we at once meet a difficulty, namely, that so far as the form of the transaction is concerned there is absolutely no difference between the form adopted in desirable and undesirable transactions, or, as is sometimes said, "legitimate" and "illegitimate" speculation. Criticism is commonly made in reference to three points: The delivery of the article, short selling, and buying and selling on margin.

A. It is commonly supposed that delivery is not made in the case of a large proportion of transactions of the stock and produce exchanges. This is a decided error. Anyone who buys or sells on the regular exchange enters into definite property obligations. If he buys wheat for future delivery, he is absolutely obliged to receive the wheat when the delivery of it comes round, unless he exercises the privilege, which prevails everywhere in the business world, of transferring his contract to another party. He may of course sell the same quantity of wheat before the delivery time, in which case the person from whom he buys may deliver direct to the person to whom he has sold. In the same way, if he has sold wheat, he is absolutely obliged to make delivery and must purchase an equivalent amount for the same delivery in order to make good on his contract. In the case of stocks immediate delivery is required on the New York Exchange, and, whatever the outsider may think he is doing, as a matter of fact his broker is obliged to receive the stocks and make payment in case of a purchase, or to borrow the stocks and make delivery in case of a sale. There is no such thing known on any of the reputable exchanges as a contract under which delivery is waived.

Furthermore, exactly the same form of contract is employed by those who are buying for investment as by those who are buying for speculative purposes. It is impossible to put the finger upon any single transaction within the business series and say this is legitimate and this is illegitimate. One obstacle to an understanding of this lies in the way in which transactions are cleared through the clearing house; but an attempt to prove the legitimacy of the method of clearing would be useless to one who does not understand the way in which bank transactions, for instance, are cleared. It is as ridiculous to say that the clearing of many contracts for delivery on the stock exchange, and the settlement of these transactions by a payment of balances, both of stocks and cash, indicates that such transactions are not of a perfectly genuine nature as it is to assert that because the clearing house for the New York banks arranges for an offset of checks and the payment of only a small balance of cash, therefore the banking business in New York is not concerned with legitimate business. It is sometimes pointed out that the total sales of wheat, for instance, are greatly in excess of the annual crop, and therefore that a large quantity of this must be mere "wind."

The same thing can of course be proved regarding any other commodity. The number of overcoats sold, by multiplying the sales of manufacturers to jobbers, jobbers to wholesalers, wholesalers to retailers, and retailers to consumers, may be shown to be several times the number of overcoats produced in the country, and it would be as sensible to say that a large part of the transactions in overcoats represents simply "wind." Speculation could continue without a clearing house, and, in fact, the New York Stock Exchange was very late in adopting this device. Nothing as to the legitimacy or illegitimacy of transactions can be determined from the mere adoption of an up-to-date business method.

B. It should hardly be necessary to prove that short selling is an entirely honorable and absolutely necessary practice. It is strange, however, that even in fairly intelligent publications we should so frequently see the statement that "it is wrong to sell something which the seller does not own." As a matter of fact, this is a most common practice in all lines of business. The manufacturer sells goods before he has produced them, the builder contracts to deliver a house at a certain date which he not only does not possess, but for which he has not even bought the raw materials or hired the labor. The clergyman contracts to deliver the sermon for a price, although the sermon has not been written. If contracts for future delivery were to be limited in all cases to delivery of things already in possession of the contracting party, business would be hampered in a thousand different ways. There is absolutely no reason why a wheat dealer or a flour dealer should not make a contract for the delivery of his commodity three months from date knowing perfectly well that he can fulfill the contract by securing the necessary article. To call this ethically wrong is simply ridiculous.

Furthermore, the very advantages of a speculative market which have been enumerated above require active short selling as an essential part of the machinery of a continuous market If there was no bear element in the market to offset the bull element, none of the beneficial effects of speculation on prices could be secured. Contrast, for instance, real-estate speculation with speculation in securities or commodities. In the case of land speculation there can be no short selling, because each piece of real estate has a separate character. Consequently, we see again and again the evils which result from an entirely uncontrolled land boom sending prices to an absurd point, followed by a sudden and immediate collapse, at the end of which prices go down without limit. In the case of organized speculation with short selling, however, this is impossible. Before boom prices get too high the short seller is active in making sales which check the advance, and when a slump comes these same men support the market by their covering transactions. The short seller is not only a justifiable figure in the speculative market, but an absolute essential one.

C. Margin speculation has unquestionably many evils. Men with gambling instincts can use margin speculation to play for higher stakes than if they were limited to the amount of their capital, and unquestionably this practice has become dangerously widespread On the other hand, it is useless and undesirable to attempt to make a distinction between transactions according as to whether they are carried out on a deposit of margin or not. This again is a perfectly legitimate practice in other fields. Many a poor man buys his house by a payment of a margin and giving a mortgage for the balance. Our whole system of transactions on credit would have to be given up if we were to lay down as a general principle the rule that no man should buy anything which he is not able to pay cash for on the spot. Perfectly legitimate transactions can be made either in real estate or potatoes or wheat or securities by the payment of only a portion of the purchase price at the time the contract is made. What actually takes place is that the balance of the purchase price has to be borrowed. The broker carries the stocks for the customer and charges him interest, and he in turn probably has to borrow on the collateral of these stocks in order to get the funds himself. Speculation on margin is nothing more than speculation on borrowed means, and, even if the practice of buying on margin were not allowed, the same thing could be accomplished by borrowing money and purchasing outright. The present method, to be sure, facilitates the practice, but there is no essential distinction between the two.

Nothing that has been said above is intended in any way to justify bucket-shop trading. Bucket shops are betting establishments pure and simple, with no actual delivery and no restriction on the character of dealings. By allowing "customers" to deal in 5 or 10 share lots on a 1 per cent or 2 per cent margin they enormously increase those evils, which are bad enough already in the case of the stock exchanges. This evil of speculating on margin is largely a matter of degree. To put up 1 per cent in cash and borrow 99 per cent is, on the face of it, an irresponsible practice. It may well be questioned if the 10 per cent margin of the stock exchange is not lower than should be allowed. Probably if the members of that institution could bring themselves to change their rules to the extent of requiring 25 per cent in all cases, they would remove a good deal of the evil without seriously hampering legitimate business.

Great then as the evils are which result from the facility with which men of small means can borrow through this practice of using the purchased securities as collateral, there is no way whatever of distinguishing the desirable from the undesirable transactions on this basis. No general legal regulation could be made which would not severely hamper many kinds of perfectly legitimate business on the stock exchange and in commercial markets everywhere.

It will be seen then that since the form of transaction is in all cases the same, any attempt to discriminate between them would be fraught with very grave danger. Furthermore, it should not be forgotten that there is very close connection between speculation and what some people would call "real commerce" in distinction to speculation. No one can properly understand the real meaning of the speculative market who can not grasp the idea that it is commerce which makes speculation and that speculation can not exist apart from genuine business. On the contrary, speculation and the machinery of the speculative market have arisen as devices for facilitating real commerce. Consequently a restriction of the speculative market almost always involves a curtailment of trade in real commodities. The illustrations of this, historically, are numberless. Back in the fourteenth century it is reported that the town authorities of Yarmouth attempted to stop speculative jobbing in herring, with the result that the whole herring business—that is, the commerce in real herring, left the town of Yarmouth and went to neighboring towns where methods of business were unrestricted. From that time to the present similar instances all point in the same direction. The coffee business was at one time centered in the city of Havre. Interference there with the freedom of speculative transactions drove the business to Hamburg, and the interference with speculation in Germany in the last ten years has tended to reduce the importance of Hamburg as a center for the real coffee trade, and to increase the importance of London. Ten years ago Hamburg did twice the business of London. To-day London does more business than Hamburg.

In the same way the speculation in securities is bound up in the closest way with the whole matter of the investment of capital and the accumulation of the necessary means for carrying out great industrial enterprises. Just in so far as the stock market has a speculative clientele, it becomes an open and broad market; and just in proportion as it becomes an open and broad market, it facilitates the disposal of great issues of stocks and bonds which are necessary for the carrying out of the industrial undertakings of the present age. The limitation of this broad market must inevitably prove a hindrance in the financing of the most legitimate enterprises, and any interference with the freedom of speculation must inevitably lessen openness of the market.

The conclusion from the above is that if we attempt to secure the benefits, while restricting the evils, of speculation, through discriminating against certain kinds of transactions, we find it impossible to really discriminate in any way according to the form of the transaction, while inevitably, by restricting the forms of commerce and of commercial methods, we put a severe handicap on entirely legitimate enterprise.

If we turn now to the second problem under this head, namely, the question of excluding a certain type of speculators, we can not fail to realize that if this can possibly be done it would be from many points of view a very desirable action to take. The question, however, is an extremely difficult one. What rules can we lay down as to the fact that John Doe shall be allowed to speculate and Richard Roe shall not? One of the most interesting facts of the German act was the serious effort which was made to accomplish this result. No more genuine effort in this regard was ever made, and yet the act has proved a confessed failure in this regard. The scheme adopted was that all people wishing to deal in the speculative markets should have their names registered in an exchange register. It was then provided that all transactions carried out for unregistered persons should not be binding, and the customer could escape the obligation by advancing the defense of wager. It was supposed that this would have the result that the outsider would not dare to publicly announce himself as a speculator through registration, and the broker would not dare to deal with an unregistered party for fear of loss.

It must be admitted that this feature, among others of the act, seriously reduced the amount of business done, but there is every reason to suppose that it checked legitimate business fully as much, if not more, than the kind that the reformer wished to exclude. In the first place, it was certainly a high price to pay for the desired result, even if accomplished. It had the effect of stimulating fraudulent speculation in the place of honest speculation. As a matter of fact, the outsider did not stay away from the speculative market, but found that the brokers inevitably were obliged to take their chances in order to carry on business. Hence, it simply had the effect of stimulating the whole dishonest element to enter into speculative transactions, since, in case of gain, they could claim the profits and, in case of loss, could throw the defense of wager in the broker's face. In fact, under this act of course it would be possible for a man to play both sides of the market and take his profits in the one case and refuse to meet his losses in the other. It is very questionable whether the best way of stopping gambling is to publicly inculcate the principle of "welshing" on gambling bets. Certainly the effect on both trade and morals seems to have been undesirable.

In the next place one effect of this provision was to lead to great loss of trade on the German exchanges in favor of foreign exchanges. Statistics show that the securities held abroad by leading banking and brokerage houses for their customers increased in a few years all the way from threefold to fivefold, according to the individual case. Enormous sums were put into speculative mining shares abroad by the German speculating public who were hampered in their enterprises at home. In the same way the number of agents of foreign brokerage houses on the German exchanges increased rapidly, showing that that section of the public whom the law desired to exclude were simply finding methods of carrying out their intentions in other ways.

Again, a result of this restriction of business was to make the extremes of speculation even greater. In the boom of 1900 the prices of mining and industrial shares in which speculation had been prohibited went soaring as the outside public bought recklessly by roundabout methods. The prices were doubtless higher than they would have been had there been an unrestricted bear element in the market to oppose this bull movement. On the other hand, when the collapse came in 1901, the resulting fall and the consequent losses were all the greater. This, again, I believe, was due to the fact that the market was restricted and there was no sufficient force to withstand the panic.

Considerations like this indicate a fact which is sometimes forgotten even by those who fully appreciate the necessity of the speculative market. This fact is that speculation, even on the part of the public, with all its evils, has a very important beneficial effect. Unless the public speculates to some extent the market will be not only very restricted, but will be in consequence much more open to manipulation. The bigger and broader the market the less chances there are for rigging prices. It may seem a very high price to pay for the open market that the speculative spirit should continue on the part of the public, but it would be a mistake to suppose that speculation can be confined to a few great operators and still offer the benefits which the present market gives. This again has been a noticeable feature in the case of the German market. The small brokers and bankers have been more and more crowded to the wall, and business had been centered increasingly in the great banks. There are doubtless other reasons for this, but the difficulties of carrying out transactions on the exchange stimulated the dealings with the large banks who carry great masses of securities and can make their offsets directly in the bank, so that the control of a few institutions over the prices of the stock market is much greater there than would be the case if a wide public was included.

The conclusion then in this regard is that, first, any method of discriminating between individual speculators is extremely difficult and on the whole contrary to all our American ideas. We have never yet gone so far as to restrict individuals by law from buying any kind of property, whether expensive cigars for consumption, or houses to live in, or stocks for speculation, on the ground that they were not able to afford such indulgences. To make it unlawful for one man to buy because he has only $5,000 a year and lawful for another man to do exactly the same thing because he has $10,000 a year would be a degree of paternalism which, if effectual, would be extremely exasperating. Secondly, as shown by German experience, any measures that could be devised are almost certain to prove unsuccessful in accomplishing their ends. The chances are that restriction will much more seriously lessen the amount of legitimate transactions than that it will keep out the incorrigible and undesirable element.

It may seem that what has been said above shows a sad lack of appreciation of the harm which comes from irresponsible speculation by the outside public. It is not, however, in proportion to our feelings on this subject that intelligent men will advocate legislation, but in proportion as they feel that such legislation will be successful. From a study of the effects of speculation and the effects of all suggested methods of controlling it, the conclusion is almost irresistible that legitimate and illegitimate transactions are so closely bound together and the whole business of speculation is so closely connected with the interests of actual commerce that any interference with the delicate machinery by the blundering fingers of the law will diminish the beneficial elements of speculation without effectually diminishing its evils. The recent suggestion of Governor Hughes, that we should "ascertain the manner in which illegitimate transactions may be prevented and legitimate business safeguarded," is not so simple as it sounds.

Improvements of this kind must come by means of a very different movement, and this movement must be in the nature of increased intelligence and a higher moral standard on the part of both the speculating public and on the part of the brokers themselves. It is perhaps too much to hope that the speculating public, which is recruited year by year by the growth of new generations, will ever become more conservative. It may at least be hoped, however, that a more public-spirited standard may be gradually adopted by the fraternity of brokers and that those who consciously allow customers to plunge beyond their means and to run the dreadful risks of bankruptcy and embezzlement will be so ostracized by their fellows that the practice will be restricted from the inability to find men to carry out transactions of this kind. As to how this is to be brought about, whether possibly by the adoption of new rules by the exchanges or by gradual increase of the better and more conservative element in those bodies, it is impossible to discuss here. A hint was given above as to a possible change in rules regarding margins. The plain fact remains, however, that the solution lies in the reformation from within rather than from without.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that the gentleman from Massachusetts be given five minutes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if those favoring the amendment have more time, I want to close the argument.

The CHAIRMAN. Those who favor the amendment have seven minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, in so far as the question of revenues raised by States might be affected by this bill, I suppose one State would be entitled to as much consideration as another, and in Tennessee we do not raise as much as $5,000,000 taxation on the transfer of stocks, but our taxes there are raised in the main from the men who till the soil and raise the things the price of which is affected by the practice which this bill is designed to try to prevent. [Applause.]

Now, amid all the wit, wisdom, and worth of the arguments that have been presented here, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there remains nothing but one simple question, and that is, Does Congress favor or is it opposed to stock gambling and dealing in futures? I am aware of the fact that learned gentlemen, gentlemen as honest as I am, honest as are my colleagues who favor this amendment here, defend the practice and the policy of future dealing for reasons which they express with much force as well as with much earnestness.

I take a different view. The people whose toil and whose sweat produce the things that are dealt with in this measure take a different view. They may be wrong about it. It may be that it is good philosophy and good economic wisdom that, in order to produce a stable market, a man shall sell that which he has not and never expects to have to a man that does not want it and never expects to take it, in order to enable the man who really has something to sell it to the man who really wants it; but to that economic law I can not subscribe. I do not care to discuss that question further, however.

There is running through the RECORDS of the Congress of the United States for almost twenty years much of learning (more than I could give if I had a long time on the question) on both sides. But the thing to which I venture to call the attention of Members now is that this amendment can not in any way affect an innocent man or an innocent transaction. Every doubt that there is as to the effect of the amendment, it is in favor of the illegitimate transaction, and no legitimate transaction can come within its scope or reach. Gentlemen have suggested that we are moving hastily.

I again challenge the attention of Members to the fact that they can not go home and say to their constituents that they voted against this for fear they might act hastily. Why, on the 22d of January, 1908, almost eleven months ago, two weeks before this section would have been reached in the common order of procedure, I gave notice that this amendment would be offered, stating that it would be offered in good faith and that it was offered in order that gentlemen might familiarize themselves with it and be ready to consider it. When we had reached one paragraph, before the point at which the amendment would come, the bill was withdrawn from the consideration of the House, and was just revived on yesterday. So that for almost eleven months—during all the vacation—this amendment, in the exact verbiage in which it exists now, has been before the House for their consideration, in order that gentlemen might advocate it upon its merits and oppose it upon its demerits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. I believe five minutes extra were allowed to those against the amendment. I ask, therefore, for three minutes more for those of us who favor it.

Mr. COCKRAN. I hope it will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, that amendment was then printed in the RECORD as it is now offered. It was then stated it would be offered as it was offered on yesterday. Therefore let no gentleman say that there has not been an opportunity to study the verbiage of this amendment.

Now, I have no pride of authorship in this matter. All that I wish, all that I desire, is to have legislation upon this subject-matter. I have not gone into the delicate questions of the powers of the Federal Government over interstate commerce. All that this amendment is leveled at is the use of the mails, and over the mails the Federal Government unquestionably has supreme and exclusive power.

There is not in this amendment a single paragraph, there is not a construction possible, which a gentleman can say will hurt any legitimate interests, and the question is between those who favor illegitimate speculation and those who are against illegitimate speculation.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. To which committee has the gentleman's bill been referred?

Mr. GARRETT. To the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union eleven months ago. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Has it been reported from a committee?

Mr. GARRETT. I am seeking to have this committee report it, and I hope the gentleman will assist me in having it done.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What I am asking is whether any committee has reported upon this amendment?

Mr. GARRETT. No committee has reported on it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In this eleven months the gentleman has spoken of, has the gentleman had an opportunity to have it taken up before the proper committee?

Mr. GARRETT. The amendment, introduced as a bill, has been before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, but there has been no hearing upon it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And the Committee on Agriculture has not taken it up, either?

Mr. GARRETT. There are bills before the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Was there any action taken upon them?

Mr. GARRETT. The question has been before the House and before the Committee on Revision of the Laws for the last eleven months.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What is the reason these committees did not take up this important subject?

Mr. GARRETT. Perhaps the gentleman knows; I do not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not, and I am asking the gentleman for information in good faith.

Mr. GARRETT. Is the gentleman a member of the Committee on Revision of the Laws?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, I do not know why the bill has not been reported.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that is all I care to say.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] be permitted to extend his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. I make the request that I may be permitted to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a similar request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair would like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the friends of the proposition have still about two minutes' time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, if there is time, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How is it possible for the publisher of a newspaper receiving stock reports through the Associated Press or otherwise to know whether a transaction named in the stock report comes within this provision or not?

Mr. GARRETT. He would not, of course, be guilty under those circumstances if he did not know. The word "knowingly" is in the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that the amendment not only prohibits the mailing of a newspaper containing such an item, but imposes a penalty upon anyone who deposits such a newspaper in the mails.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The amendment provides that whoever shall "knowingly" deposit or cause to be deposited, or "knowingly" send or cause to be sent, and so forth. Knowingly means willfully. Of course if they innocently and unintentionally publish something, that would not violate the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that of the thousands of newspapers published, the publisher or the editor has no knowledge whether these market quotations of stock or produce are actual transactions or future transactions. Yet a very large portion of the circulation of papers published in towns of moderate size throughout the country is to readers in the surrounding country through the mails. I can not see how it would be possible to protect a newspaper under those circumstances. The postmaster, acting as censor, may hold up the whole outside circulation of a paper because a market quotation does not represent an actual transaction.

Mr. GARRETT. If there be any doubt on that question at all, I am willing to accept any change in the verbiage, in so far as I can. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think there is any danger in the matter he suggests.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It will be open to amendment, and can go to conference and be changed there.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7777. An act to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its sorrow on account of the death of Hon. GEORGE W. SMITH, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be suspended in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the widow and family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

CODIFICATION OF THE PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I trust that this new section, presented under the guise of an amendment, to be known as section 215a, will be rejected by the House without any consideration of the question upon its merits, upon the principle tacitly assented to by the House when this bill was under consideration before that every amendment to bring within the purview of the criminal law an entirely different class of persons was not proper legislation on this bill for the revision and codification of the laws; that any attempt to create a new statutory offense was beyond the power of this committee to report, and ought to be rejected by the House when presented as an amendment.

Now, it has been said here that this bill has been amended. It has been said that this bill will be amended. It has been said that this bill is before the House for amendment. That is true. There have been amendments added to this bill, and there will be other amendments added to it for the purpose of making the meaning clearer or of adding something that was clearly within the intention of Congress in passing the section.

To give an illustration, when we had before us a section punishing counterfeiting, and that section enumerated certain securities of the United States, the counterfeiting of which was made a crime, we added gold and silver certificates, because at the time of the passage of the original act such certificates were not issued by the United States, and their counterfeiting was therefore unprovided for; but they have since become a part of our national currency. To the section prohibiting the destruction of telegraph lines we have added telephone lines. Indeed, whenever any provision could be added to a section that made it clearer or one that extended its provisions to matters clearly within the purpose of the section, and sometimes where it limited or changed the punishment, those things have been regarded by the revision committee and by this House sitting as a Committee of the Whole House, as subject-matters fully and fairly before the House for consideration and action. I want to say that there has not been a single new substantive offense created by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws in this bill or one adopted by this House that had not previously been submitted to a committee and reported upon favorably by that committee. The only new section that has been added creating a new statutory offense was the section introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], respecting the giving out of information from the Agricultural Department in Washington respecting crops.

I explained to the House at that time that the bill had been reported on once favorably by the Judiciary Committee of the House; that it had passed this House and had gone to the Senate; and that it had been reported favorably by the Commission for the Revision of the Laws; and that it was incorporated originally in the bill submitted to this committee for consideration; and was stricken out by this committee because the House had afterwards rescinded its action in approving the bill. Under those conditions it was appropriately and properly a subject to be brought before the House by an amendment. With that exception, no new legislation of any kind of the character proposed here—and by that I mean the creation of any new statutory offense—has been attempted by this committee or permitted by this House.

Now, when this bill was before the House last winter it was tacitly agreed upon by the House, sitting as a Committee of the Whole, that no matter how desirable the proposed new section might be, it ought not to be put upon this bill under the guise of an amendment. We have had submitted to us to-day, Mr. Chairman, two new suggestions respecting methods of legislation. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who introduced this amendment, said that while he did not get a report from any committee he published the proposed section in the RECORD, and thereby gave notice to the House of its provisions. Other gentlemen say that while they do not believe that this bill will accomplish the purpose desired; that they do not understand it; that it is imperfect; but that they are willing that it should pass the House in this imperfect form and be afterwards perfected in the conference committee.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that these are two methods of legislation that have never before been adopted by this House, and I hope will not be adopted now.

[The time of Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania having expired, by unanimous consent his time was extended five minutes.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill—and in speaking about the bill itself I call the attention of the House to the provisions of the bill solely on the ground that I desire to emphasize the objections that I now make to this method of legislation—this bill has been introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee; and when asked in regard to its provisions he frankly told us that he did not know very much about it.

Mr. GARRETT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I certainly have not stated that.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman was interrogated only a few moments ago respecting the provisions of the bill as to what would be the effect on a newspaper publishing the stock reports, and the gentleman frankly admitted that he did not know. He said that if it did prohibit it he would accept an amendment that would cure it.

Mr. GARRETT. On the contrary, I gave it as my opinion that it would not, but that if there was doubt about it—I did not assume to know all about the question.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Well, I do not mean any more than that. The gentleman said that he was not clear in regard to it.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania mean to say that there should be no legislation in the House except where a man who offers it is possessed of absolute wisdom?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; but I say that there should be no legislation until there had been a full understanding of the power conferred upon the courts by the bill and after it has been carefully and exhaustively considered.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has not this been well considered in the lottery cases and other cases where the matter was excluded from the mails?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. If I had time I would show that there was no analogy between the lottery cases and the case attempted to be provided for in this bill. That is one difficulty with this bill, that it is drawn on the plan of the lottery legislation. A lottery is an iniquitous thing; it is in itself clearly and wholly illegal. It is not associated with or intermingled or identified with any important industry of the country which it requires careful consideration to separate, such as is the conduct of a so-called "bucket shop."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This provides against sending gambling contracts through the mail.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes; but there is no possible analogy between that and the practice that this bill seeks to correct.

Now, many gentlemen favoring the bill differ respecting its provisions; some gentlemen do not understand it, others think it goes too far; other gentlemen have said that the bill does not go far enough, and the utmost confusion of opinion exists respecting it, and the fact alone establishes absolutely my contention that we are not able to perfect it in the House, and that it should be considered only after a report thereon by an appropriate committee. President Roosevelt's message on this subject has been introduced. I want to call your attention to the fact that the President especially urged upon Congress careful consideration of the subject in order that a clear distinction might be drawn between the legitimate and illegitimate contracts, and that this bill utterly fails to comprehend or define this distinction.

Reference has also been made to the action of Governor Hughes, of New York, to show the importance of congressional action upon this subject. I would that I had time to call attention to that message or that letter appointing a commission, comprised of the ablest men in civic life in New York, for the purpose of doing exactly what we ought to do here before we attempt any legislation—to draw a clear line of demarcation between legitimate and illegitimate transactions on the stock exchanges. Without that knowledge, without that information, with the grave doubts that exist in the minds of those who favor the bill as to what it will do, we are asked precipitately to create a new offense that will subject all the newspapers of the United States, the bankers and the brokers of the United States to the operation of a criminal law, the force, intent, effect, and purpose of which is not appreciated at this time.

Upon the necessity for deliberate action and careful consideration, I desire to read an editorial in the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, of this morning upon the subject of the Hughes commission, which language is, I think, absolutely appropriate to our duty respecting this new section of law proposed:

INQUIRY BEFORE ACTION.

Governor Hughes, of New York, gives another example of his characteristic sanity in his appointment of an expert commission to inquire into "the facts in relation to speculation in securities and commodities," with a view to suggesting any means by which "illegitimate business may be prevented and legitimate business safeguarded." As he has heretofore said, Governor Hughes has "no sympathy with fanciful schemes for the regulation of business with arbitrary legislation." In the vast commercial transactions of New York, which represent the activities of the whole country, it is most important that any legislation affecting business should be the result of serious study and that "we should neither threaten business stability by ill-considered measures nor, on the other hand, invite agitation or impair confidence by ignoring abuses and by failing to provide suitable correction."

This expresses well the principle so generally neglected in all the impulsive and violent legislation of the past few years. No man has set a higher standard of business integrity than Governor Hughes, and he is one of the few men in responsible position who has had the courage to stand firmly against ignorant attempts at "regulation" whose effect could be only destructive. That the methods in vogue in Wall street are susceptible of reformatory regulation is generally conceded, but Governor Hughes does not propose to go at them with an ax. The men whom he has invited to consider this whole field, to set forth the facts and recommend the remedies, are men of the very highest standing and of recognized integrity of judgment. There is probably no man in the country whose impartial grasp upon this whole subject is wider and firmer than that of Horace White, who heads the list, and with him are associated the former mayor of Brooklyn, a former justice of the supreme court, the state superintendent of banking, the professor of political economy at Columbia, two bankers, two lawyers, and the director of the People's Institute—a commission whose conclusions will command attention and respect, not only in New York but in every financial center.

Governor Hughes has thus reversed the practice which has recently been usual of legislating first and inquiring afterwards. The subject is too complex and important to be treated on that plan. Legislation affecting business, to be effective or otherwise than harmful, must be based, not upon prejudice and passion or the mere desire for "righteousness," but upon the deliberate judgment that can proceed only from exact knowledge.

I ask the committee to report the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT) there were—ayes 73, noes 85.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered. Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania and Mr. GARRETT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 218. [All kinds of poison, and all articles and compositions containing poison, and all poisonous animals, insects, and reptiles, and explosives of all kinds, and inflammable materials, and infernal machines, and mechanical, chemical, or other devices or compositions which may ignite or explode, and all disease germs or scabs, and all other natural or artificial articles, compositions, or materials of whatever kind which may kill, or in any wise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, whether sealed as first-class matter or not, are hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post-office or station thereof, nor by any letter carrier: but the Postmaster-General shall permit the transmission in the mails, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe as to preparation and packing, of any articles hereinbefore described which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at any place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, unless in accordance with the rules and regulations hereby authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at any place to which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, whether transmitted in accordance with the rules and regulations authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General or not, with the design, intent, or purpose to kill, or in any wise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 218, on page 116, in line 8, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

In line 12 substitute a colon for the period and add the following:

"Provided, That all spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind are hereby declared to be nonmailable and shall not be deposited in or carried through the mails."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment that was offered by myself to the Committee on Revision when we were considering this section. It was not adopted by the committee, and I stated on a former occasion, when I discussed the subject at some length, that I would offer this amendment on the floor of the House. The first amendment which was read is a substitution of the word "may" for the word "shall." That was the original law, and I take it there will be no objection to that. The real essence of the amendment is in the proviso that is embodied in the second amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this covers a defect in the postal laws of the United States that is very much needed. The department, by rule and regulation, has refused to ship liquor through the mail. However, there is no statute on the statute books making it positively unlawful or making it a crime to do so. This proviso gives them the authority of law to prohibit carrying liquors in the mails and makes it a penal offense for that to be done. I think there should be no objection to it. I hope there will be none.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that under existing postal regulations intoxicating liquors are not permitted to be sent through the mail, and in view of the fact that this is a new section in this case, that it attempts to prohibit by penalties the attempts to mail nonmailable matter, which is made nonmailable by law, plus postal regulations, I see no objection to that amendment, and in view of the further fact that this House on the last postal appropriation bill appended practically that condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition offered by the gentleman from Tennessee contains two distinct amendments, but, if there is no objection, the Chair will put the question on both. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendments read again for the benefit of the House.

The Clerk again read the amendments.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to ask a question. As I understand it, the mailing of spirituous liquors is now prohibited by regulation of the department.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And it is now proposed to make it a law, a penal offense?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; this amendment if adopted will make it a penal offense by statute, and provide by law that this matter shall be nonmailable and shall not be carried through the mails.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The practice of the department is now to exclude that?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; and this gives authority of law to do what they are doing now without authority of law.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The existing regulation is that intoxicating liquors, ardent, vinous, spirituous or malt, poisonous, explosive or inflammable articles, and so forth, shall not be permitted in the mail. Therefore this law is only enacting existing postal regulations.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say that is a regulation that is now enforced, and to-morrow it may be abrogated?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes; and that is the reason we want to make it a law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In addition to that, it is put in the post-office bill, and it may be left out at the next session. Let us make it a statute so that no Postmaster-General, whether Democrat or Republican, will be able to put it out.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is what we all want to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DRISCOLL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask a question of the chairman of the committee in relation to this matter. I wish to ask if this section 218 is all new matter.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; I want to explain; it is not new matter, although it is published in italics. It is existing law, plus existing postal regulations; but in the Fifty-sixth Congress there was a bill introduced and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, unanimously favorably reported, containing this provision. It is new law in the sense that we have not had any penal clause of that kind before, but it is not new law in the sense that it is new matter that has not been favorably reported by a committee of this House.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Has it ever been passed by the House?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; it was not reached.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not a regulation?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It is an existing regulation, and is in this exact language.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It is not printed in the book here in any form.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No. Let me explain, and I am glad of having the opportunity to explain the matter. That print of existing law that appears on the opposite side of the report is a mistake and very misleading. What is printed on the opposite side is the postal law of 1872. The law of 1872 provided for three classes of mail matter; the first class consisted of letters, the second class consisted of regular periodical publications from established offices, and the third class consisted of what appears on the opposite page of the report. In 1879 that law was entirely superseded by a new division of mailable matter, and by that act Congress created four classes of mail matter. The first class consisted of letters and what is now known as "first-class postage;" the second class consisted of matters such as newpapers and periodicals issued from regularly established offices; the third class included circulars, pamphlets, proof sheets, and irregular publications; and the fourth class included what is printed on the opposite side, in section 20, viz:

Mailable matter of the fourth class shall embrace all matters not embraced in the first, second, or third class, which is not in its form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise damage the contents of a mail bag or harm the person of anyone engaged in the postal service, and is not above the weight provided by law.

This law superseded and repealed the classification of 1872, and it will be seen that existing law prohibits from the mail bags nothing excepting that which in its form is liable to injure the mail bags or harm persons handling the mails, but the act of 1879 was immediately supplemented by a postal regulation adopted by the department. Under these regulations intoxicating liquors were excluded from the mails and have never been permitted to pass through the mails, and therefore the section proposed takes existing law plus the regulations of the postal department, declares matter included therein shall be nonmailable, and attaches a penalty for its violation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It is a postal regulation.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes, and I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this section was submitted to the House and had a unanimously favorable report from a committee of the same.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What committee?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, may I make the further suggestion to the gentleman, my colleague from New York? If he will look in the large print at the second sentence after the first period in that section 3878, he will see that in the act of 1872 it was provided as follows:

All liquids, poisons, explosive materials, and obscene books shall be excluded from the mails.

Now, when they created the fourth class of matter they divided up those things. What they did with that particular clause I have never been able to find out, and I am not satisfied it was repealed, but the department settled the matter by incorporating it substantially into its regulations, and now the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee puts it back into the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 225. Whoever shall make, allege, or present, or cause to be made, alleged, or presented, or assist, aid, or abet in making, alleging, or presenting any claim or application for indemnity for the loss of any registered letter, parcel, package, or other article or matter, or the contents thereof, knowing such claim or application to be false, fictitious, or fraudulent; or whoever for the purpose of obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or approval of any such claim or application, shall make or use, or cause to be made or used, any false statement, certificate, affidavit, or deposition; or whoever shall knowingly and willfully misrepresent, misstate, or conceal any material fact or circumstance in respect of any such claim or application for indemnity, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee where he gets this section. Is this regulation or law?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. There is an existing law that allows the man who mails a registered letter to collect a hundred dollars for the loss of that letter. He is obliged to make affidavit to the fact as to its value.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it a codification or new law?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; it is not new law in this sense. This also is a provision of law which was embodied in a bill which was introduced into this House and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and reported favorably upon in the Fifty-sixth Congress, but which never received action.

Mr. DRISCOLL. We have been standing by the committee in the thought that this is a codification or revision, and not for the purpose of making law and putting it in the books.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. There is nothing in this section which has not been introduced regularly, referred to a committee, and had a favorable report from the committee.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It strikes me that they should have shown where they take these sections from.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It is the act of March 3, 1903, which authorizes a payment not to exceed $100 as indemnity for the loss of a registered letter. Now, there is no law, and never has been one enacted by Congress, punishing the man who makes false affidavit respecting the value. The existence of this defect was recognized by the Post-Office Department, and a bill was introduced in the Sixtieth Congress embodying this provision. That bill was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and they made a unanimously favorable report recommending this section, among other sections. It never was acted upon, but it meets the requirement that this committee imposed, that it had received the favorable report of a committee of this House.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then, that is as far as it has gone? This section, as it is now, did receive a favorable report from a committee?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What committee?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It seems to me that they ought to put the information in here as to where they get it from. Generally they do.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do not want to mislead the gentleman. There really is no criminal law now on the subject. The one that would have been put on the opposite page would be the existing statute, section 1174, which authorizes the payment of not to exceed $100 for the loss of a registered letter. The Postmaster-General reported to the Fifty-sixth Congress that there existed a need for a law of this kind, that people were making claims and false affidavits as to the value of the material that was inclosed in the lost registered letters, and the department had no power whatever to punish them. Therefore this bill was introduced, sent to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and favorably reported.

Mr. PARSONS. May I make a suggestion to my colleague? Ordinarily the supposition would be that the statute in regard to perjury would cover such a case as this. But in going over the laws you will find that in some cases there is no statute that makes an offense of that which you would suppose had been made an offense. In those cases we have completed legislation by making them offenses.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask for information. I would like to know what the meaning of this section is, "or whoever shall knowingly or willfully mislead, misstate, or conceal any material fact or circumstance in respect to such claim," and so forth.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Now, in the first place, the claim that may be made is for the loss of a registered letter which, under the existing law of the United States, the United States is bound to make good. Now, the regulation, as I understand it, provides that before a man can receive that sum of $100 for a letter he must make an affidavit in which he sets forth the fact that the material in that letter was worth $100. Now, this provision is that if he makes any misstatement in that affidavit, or conceals any fact material to the determination of the real value by the department, he shall be liable under this section.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Well, that is all right. This does not state that, and I wondered if it applied to a third person.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; it is only in the affidavit made by claimant.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 228. Whoever shall make use of any official envelope, label, or indorsement authorized by law to avoid the payment of postage or registry fee on his private letter, packet, package, or other matter in the mail, shall be fined not more than $300.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not get a chance to ask a question about that section No. 228. I notice you have inserted here "or indorsement authorized by law." What does that mean?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. In addition to a Congressman's letter-franking privilege he has the privilege of a label or indorsement, whereby he can send documents and seeds and other things. This is intended to broaden existing law to include the abuse of these privileges.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Suppose there is something sent under a frank; this would reach that, would it?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. How is that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Suppose a member of Congress uses a frank to send a box of clothes?

Mr. MACON. Or send a cow.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The existing law on that point we did not dare change.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is the purpose of this to prevent the use of the official franks by members of Congress on matters that are not frankable and subject them to this penalty?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes; that is the existing law; we did not make it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But is it the existing law?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes; we have only enlarged it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. You say "label or indorsement authorized by law." It is not authorized by law. A Member of the House is not subject to any penalty for putting his frank on unfrankable matter.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I think he is.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Read on the other page the existing law:

And if any person shall make use of any such official envelope to avoid the payment of postage on his private letter, package, or other matter in the mail, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is the penalty envelope. Anybody using it not having the right to do so would be subject to the punishment under that law. If a member of Congress franks matter that is not frankable, do you say that provision applies to him? As I understand, it does not.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The reason I asked this question is because I have been informed that the Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department has decided otherwise, and that this does not extend to the improper use of the frank by members of Congress, either the House or Senate, but only the use of the penalty envelope. I want to be informed on this, and to know whether the gentleman thinks he is entirely clear on the matter.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Well, I supposed I was until the gentleman raised the question. I know we have not changed existing law at all, except to include "label or indorsement authorized by law." The language of the existing law is as clear as language can be in my mind, that any person who without authority uses an official envelope for the purpose of avoiding postage is liable to a penalty, and I supposed that "any person" would even include a Congressman who used the official envelope for the purpose of abusing the privilege, and would be liable to this penalty.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman who told him that a member of Congress could use his official frank without coming within that penalty?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That information is privileged.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman if it was any official of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will say very frankly to the gentleman that a member of Congress told me. The question was whether or not certain documents could be sent out under the frank of a Congressman. There was a discussion among several of us on the subject. Some took one side and some took the other. The following evening this gentleman, a member of Congress, said he had submitted the question to the Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department and got his opinion on it, and in that conversation with this official he voluntarily made the statement that there was no penalty provided against a member of Congress using his frank for unfrankable matter. I was surprised to know that was the law, and when we came to this I asked the question so as to be fully advised.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It is not the law. There is a penalty; and if the opinion of the Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department applied to the existing law it will apply to the amended law. We did not change it in this respect.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am not so sure about it. I think this section, as you have reported it, will change the law. I am perfectly willing it shall be. I simply wanted to call attention to the fact that you were changing existing law.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. We are not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read section 231.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there are two sections here with reference to the transportation of explosives which have been superseded by a later law. I rise to move to strike out the first two sections, because on May 20, 1908, an entirely new law was passed upon the subject. I therefore ask to strike out sections 233 and 234 and insert in their place the sections that I send to the desk to have read, which sections embrace the provisions of the new act.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I raise the point of order that that can not be done until the sections have been read.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to strike out the two sections and insert the sections which I have sent to the desk to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to strike out the two sections which have not been read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out sections 233 and 234 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 233. It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey any dynamite, gunpowder, or other explosive between a place in a foreign country and a place within or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or between a place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and a place in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, on any vessel or vehicle of any description operated by a common carrier, which vessel or vehicle is carrying passengers for hire: Provided, That it shall be lawful to transport on any such vessel or vehicle small-arms ammunition in any quantity, and such fuses, torpedoes, rockets, or other signal devices as may be essential to promote safety in operation, and properly packed and marked samples of explosives for laboratory examination, not exceeding a net weight of one-half pound each, and not exceeding 20 samples at one time in a single vessel or vehicle; but such samples shall not be carried in that part of a vessel or vehicle which is intended for the transportation of passengers for hire: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the transportation of military or naval forces with their accompanying munitions of war on passenger-equipment vessels or vehicles.

"SEC. 234. The Interstate Commerce Commission shall formulate regulations for the safe transportation of explosives, which shall be binding upon all common carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce which transport explosives by land. Said commission, of its own motion, or upon application made by any interested party, may make changes or modifications in such regulations, made desirable by new information or altered conditions. Such regulations shall be in accord with the best known practicable means for securing safety in transit, covering the packing, marking, loading, handling while in transit, and the precautions necessary to determine whether the material when offered is in proper condition to transport. Such regulations, as well as all changes or modifications thereof, shall take effect ninety days after their formation and publication by said commission, and shall be in effect until reversed, set aside, or modified.

"SEC. 234*a*. It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey, liquid nitroglycerine, fulminate in bulk in dry condition, or other like explosive, between a place in a foreign country and a place within or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or between a place in one State, Territory, or District of the United States or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and a place in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, on any vessel or vehicle of any description operated by a common carrier in the transportation of passengers or articles of commerce by land or water.

"SEC. 234*b*. Every package containing explosives or other dangerous articles when presented to a common carrier for shipment shall have plainly marked on the outside thereof the contents thereof; and it shall be unlawful for any person to deliver or cause to be delivered, to any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water, for interstate or foreign transportation, or to carry upon any vessel or vehicle engaged in interstate or foreign transportation, any explosive, or other dangerous article, under any false or deceptive marking, description, invoice, shipping order, or other declaration, or without informing the agent of such carrier of the true character thereof, at or before the time such delivery or carriage is made. Whoever shall knowingly violate or cause to be violated any provision of this section or of the three sections last preceding, or any regulation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in pursuance thereof, shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than eighteen months, or both."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the vote will be taken upon all the amendments together.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] whether this is a literal copy of the law that we passed at the last session?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will say in reply to that, yes and no, both. It is not a literal, verbal copy. In revising the law we struck out, for instance, the words "Interstate Commerce Commission" where they were repeated, and used the word "commission." We took the penalty out from each provision and put it at the end. Before offering it as an amendment I submitted it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], who introduced the bill. He took it under very careful consideration, and reported to me this morning that he was entirely satisfied that this rearrangement did not in any sense change the law, and that there could be no possible objection to the arrangement we have made.

Mr. MANN. The arrangement you have made is, of course, intended simply to comply with the arrangement in the rest of the codification?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is all. There is not a single word of change with regard to the prohibition or with regard to the regulation of packing or with regard to the punishment.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wish to ask a question before this is put to a vote. As I understand this motion, it is to strike out the proposed section 233 and section 234 in the code and to insert in the place thereof these four sections which have been read.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit me for one moment, I feel that I ought to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I have misled him. The law passed by Congress did not provide a complete jurisdictional clause for a case where the article passed from one territory to a noncontiguous territory, and was thereby obliged to go through a foreign country. Of course the Supreme Court of the United States held that that is interstate commerce, and there has been a failure of justice in some cases because the law did not extend that jurisdiction. That was the matter to which I called the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] particularly, and he said it ought to go in the law.

Mr. MANN. Let us understand it. You meant to affect the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is a concrete illustration of what I mean. If the gentleman will read it——

Mr. MANN. I can tell a good deal better by having the gentleman state it than by reading it. I have no doubt he gets at what he wants to in the proper language. That is the purpose of it, where the Grand Trunk starts with explosives in Maine, for instance, and lands them in Chicago.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It covers that case, and it covers also transportation to our noncontiguous territory, such as Panama and Porto Rico, which the original bill did not.

Mr. MANN. Which we purposely did not put in the original bill.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. We have put it in this bill, and if he moves to strike it out it will be in order.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly; yes. But was it in order for the Committee on Revision of the Laws, under the regulations which the gentleman's committee established, and in which I have always supported him, to make those changes?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Oh, there is no doubt of that. That comes within the province of the committee, I think.

Mr. MANN. Then, on any future amendment that is offered, I shall feel at liberty to vote on the merits of an amendment, and not follow the lead of the gentleman who insists that the merits shall not be considered.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do not think the gentleman's conclusion is warranted by any statement that I make at all.

Mr. MANN. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It was the purpose of the committee to supply what they felt to be an omission in that bill, and I want to say to the gentleman what I, as the chairman of the committee, did respecting this change, because I do not want the impression to get abroad here that this committee has attempted to interfere with any expression of Congress, particularly one coming from the gentleman's committee so recently as this act. We knew that at the time the bill was on the floor for consideration the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] proposed this amendment.

The consideration of the bill was suspended, however, before the amendment had time to be perfected. I first had an interview with a member of the committee, who had given careful consideration to the bill. He said, "I think we have unintentionally omitted that," and said that it ought to go in; that the committee evidently intended to extend it to these noncontiguous Territories. Then the gentleman from Illinois will remember that I came to him and stated that we would not make any change in this unless it met with the consent of the committee. The gentleman told me that if I would see Mr. SHERMAN, who introduced the bill and had charge of its preparation and passage through the House, that whatever he said would be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Continuing my statement, acting under the suggestion of my friend from Illinois, I went to Mr. SHERMAN and took this draft of the bill and called his attention to the law and the changes. Mr. SHERMAN took it up and gave it careful consideration and a very careful comparison. His attention was called to this particular jurisdictional language. He said to me that he thought it was a matter that ought to go in, and after careful comparison and a full understanding of the little changes that had been made in the arrangement he reported that it was entirely satisfactory, and upon that basis I made the statement I did.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, in the time of the gentleman from New York, I will say that it may be all right. I do not say that it is not. I am in the same position of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the amendment offered by some one here this morning on the floor of the House—I do not know, and I am quite sure that the gentleman himself has not been able to give the consideration to it that it deserves. This very matter was discussed on a number of occasions in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as to whether this should apply to explosives being transported to Panama. The gentleman's proposition which he has now put in may result in a very great increase in the cost of getting explosives to Panama without in the slightest degree insuring the safety of any individual.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. This provision, as the gentleman knows, is to prevent the shipment of any high explosives on vessels carrying passengers.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. In the second clause it permits the shipping of all explosives under regulations adopted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I can not see how it would interfere or increase the cost of shipping explosives to Panama.

Mr. MANN. It may be that my recollection is wrong, but I think the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission does not go to the transportation by vessel.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes, yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember how that is, but the bill was considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at least on a dozen different occasions since I have been a member of the committee; it has been discussed up hill and down dale, fore and aft, and every way that any member of the committee could suggest. I know of no subject that has ever received as much consideration at the hands of that committee, as many times at least as that bill has, unless it was some subject like railroad rate transportation or matters of that sort. I do not now know why the provision was left out, but I have no doubt it was done advisedly, probably upon the report of some government official that in this particular case it would interfere with the transportation of explosives to Panama.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I think I will ask a question in my own time and then these gentlemen can return to the debate afterwards. As I understand, the proposed amendment is to strike out sections 233 and 234 and insert the sections read from the desk?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, what is to be done with the sections of which 233 and 234 are the substantial copies?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. They will be repealed in the repealing clause at the end of the bill. That clause repeals all of these sections.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not the gentleman think an amendment proposed here ought to provide specially for the repeal of those sections?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. We have a special section in the bill that provides for it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You deliberately substitute these sections read from the desk for sections 5353 and 5355.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. We shall before the bill is through repeal those two sections in a repealing clause.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are they provided for now?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes, they are provided for now.

Mr. PARSONS. I would like to ask a question. What language is there in the amendment that covers the case where the explosives might be shipped from one point in a State to another point in the same State where the shipment goes through some other State? I will, however, ask that later on, when we come to another section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 235. [When the death or bodily injury of any person is caused by the explosion of any article named in the two sections last preceding, while the same is being placed upon any vessel or vehicle to be transported in violation thereof, or while the same is being so transported, or while the same is being removed from such vessel or vehicle, the person knowingly placing or aiding or permitting the placing of such articles upon any such vessel or vehicle, to be so transported, shall be imprisoned not more than ten years.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 126, line 9, strike out "two" and insert "four," so that it will read "named in the four sections last preceding."

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not necessary also to change the numbering of this section?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes; it will be. That change we are going to ask liberty to make when we finish the bill—power to make changes to accommodate the new sections.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BURKE). The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 236. [Whoever shall bring or cause to be brought into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign country, for the purpose of disposing of the same, any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any advertisement of, or list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of, any such lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, or shall therein knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier for carriage, or shall carry, from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States through a foreign country to any place in or subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country, any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, or any advertisement of, or list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of, any such lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, or shall knowingly take or receive, or cause to be taken or received, any such paper, certificate, instrument, advertisement, or list so brought, deposited, or transported, shall, for the first offense, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both;

and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than two years.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. It is in the form of a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 236a. That every common carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall keep a record of all vinous, spirituous, malt, and intoxicating beverages transported by it from one State into another, which record shall show the names of the consignor and consignee, the kind and quantity of liquor contained in each package, the name of the party to whom delivered, and the date of delivery, and such record shall be open to inspection by the peace officers of the county in which the office of delivery is situated."

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce to transport or accept for transportation from one State into another any package containing vinous, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating beverages unless there shall be plainly marked thereon in large, clear letters the name of the consignee and the kind and quantity of liquor contained therein.

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce to deliver to any person in one State any vinous, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating beverage transported by it from another State unless the package containing it shall be marked or labeled as required by this section, and no such package shall be delivered to any person except the consignee whose name appears thereon as such or upon his written order.

That whoever, for the purpose of having delivery made to him or his agent, shall falsely pretend to any agent or employee of any common carrier that he is the consignee of any vinous, spiritous, malt, or intoxicating beverage transported from another State or shall, under any assumed or fictitious name, or any name not his own, make or utter any order for such beverage, or receipt for or accept delivery thereof, shall upon conviction be punished by imprisonment for not more than six months.

That whoever shall deliver to any common carrier for transportation into another State any package containing any vinous, spiritous, malt, or intoxicating beverage without having plainly marked thereon the name of the consignee and the kind and quantity of beverage it contains shall upon conviction be imprisoned for not more than six months.

That any common carrier convicted of any violation of any of the provisions of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment that it is new legislation, and, further, because it is not germane to any matter in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very glad to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the bill, Mr. Chairman, it is a codification and revision of existing laws, but it does not consider or contemplate the enactment of new law, particularly on any matter that is not contained in existing law. In the bill that is now before the committee there is nothing that refers to the transportation of malt, vinous, or alcoholic beverages, and this amendment is an innovation entirely, which makes it not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Not on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I think it is sufficient to call the attention of the Chair to the title of the bill—"A bill to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This is an amendment to the laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois whether or not the committee has not been inserting amendments of new character during the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. That is undoubtedly true; and I thought it was sufficient to call the attention of the present occupant of the chair to the fact that the bill was a bill to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, giving authority to insert, as I take it, an amendment relating to the penal laws.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair also to the fact that this very question was raised at the last session, when this bill was under consideration. I do not know who was in the chair, but the question has been decided against the position of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The very point he makes was made—that the bill could not be amended—and the point of order, as I recollect it, was not sustained.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that if it was simply to codify the penal laws, the point of order might lie; but it is a bill to revise and amend, and that certainly means to change, and then it rests in the discretion of the House as to how far that change will go, whether it will change the old provision or put in a new one.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BURKE). The question in the mind of the Chair is whether or not the bill contains legislation affecting articles of interstate commerce, in which event the Chair regards the amendment as in order. The Chair, from a scrutiny of the bill under consideration by the committee, finds that other articles of interstate commerce are referred to and provided for, and their transportation regulated therein. For that reason the Chair holds that the amendment is in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 22274. An act to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.

H. J. Res. 206. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 105. Joint resolution for the purpose of more fully carrying into effect the convention concluded at Brussels on March 15, 1886, in reference to the exchange of official journals, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7777) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.

CODIFICATION OF THE PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to sections 238 and 239 of the bill, one in regard to the transportation of foreign animals or birds, and so forth, and the other in regard to carrying packages by common carriers of those articles which are transported in interstate commerce.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would ask the gentleman whether they have not been stricken out of the bill. They seem in the copy I have to be marked with brackets as omitted.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No, not omitted; those marked in brackets show they are condensed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the point of order was overruled?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. MANN. I did not understand the point of order had been disposed of, and I beg the Chair's pardon.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address myself to the amendment. There have been quite a number of bills introduced in the past several years in the Congress and discussed more or less on this floor to regulate, in one way or the other, interstate shipments of intoxicating liquors. I have taken occasion myself to say something on that subject. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that every Member of this House desires to proceed in this matter as far as he may proceed in order and clearly within the limits which the Constitution has prescribed for us. There are quite a number of bills that have been introduced in this House and which have had column after column in the newspapers of this country devoted to their advocacy by those who are in favor of temperance, but which do not commend themselves to the judgment of many Members of this House, myself among the number, as being within the limitations which the Constitution sets. I believe it is the duty of the States to enforce their police regulations. I do not believe it is the province of the Federal Government to say whether or not intoxicating liquors shall be sold in the State of Mississippi.

I do not believe that under the Constitution this Congress can—and if it could I do not think it should—delegate to the State of Mississippi, or to any other State in this Union, the right to regulate interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors. This amendment does not attempt to do anything of the sort, Mr. Chairman. It provides for the exercise of the function, of the power that is ours—the duty to regulate interstate commerce by a law of Congress. This amendment simply provides that all packages which contain such liquors shall be labeled, as we provided in the pure-food law, so that it may be known at a given place in any State where the package is received that the consignee has received a consignment of intoxicating liquors, together with a statement of the kind and quantity of liquors which the package contains. That is all, except it provides the package shall not be delivered to any fictitious person; that it shall not bear any fictitious name, but must, in fact, be delivered to the man who in good faith ordered it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The point that I can not quite understand is this. You provide in sections 2 and 3, reading from section 2:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce to transport or accept for transportation from one State to another, etc.

How will the carrier know unless the article is billed to the carrier as liquor? You make a penalty against the carrier, although it may be a small jug incased in a very large case and marked "dry goods."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The amendment provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to present to any common carrier for transportation any such liquors which are not properly labeled so that the common carrier may ascertain——

Mr. MANN. Therefore you punish the common carrier because it is made unlawful for a person to present anything except in a particular way——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, no man can be convicted unless the essence of all offenses under the criminal law—the intent—is proven.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman would not claim, surely, that if a common carrier transported liquor which was not marked the way he says it shall be marked, if this was the law, that the common carrier could not be punished regardless of whether some agent knew it or not.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The common carrier is put upon his notice by this bill that he must not transport intoxicating liquors from one State to another unless they are properly labeled. He has the right to make inquiry of the consignor to ascertain the fact, and if he does all the things that in reason he ought to be required to do he will not be punished.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Would the gentleman object to the amendment if it should be made to read "any common carrier shall knowingly transport," etc.?

Mr. MANN. No; I would not.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am perfectly willing——

Mr. MANN. That is a different proposition. We have had the same proposition presented a dozen times before the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask that it be so amended as to read, "the common carrier shall knowingly transport," etc.

Mr. Chairman, it is unnecessary for me to state to this House the purpose of the amendment. Throughout this country the people, in the exercise of the police power so wisely reserved to the States, have in their wisdom declared against the sale in their communities of intoxicating liquors. The States have forbidden the sale, and yet we know that the express companies—the common carriers—do as a matter of fact materially aid the men who are engaged in this unlawful business to evade and violate these state laws. But a few years ago the Commissioner of Internal Revenue declined to testify in the state courts, and declined to permit any of his deputies to testify in these courts, that a man had paid the revenue tax to the United States Government required of retail liquor dealers, when, under state laws, the collection and payment of that tax was admissible as evidence against the defendant. Congress has at last, after much discussion, declared that the internal-revenue collectors shall give that information.

Now, it is proposed further in this bill—and I believe it is as far as we ought to go—that the Federal Government shall say to the state authorities, "This man has paid the tax required of those who engage in the retail liquor business, and he is receiving weekly 10, 15, or 20 gallons of whisky." I say, I think when the Government of the United States has done that, it has gone as far as the State can in reason ask, and we will then put the burden where it ought to be, not upon our shoulders, but upon the shoulders of those in the State who are charged with the execution of these police regulations and by whom we are most usually and most severely criticised.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. With pleasure.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the amendment which you have proposed, which is virtually a bill you have introduced, and known as "H. R. 16985," ever been considered by any committee of this House?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There has been no report. The committee to which it was referred has considered it, along with other measures of similar import, and the Senate committee has considered a bill along the same lines.

The idea was suggested first, I think, by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY]. He and I had discussed the matter much together, and I suggested that he introduce his bill first, which he did, and I introduced mine on the next day. We presented those bills to the Senate committee, and the Senate reported favorably a bill which is very similar to this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is very far from what this bill proposes, if the gentleman will compare the bill reported to the Senate by Senator KNOX and the bill he has introduced in Congress, because from bare inspection it shows that this measure has several unconstitutional clauses.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There is no danger, Mr. Chairman, to come to anybody from a bill that has several unconstitutional clauses in it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Would not the gentleman state that this amendment is intended to provide federal aid to the State in the enforcement of state laws?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is practically true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has again expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Just a minute, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In answer to the suggestion, I will state that Chief Justice Marshall declared, in a case which he decided many years ago (Gibbons v. Ogden), in substance, that it was the duty of the Federal Government to assist the States in enforcing their criminal laws, rather than to throw obstructions in their way. Let me read that opinion:

The acts of Congress, passed in 1796 and 1799 (1. U. S. Stat., 474, 619), empowering and directing the officers of the General Government to conform to and assist in the execution of the quarantine and health laws of a State, proceed, it is said, upon the idea that these laws are constitutional. It is undoubtedly true that they do proceed upon that idea; and the constitutionality of such laws has never, so far as we are informed, been denied. But they do not imply an acknowledgment that a State may rightfully regulate commerce with foreign nations or among the States; for they do not imply that such laws are an exercise of that power, or enacted with a view to it. On the contrary, they are treated as quarantine and health laws, are so denominated in the acts of Congress, and are considered as flowing from the acknowledged power of a State, to provide for the health of its citizens. But as it was apparent that some of the provisions made for this purpose, and in virture of this power, might interfere with and be affected by the laws of the United States made for the regulation of commerce, Congress—

Now, listen to this—

in that spirit of harmony and conciliation which ought always to characterize the conduct of governments standing in relation which that of the Union and those of the States bear to each other, has directed its officers to aid in the execution of these laws, and has in some measure adapted its own legislation to this object by making provisions in aid of those of the States.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman answer one question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this proposition, it does not aim to prevent or prohibit the transportation of liquor from one State into another. It merely prescribes certain regulations. The Supreme Court decisions on this question, Mr. Chairman, vary very much, but they all agree on one point, namely, that the right of a citizen of any State in the Union to purchase or import from another State whatever he wants, whether it is liquor or any other article, and that that article be delivered to his hands is a right not based upon a statute, but is based upon the Constitution of the United States itself. Consequently, any bill or act of this House interfering with that right would be naturally unconstitutional. That is the first objection I have.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman think that, under the Constitution, Congress can require cotton-seed oil which enters interstate commerce, to be labeled cotton seed, and prevent it from being labeled olive oil?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is no question about the right to prescribe the labeling.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If it can in the case of cotton-seed oil, why should it not have the right to label whisky?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am coming to that.

The second objection, Mr. Chairman, is this: That I believe the States which have prohibitory laws have the right to seize any liquor which may be transported to their territory. All that is necessary for the peace officer to do is to watch those to whom liquor is consigned, and the very moment the citizen who purchases it, either for his own use or for the purpose of disposing of it by sale, attempts to so dispose of it the goods become subject to the state law, and can therefore be seized by the state officials. Consequently, legislation of this kind is wholly unnecessary, unless it is intended to introduce in this country a sort of Russian spy system which would subject the importer of a bottle of wine or beer to the supervision of the peace officers of the county or State.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In view of the gentleman's last remark, my statement would perhaps not be pertinent. But I want to suggest that there is no proposition in this bill against the shipment of liquor.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. You have a perfect right to ship liquors under the interstate-commerce law. It simply requires that the package containing the liquor shall be labeled so as to truthfully state what its contents are.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand, Mr. Chairman; but it is certain that if liquor is shipped to a certain citizen in a town in which the gentleman resides and these shipments are repeated very often, the peace officer would thereby be notified that the importer is disposing of the goods by sale.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If he did that, he did not want it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In other words, the Government of the United States would aid the cause of prohibition in those States; and I say as long as those States have not exhausted the powers, which they now have, to seize such shipments under their laws, just so long the power of the Government of the United States ought not to be invoked.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I request that I may have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, of course, if this question is to be considered on its merits, I shall have to ask for more time; but for the present I merely wish to call attention of gentlemen to this one fact: Wherever the legislatures have declared against the manufacture and sale of liquors—and there are a number of States in this Union which have done that—the people have certainly not voted against the importation from outside for their own family tables.

They have simply voted for prohibition for the purpose of closing saloons, and did not vote to exclude intoxicating liquors for their own use coming from other States, and I am quite certain that those States that have gone on record in favor of prohibition would never have voted for a proposition of this kind, a system which might deprive them and their guests of the possibility of taking a social glass of beer or wine. That is another reason why I object to this bill.

I want also to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is one of the subjects which has received the most careful consideration at the hands of two different committees of this House—the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. For two years the first-named committee has taken testimony on this subject, and yet they have not yet seen fit to bring in a report on any one of the bills presented to them on this subject. And why not? Because there were very grave doubts in the minds of the members, the distinguished lawyers who compose that committee, as to the constitutionality of measures of this kind.

I remember that at one time a similar proposition was up here in the House, when it was reported with 11 or 12 other bills by the committee, and it was slipped through this House without discussion. I understand that is being cited by the friends of this legislation as proof that this House has gone on record as approving the principle of this bill. But it was not discussed on this floor, and more than that, Mr. Chairman, the committee at that time had not granted a hearing to any single individual. In other words, no hearing was had on the bill—and I believe the members of the committee will bear me out in the statement—and the bill was not generally understood.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Just a word. This bill is not the Littlefield bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is not along the line of any principle involved in that bill at all, nor is there any section in it or any attempt in this bill to prevent the interstate shipment of liquors. Any gentleman can send out of his State and import as many intoxicating liquors as he desires. This simply requires, just as the pure-food law does, that when the liquor comes in under interstate commerce it shall be labeled truthfully and accurately.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, that does not break the force of my argument that this bill has not been considered by any committee. Speaking for myself, this is the first time I have seen its provisions. I do not know what they may mean. I do not know whether there may not be a "nigger in the wood pile." The gentleman himself has already consented to one amendment. There may be other amendments necessary, and, in my judgment, it is certainly a matter of sufficient importance to warrant discussion and consideration by one of the regular committees of the House before we act upon it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have consistently voted all along, while this bill has been under consideration, against radical amendments to it, upon the idea that it is not the occasion, when we are engaged in codification, to enact new legislation, especially when it involves important questions that ought to be first considered by a committee of the House.

I intend to vote for this amendment, however, and I want to explain why I intend to do so. If I felt sure that we could get a vote on this question, brought up as a separate and independent proposition, I do not think I would vote for this amendment, but I doubt if we can get it in view of my experience at the last session.

At that session I introduced a bill similar to the one which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] offers as an amendment to this bill, and the Judiciary Committee did not act on it. The people of this country are earnestly engaged in an effort to lessen the evils of intemperance by stopping the shipping of whisky from one State into another where the people of the locality have declared by their votes and their laws that they do not want it there, and they believe that legislation of the character proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi will tend to curtail, to some extent at least, this evil. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] says that he does not believe in the Federal Government undertaking to exercise the police powers of a State.

I would vote for a proposition involving the exercise by the Federal Government of the police powers of a State if the State fails or refuses to do so, especially when, as in this case, a great public moral question, which so vitally affects the welfare of the people, is involved. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, believing that it is a step toward the elimination of the great evil which now exists and which is greater by reason of the lax provisions of our present federal laws.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to say that at the last session he introduced a bill to smother and prevent this vice. I want to ask him if he went to the committee to which that bill was referred and had a hearing on this important measure to smother vice?

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of that committee, will remember that I attended a great many of those hearings, and that I also had several conversations with him and with other members of that committee regarding the status of these various bills; and I will say further that I doubt very much whether the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] was correct when he said that the only reason that some bill along this line was not reported by the committee was because of grave doubts as to the constitutional questions involved.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman refuses to answer my question. I asked him if he ever appeared before the committee to which his bill was referred and asked for a hearing.

Mr. LANGLEY. I did not mean to refuse to answer the gentleman's question. What I meant to say was that while I had no formal hearing myself, I appeared, along with others, before the committee; and the gentleman knows that while I did not make an address before the committee upon this question it was because I knew that the matter had already been fully presented; and if I am not mistaken the gentleman himself informed me that none of the bills would be reported, and therefore I did not want to waste my time in making a useless argument.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that he is very much mistaken when he says the gentleman from Wisconsin, the chairman of that committee, told him the bill would never be reported. I want to say to this House now and to the country, in response to this agitation, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] never appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary and asked to be heard on this important question.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is correct, Mr. Chairman; I did not, for the reasons that I have stated, but I was in constant touch with those who did appear, and——

Mr. JENKINS. That is what I want to get out here before this country. Gentlemen are telling what efforts they have made to smother vice. They introduce bills and then throw the responsibility upon the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LANGLEY. By no means, so far as I am concerned. On the contrary, I introduced my bill in good faith, and I want to show the House and the country by my vote, as I think I have already shown by what I have said, that I am not indulging in buncombe, but that I want some measure of this kind enacted; and I intend to vote for it. This is a very important question to my people, and I wish I had time to go more fully into the merits of the whole subject. The shipping of intoxicating liquors into localities in open defiance of the will of the people is an iniquity that the Federal Government should not tolerate, much less sanction.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, referring to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], I beg to say that this bill presented as an amendment never has been considered by the Judiciary Committee, nor has it been presented to the Judiciary Committee for its consideration. The bill which occupied so much of the time of the Judiciary Committee in the last session, popularly known as the "Littlefield liquor bill," did not contain the provisions of the bill of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. The time of the Judiciary Committee was largely taken up in the consideration of the Littlefield bill, and the only reason, so far as I know, why a report was not made was for the want of time after the hearings closed. There were at one time or another in the Judiciary Committee room more than 20 Members of this House waiting their turn to be heard.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if the Judiciary Committee will have time at the present session to make a report on the Littlefield bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The bill is not before the subcommittee of which I am chairman, but I presume some report will be made. It was reported out in the Fifty-eighth or Fifty-ninth Congress. It has been intimated that the Judiciary Committee is a "morgue," but that committee has done its full share of work, reporting as many bills, perhaps, as other great committees of the House save the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MANN. And the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not make such an exception. Among the bills reported were some very important ones. The employers' liability bill, for illustration. It also reported the bill in relation to government liability to its employees. The bill proposed as an amendment to the bill before the House is out of place here. It has been referred to the Judiciary Committee, but it has had no consideration. It has never been presented by the subcommittee or, so far as I know, been considered by any member of that committee. I shall not go into its merits. The question is: Shall we, in Committee of the Whole, pass upon important measures as amendments to the bill now before us without first having them passed upon by the committee to which they have been regularly referred?

There is one constitutional question presented in this bill. I do not know that it is vital. I do not now say that it would be unconstitutional, but certainly it ought to be carefully examined. It has never had such examination. Is it constitutional to clothe a State with power to compel the production of the books of an interstate transportation company? It may be. I am not now prepared to say that it is not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to that clause in relation to the inspection by police officers?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman doubt the authority of Congress to require the record by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be kept open to the inspection of everybody?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I am simply raising the question if Congress can clothe a State with that power. I do not now pass upon it. What I am insisting upon is that this House ought not to vote on a question of this kind until it has been carefully considered by the proper committee and a report made for or against it.

If an adverse report is made, it is in the power of this House to bring it before the House to consider. But let us respect the committees of this House. The Judiciary Committee has shown no hesitation in reporting bills that have been referred to it.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I have just looked at this amendment, but in the judgment of the gentleman would it not apply solely to goods of American manufacture? It would not apply, would it, to wines, for instance, produced in France, Germany, or Italy, and which would be thrown into direct competition with American products?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not answer that question, because I do not propose now to discuss the merits of this bill. Let it be considered by the committee to which it has been referred, and then if the report is unfavorable let gentlemen demand that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be brought here for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] desires to ask unanimous consent to modify his amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indicate in what particular?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. By the insertion of the word "knowingly" on page 1, in line 14. I have given the Clerk the modification I desire to state.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 14, page 1, after "another," insert the word "knowingly," so as to read, "from one State into another knowingly any package," etc.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should think, if the gentleman would permit, that it would be better to put that word in in line 13, before the word "transport."

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois says no; but I still think it would.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think "knowingly" is in the right place.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. KAHN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to advert once more to the so-called "Littlefield liquor bill." As I said before, that measure was reported in the Fifty-eighth or Fifty-ninth Congress, and it passed upon the Calendar of the House. The same bill was introduced in the first session of the Sixtieth Congress. Many of the same people asked again to be heard for and against the bill. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] insisted—not once, not twice, but half a dozen times—that he had a right to be heard, and that as a Member of the House he insisted upon having something to say as to the time when he should be heard.

Business called him to Missouri. Business also took him into his own important committee, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, where he was framing a bill for public buildings. That took most of his time.

Mr. SABATH. Did I not appear myself several times against the Littlefield bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; and finally we had to cut you out.

Mr. SABATH. And I have not succeeded in getting the time yet.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It would have been grossly unfair for the Judiciary Committee to have said to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. BARTHOLDT], "You shall fix your time to conform to ours."

Mr. MANN. Especially while he was making up the public buildings bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have no doubt that was largely the basis of the reason for giving him further time.

He was heard on May 1. That was the first opportunity he had of addressing the committee, and his remarks were well worth listening to, being filled with statistics that required weeks, perhaps months, to prepare. We ought to have heard him, and after the hearings closed there was little time left to make such a report as should be made upon a bill of so much importance. I have said this much, Mr. Chairman, because the Judiciary Committee is not derelict in performing its duty.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I trust this will not come out of the time for the discussion of this question——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARRETT (continuing). Because I merely want to make this statement: It has been suggested to me that in the colloquy——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. GARRETT. That in the colloquy between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] and myself, when the amendment as to dealing in futures was up, that my mannerism was such as was calculated to be somewhat offensive. The gentleman from Missouri has not suggested that, nor have I heard it as coming from him, but some gentleman has suggested to me that this might be true. Nothing of the sort was intended, I know, and I simply wanted to make that statement. I would not willingly offend any gentleman, and certainly not the gentleman from Missouri, for whom I entertain feelings of kindest regard and respect.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I did not take it so.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of the attitude of the Committee on the Judiciary toward the Littlefield bill seems to me is not germane to the question under discussion here. I have often wondered, however, why the Committee on the Judiciary did not make a report to the House, knowing that that is a question of vital moment in many States, and through the campaign it was often under discussion in the public prints. Now, if I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER], the Committee on the Judiciary did make a favorable report on that bill in the Fifty-ninth Congress after very extended hearings, and I assume they thought the bill was constitutional. The bill was reintroduced in the Sixtieth Congress and was under consideration for six months, or nearly so, and it does seem to me, as the committee was constituted substantially as it was in the Fifty-ninth Congress, that they might then have come to some conclusion thereon and reported it to the House, either favorably or adversely.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I desire to say to the gentleman from Missouri that there were several new members on the Judiciary Committee in the first session of the Sixtieth Congress who were not there in the Fifty-ninth Congress. It was for those gentlemen, and those gentlemen alone, that the hearings were continued. If it had been the old committee, we would have begged them to not ask us for further hearings on that bill, of which we had all become tired.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. How many new members were there?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The chairman, who sits there, can probably tell better, but I think there were two or three.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. One from Missouri [Mr. CAULFIELD].

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. And one from New York [Mr. MALBY].

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. And one from Kentucky, I believe [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is three, and I think one from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON]. That is four. Then, there was Mr. DIEKEMA, of Michigan, which makes five, so there are five new members on a committee of eighteen, and to them certainly was due the courtesy of a hearing. There is also Mr. WEBB, of North Carolina, which makes six.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Were they in attendance at these hearings during these five months?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Every time, and there has not been a laggard on the Judiciary Committee since I have been a member of it, and I have been a member for twelve years. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Did they have access to the former hearings?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. They had access to the former hearings, but there were many who addressed us in the Sixtieth Congress who did not in the Fifty-ninth. I am not sure whether the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, what is the subject under discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has yielded to the gentleman from Missouri to ask a question.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to ask what the subject of the discussion now before the House is, and what it must be limited to?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] that the remarks just now are quite as germane to the subject as his amendment is.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In the interest of a correct report, I should like to state that there was no report in the Fifty-ninth Congress on this bill. The report was made in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and no hearing was had in the Fifty-eighth Congress whatsoever. After the bill had been acted upon in this House, in about ten minutes' time and passed without discussion, the country became aroused as to its importance, and in the Fifty-ninth Congress there were very extended hearings on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] yield for just a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. His colleague is referring to this bill. What bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. The Littlefield bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is a very different matter from this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. We understand that. Now, as I stated at the outset, it was not for the purpose of criticising any committee. Since the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] has mentioned the Littlefield bill, I do hope that we shall have a report from that committee on that bill during the present session of Congress in time to vote on it.

Now, I know there are some new members on that committee, and I expect they are fully informed as to the constitutional question involved and the policy of legislation. Now, that bill, as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], is quite a different one from the one under consideration here. My colleague from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] fears this bill may trench on the rights of the citizens. Now, Missouri has about 75 or 80 counties under local option. Every county in my congressional district is under local option, and every town save one. It is notorious that there is abuse by dealers in intoxicants in shipping intoxicating liquors from other States into Missouri, into counties under local option, in that they are concealed in packages, the contents of which are not known, and consigned, it is alleged, to fictitious persons.

There is no grave constitutional question involved here. I assume that if Congress has any right under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution to regulate interstate traffic, they certainly can in a reasonable exercise of that power provide that a package containing a certain commodity shall be plainly marked indicating its contents, and that it shall not be consigned to a fictitious person. And I assume, too, that there could be no question that this Congress may provide that the books of the carriers shall be open to inspection at the place of delivery by the officers of the law, so that this provision will not be violated. That is all there is in it, simply that the package shall be plainly marked, not consigned to a fictitious person, and shall be delivered in good faith to the consignee or his agent. I do not think that would deprive my colleague's friends of their liquor, their Anheuser-Busch beer, if they want it, or of any other beverage. It is not curtailing the right of any citizen at all. It is simply to prevent an abuse which is prevalent now in those States under prohibition or under local option. I do not think the carriers want to violate the law. They do not want to be the instrument for the violation of law, but when this traffic is carried on in a covert way it is liable to occur, and this is a simple, plain, common-sense way to prevent it. Although this amendment has not been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, although it has been before that committee for months past, its provisions are so plain and so in harmony with common sense, and there is so little doubt of its constitutionality I do not think we take any chances in adopting it.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. May I suggest that this bill has not been under consideration in the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. With all due respect to the gentleman, I do not think it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The Littlefield bill did not contain the provision that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has in his bill.

No gentleman on the committee was subject to the slightest criticism, nor was the gentleman from Mississippi subject to any criticism because this bill was not presented.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. I do not understand that we are finding fault with the committee nor the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I desired simply to state that it was never before the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. I never intimated that it ever had been, nor do I think it necessary that it should be.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I understood him to say that it had been.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Oh, no; I was talking about the Littlefield bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I hardly know just exactly how to address the committee at this time on account of the wide range the discussion has taken. In the first place, I wanted to address myself to this amendment; but as I sat here anxious to be recognized, my friend from Missouri undertook to criticise the Committee on the Judiciary, and asked my friend from New York, a member of that committee, if he would guarantee that this bill would be reported out of committee. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in all candor that when my friend shall have had as long judicial experience in this House as I have he will appreciate that one member of any committee can not speak for the committee. I want to say that when any gentleman running for Congress in the last campaign was in some doubt as to whether he would be elected or not, he laid all the sin on the Committee on the Judiciary. [Laughter.] I want to say also to this House, and my people insist that I shall soon retire from this body, that I never sat with a better, more loyal, more intellectual lot of legal gentlemen in my life than I have met in the Committee on the Judiciary, both Democrats and Republicans. [Applause.]

We have never had a single party division in the twelve years I have been serving there. Every Democrat and every Republican came prepared to discharge his duty.

Now, so far as these temperance bills are concerned, I do not violate the confidence of the committee when I say that out of 18 members 16 members were thoroughly committed by their vote against the constitutionality of those measures; and yet my friend from Missouri says, as a gentleman said to me on yesterday, "Gentlemen, do not bother about the Constitution; it will take care of itself." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Do you think I used any such language as would justify your statement?

Mr. JENKINS. I do so.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. I would like you to quote it.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to dispose of some of these questions. The Committee on the Judiciary does not determine any question of policy. The Committee on the Judiciary sit to determine the constitutionality of measures; and then gentlemen ask why this bill should not be reported by this committee when 16 gentlemen of that committee are registered by their vote against the constitutionality of the measure. I am one of those antiquated men who believe, Mr. Chairman, that when we desert constitutional principles anarchy will take place, and we must be bound by the Constitution, and we must be bound by the laws of this country if we want to preserve this nation and we want to preserve the States. [Loud applause.] The question reported in the bill that was before the House some years ago was entirely dissimilar to the question that is now before the committee. That committee has been engaged more than it ought to be.

I think I can safely say to my colleagues on the floor here to-day that we have spent at least three hours to-day with reputable gentlemen from different parts of this country trying to arrange for hearings and that we have got all the time engaged up to the middle of January. On some of these questions we have had at least 65 of the greatest men of this Nation come to be heard. My friend brings to my mind a gentleman that I heard addressing a legislature a little while ago when I was visiting. When some gentleman referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, this man got up and said:

Until I got to be a member of this body I thought lawyers were smart men.

He said:

There has not been a question up since I have been here but I was ready to vote on it, and yet these men who pretend to be so learned want to take it home and read it over before they vote upon it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as this bill is concerned, I want to ask my good-natured friend from Mississippi if he ever appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary in advocacy of this bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I did not. Now, will the gentleman——

Mr. JENKINS. That answers my question.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I should like to say further, I am put on the witness stand and I want to tell all the truth.

Mr. JENKINS. That is all the truth.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I can not yield any further. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Judiciary have been anxious to settle all these questions, in the interest of honesty and good government, and in the interest of sobriety, as it is possible to do. But as far as this question is concerned, it is a very important one. This proposition was introduced into this House by the gentleman from Mississippi. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and immediately referred to a subcommittee, who had power to hear arguments with reference to it. We have similar bills. We have been trying to arrange for some line of legislation that would satisfy the growing demands in this country, but it has been utterly impossible for us to do it.

Let me invite the attention of this House to the fact that in the Fifty-third Congress, without a dissenting vote on the floor of this House, an amendment was passed transferring from congressional jurisdiction to the States every element of legislative power over interstate commerce. Where would we be, Mr. Speaker, if we were operating to-day under the laws prior to the adoption of the Constitution? The Committee on the Judiciary have been trying their very best to preserve the autonomy of the Federal Government and the autonomy of the States. They have appreciated the great importance of the constitutional question involved, and they have fully appreciated the great demand on the part of the people for temperance legislation. We have simply asked them: "Why do you not go back to your States?" Every gentleman knows to-day that it is within the power of every State to prevent the manufacture and sale of liquor. Let us take Iowa as an illustration, as just suggested to me by a gentleman who appears to be familiar with it.

Under the law of Iowa you can manufacture wines out of grapes grown in the State of Iowa. Now, what is the difference between a man in Iowa drinking domestic wines and some foreign introduction? I want to know why the rights of the man in Minnesota are not as sacred as the rights of the shipper in the State of Kentucky? A man in Minnesota says to-day, "I want to send down to Kentucky and have some wine shipped to me." They say, "You can not ship it unless it is so marked on the box as to show exactly what is in it." That is depriving the citizen of Minnesota of his constitutional rights, while the man in Iowa can drink his wine unmarked. I do not know why a man in Minnesota can not have his product shipped to him, as long as the State of Minnesota does not prohibit the use of it. That is one great question that seems to be overlooked here. No State in the Union has gone so far as to say by its legislation that a citizen of a State shall not drink anything he sees fit, if he can buy it. He may not sell, he may not give it away, and he may not manufacture it. We are depriving him of his constitutional right when we say that he shall not buy that product unless it is marked.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague have ten minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say the country is greatly indebted to some of the gentlemen on the floor of this House, who have pointed out some of the iniquities of this amendment. If it should be adopted, a gentleman could go to a dry goods store in the State of Kentucky and have a box prepared for shipment to any other State in the Union—a box apparently containing dry goods—and in it there might be a bottle or a jug of liquor; and yet the Congress of the United States is invited to say that a common carrier shall be punished if it carry that package without knowing what is contained in it. It is due to the gentlemen upon the floor of this House that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has accepted this amendment; but it is not broad enough to meet the question. Under the law of the State of Mississippi to-day, if a person takes his product to a common carrier in that State and asks to have it shipped to the State of Wisconsin, the common carrier must take it and ship it; and if it does not, it is liable, and you are placing the common carrier between two fires. I invite your attention to it, because a matter of this importance certainly ought to be carefully considered by the committee.

Six Democrats on the Committee on the Judiciary, every one of them from the South, and every gentleman professing to be temperate in his views. I can certainly say that if any one of them drinks, it is not to my knowledge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Wisconsin does not mean to intimate that they are not temperate in their habits?

Mr. JENKINS. They are temperate in their habits. It seems to me that our colleagues on the floor of this House ought to be content to leave this question with the Committee on the Judiciary.

I got a letter to-day—and I wish I had it here now; I would read it—from a gentleman in New Orleans, and I trust that some gentleman from Louisiana is on the floor to hear the statement. In that letter he asked me why a bill in which he is vitally interested has not been passed by this Congress. He addresses me as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and wants me to explain why the bill in which he is interested has not been passed by the House, and that bill is before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

He says that the bill has been there for over a year and that he can not get any sort of recognition. I do not want to say that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is a morgue, but while I am here let me say that while that committee has gone a long ways toward stating that the Committee on the Judiciary is a morgue, they have had a companion bill to the so-called "Littlefield bill" as long as the Committee on the Judiciary has had its bill, and they have not had the nerve or the time to report it.

I do not know why the Committee on the Judiciary should be discriminated against. I am willing to say that, as far as the Committee on the Judiciary is concerned, when this Congress closes there will be a large number of bills, some of them of considerable importance, that it will be impossible for that committee to report for the want of time. I simply want to say to my friends, as I am going to retire, that I never saw a harder-working body of gentlemen in my life. I never saw men more willing to devote all their time to these great questions, and I can say that I never have met one member of that committee but would devote what I think was all of his time to the services of that committee and to the services of this House. [Applause.]

You all know when eighteen gentlemen, each one thinking for himself that he knows what is best, sit down around a table considering these great questions how difficult it is to reach conclusions. When you get through, figure it up and you will find no more bills in the morgue of the Judiciary Committee than you will find in the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee or any other one of the great committees of this House. A majority of that committee and a majority of any committee can report any bill out at their will. If a bill has not been reported out, the indication is that there is a majority against it, and I can not say that the majority is wrong. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to engage in any unseemly squabble with the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin as to the relative merits of the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. While it is very difficult to recall any constitutional measure of importance which has passed through the Judiciary Committee and sustained contest in the courts, the files of this House are replete with bills that have passed through the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce involving the greatest questions relating to the welfare of the country, not one of which has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Does the gentleman from Illinois recall any bill in the last decade that has been favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee and become an act that has been overruled by the United States courts, except the employees' liability act?

Mr. MANN. If I were the gentleman from New York I would not have called such fresh attention to that. The chances are that the last one that came from the committee and was passed will be declared unconstitutional.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman from Illinois answer my question?

Mr. MANN. As I stated before, I did not rise to engage in any unseemly squabble with the members of the Judiciary Committee, but to address myself to the proposition before the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I asked the gentleman for an answer to my question, for if he has information I would like it.

Mr. MANN. A similar law to the one they are now seeking to pass went through the Judiciary Committee and was declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be unconstitutional.

Mr. Chairman, I am as much a stickler in this House as any Member of the House for all bills to be first considered in committee, and I yield to no one in my admiration for the ability and the nerve of the Committee on the Judiciary, which has often deserved, in my opinion, the thanks of the House not only as to the liquor legislation, but as to much other legislation. This bill, however, or the amendment now presented to the committee, is so plain in its language that it does not require long consideration or learned argument to understand it. We have heard discussed in many ways the question as to the rights of the Government over interstate traffic and liquor, and as to what the Government ought to do. I would be perfectly willing to still wait, as I think we ought, upon the opinion of the Judiciary Committee before enacting such legislation as they have been considering but for the fact that this proposition is so plain and such a simple one, simply requiring that liquor, which everybody admits to stand upon a different footing from ordinary articles, shall be so marked.

It will be precisely along the lines of much legislation already enacted requiring certain articles to be marked. We have required or attempted to require that every medicine containing opium or morphine shall be so marked in interstate commerce. Here is a proposition merely to require that liquor shall be so marked, without in any way whatever affecting the transportation of the liquor, and it seems to me that it would be wise to adopt such a measure and await the result of such legislation in actual transactions, and I therefore favor the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I am prepared to vote.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] seems to doubt the constitutionality of this amendment. Well, this House is a great court. Let us pass on it here now and adopt it and then mend its weak places. We can do that. It seems that this species of legislation stands about 16 to 2 in the Judiciary Committee. How can you expect any favorable report from that committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes. I want to show the gentleman a statute which I think he helped to make similar to this, and I feel satisfied he will agree to this proposition.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I want only to correct one statement. I entirely disavow any sentiment, any knowledge, and made no statement in regard to its constitutionality or unconstitutionality.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thought the gentleman spoke about it and said it might be unconstitutional some time ago. However, if he did not, it is all right and I stand corrected and accept the gentleman's disavowal. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], the distinguished chairman of the committee and a great lawyer and a great legislator, has stated that that committee stands 16 to 2 against any "dry" legislation coming out of that committee.

Does not that serve notice on us that we may expect adverse action on this legislation? I call to the attention of the distinguished chairman and to the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] the fact that Congress passed the "Lacey bird law," which is very similar to this in its main points and requires certain "marks" to be placed around the shipped game before it can be lawfully sent from one State to another, and so forth. The Supreme Court of the United States, I think, has upheld that law. Several States of the United States have passed similar laws, and the Supreme Court has upheld them. That is my recollection. I have here a copy in my hand of one of those decisions. Now, to help this great committee of lawyers, which I hope does not stand 16 to 2 against this class of legislation, let me read a couple of paragraphs from the "Lacey bird law," and I do it because it clearly sheds light upon this subject:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to deliver to any common carrier—

Read the pending amendment and you will see about that language in it—

or for any common carrier to transport from one State or Territory to another State or Territory, or from the District of Columbia or Alaska to any State or Territory, or from any State or Territory to the District of Columbia or Alaska, any foreign animals or birds the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies or parts thereof of any wild animals or birds where such animals or birds have been killed in violation of the laws of the State, Territory, or District in which the same was killed: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the transportation of any dead birds or animals killed during the season when the same may be lawfully captured and the export of which is not prohibited by law in the State, Territory, or District in which the same are killed.

Mr. KAHN. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am reading from volume 31, United States Statutes at Large, chapter 553, page 187, the act of the Fifty-sixth Congress, known as the "Lacey bird law," an act entitled "An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture to prohibit the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes." I have just read section 3 of that law. I will read section 4, and I wish gentlemen to note the similarity of language in this amendment and this law:

SEC. 4. That all packages containing such dead animals, birds, or parts thereof, when shipped by interstate commerce, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be plainly and clearly marked.

Now, those are almost the very words of the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi that we are discussing—"shall be clearly marked." Now, I think the Supreme Court has upheld that law, and yet gentlemen get up here and talk about this law being unconstitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more. I am trying to discuss the law of this matter——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am trying to discuss the law of this matter and to shed some light where possibly some light is wanted or not wanted. It says:

SEC. 4. That all packages containing such dead animals, etc., when shipped by interstate commerce, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be plainly and clearly marked—

Then it says—

so that the name and address of the shipper and the nature of the contents may be readily ascertained on inspection of the outside of such packages. For each evasion or violation of this act the shipper shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200.

Now, gentlemen, I will not take up your time nor try your patience. [Applause.] Well, Mr. Chairman, those who do not want to have what brains they have left enlightened on this subject can take up their hats and go on out. As far as I am concerned, it is immaterial to me whether anybody listens or not. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. I would like to remark to my colleague that his quotation there is absolutely in point, and strikes——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is absolutely in point, and more than that, I think the Supreme Court has upheld it. The gentleman from Mississippi has with great care drafted this bill—and in clean-cut English, at that—showing he is not only a lawyer but a scholar as well. Now, gentlemen, here is this committee that has had this bill before it—whether any hearing has been given to it or not—since last February. That committee is crowded with work. The chairman, Mr. JENKINS, says the committee's time is taken up down to the middle of January—time all allotted that far ahead. Why can not the House now take up this matter and settle it. It is a very simple measure, gentlemen, and will aid local dry places.

I know myself—before a certain county in Kentucky had gone dry, and an adjoining county seat and county in Tennessee had gone dry—of a town into which jug after jug of whisky was shipped from Kentucky, untagged and unmarked, right in defiance of the police laws of the little town and of the State; and they were unable to stop it until the adjoining Kentucky county, as I say, voted local option and went dry. This amendment-made law will aid the State officers to enforce the local laws.

Mr. BARTHOLDT and Mr. SABATH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To either. I yield first to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the question, In the judgment of my friend, if beer were introduced into that dry county in Tennessee to take the place of whisky, whether the cause of sobriety would not be promoted thereby?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to say since they voted whisky out of that little town splendid mercantile houses have taken the place of the saloons, and that large concerns have gone into old wholesale whisky houses, and the town has prospered as it never had before in its great history. Now, these are facts. I desire to say further that the whole State of Tennessee is more or less in the same fix.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Does the gentleman understand this bill would prohibit the shipment of jugs?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It would help to stop sneaking shipping to these fictitious consignees. If we tag these shipments, as the bill provides, if we put the name of the consignee and the consignee is a living individual, we stop these sneaking shipments, and you help the State of Tennessee enforce her laws; you help these little dry counties, and you help these little dry towns. I say that it is an absolutely fair bill; it is a clean bill, and it helps the little towns and the little counties in the States to enforce their local-option laws.

It is not complicated, like the Dolliver-Hepburn bill or the Littlefield-Carmack bill or the Littlefield bill. I know that there is a contrariety of opinion about these measures—their validity—but there can not be any doubt as to the constitutionality of this amendment. It simply tags the whisky so that there can be no fraudulent consignees. It tags it so that you know who is to get it, and that the consignee is not a "dummy," and that it is whisky and not something else. If that is not a good police law, I do not know what is a good police law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] have five minutes longer. We have taken up his time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank the committee for its courtesy. I think I have shown that this measure is entirely constitutional, entirely just, and much needed, and I hope it will become a law.

Mr. KAHN. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for the purpose of answering a question.

Mr. JENKINS. I wanted to ask my friend from Tennessee if he had heard any gentleman on the floor of this House question the constitutionality of this bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think I did, if the gentleman please.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to suggest to my friend from Tennessee that he has set up a man of straw and has banged away at it as ably as any man I ever heard in my life.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am striking at a thing in connection with which we use straws, and I would just as soon strike at a straw man, if he is against this bill, as to strike at one that has as good a head on him as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] and against it.

Mr. KAHN. The argument of the gentleman from Tennessee is the best indication that this bill should be referred to a proper committee and considered by a proper committee. Let me read the language of the first section of the bill. It is as follows:

That every common carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall keep a record of all vinous, spirituous, malt, and intoxicating beverages transported by it from one State into another, which record shall show the names of the consignor and consignee—

And so forth.

Now, the Lacey bird law, which was fully considered by a committee of the House to which the gentleman has referred, says, "from one State or Territory into another State or Territory." There is no provision whatever in this bill as to shipments from Territories into States or from States into Territories. This shows that the bill is loosely drawn.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, we will tighten it where it is loose. We can do that right here. I know you are a good lawyer, and I will help you.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman must admit that, in pointing out this little defect, the bill is shown to be imperfect, and I submit it ought to be considered by a committee. I dare say that there are many other defects in the bill which a proper committee of this House, in its consideration of it, would probably discover and would probably remedy. The gentleman, my friend from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], suggests further that there is no provision in the bill about shipments from the District of Columbia or into the District of Columbia, which is another defect, or, as has also been suggested, from noncontiguous territory. These instances are sufficient to show that the bill is full of defects, and therefore it should be considered by a proper committee of this House. So much for the form of the bill.

But taking the bill on its merits, what does it do? In my State, in the great State of California, the wine industry has over a hundred millions of dollars invested. There are 250,000 acres of land under cultivation in the grape. A case of wine or a barrel of wine shipped from that State into another State under this bill would have to be marked.

But what could compel a man who has manufactured a case of wine or a barrel of wine in France or Germany or Italy or Spain, and who desires to ship it into the State of New York or the State of Massachusetts, to mark his wine? What could compel a maker of whisky in England or Scotland or in Ireland or Canada to mark his liquor when it is shipped into one of the seaboard States of the United States? Now, I contend that this bill, before it shall be voted upon in the fashion proposed, should be fully considered by a proper committee. The Committee on the Judiciary, in its consideration of the bill, would look into all these questions, and when it would be finally reported to this House it would be as nearly perfect as any Member of this House might desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He has a good legal mind, and he can pick out another fault in this bill in five minutes if there is any. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can not consider this bill here and suggest such amendment as ought to be had.

Mr. KAHN. I think it can be considered to very much better advantage in the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And you could not get it considered there, when they stand 16 to 2 on any kind of "dry" legislation.

Mr. KAHN. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken about that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee (continuing). We could not get it out of the committee, and we can consider it here.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is misinformed as to how the committee stands on this question. But, aside from that, I understand that the gentleman from Mississippi, who has introduced the bill, has never presented the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary, to which it was referred.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the use, with that ratio against him? I do not say this disrespectfully of that committee; but we could not get dry legislation from them when they stand 16 to 2 "wet."

Mr. KAHN. But the gentleman from Tennessee does not want to pass this legislation offhand and hurriedly, only to find afterwards that it is unconstitutional. It is better, in my judgment, to follow the regular practice of having measures considered by the committees. The matter should be presented to the proper committee of the House having jurisdiction of the subject, in order that any mistakes may be eliminated or corrected, and then when the bill is reported to the House it is practically perfect. To my mind that is a much better practice than voting upon it in this way.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is one of the good ways, and this is a good way, too; and then when the bill is passed here it can go into conference and be reexamined, and after it is made law the Supreme Court passes upon that before anybody is hurt, and I am willing to trust to these channels to make a good law.

Mr. KAHN. I believe that the old plan of the House to consider these bills in committee is much the better practice—one which ought not to be departed from. I certainly hope, Mr. Chairman, in view of the defects in the bill that I have pointed out, that the committee will vote it down.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JENKINS. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withhold his motion until I can ask the gentleman from Tennessee to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withhold his motion?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Tennessee to say two or three times that the "gentleman from Wisconsin," meaning myself, had said that the Committee on the Judiciary stood 16 to 2 against every dry proposition.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to say that 16 to 2 were against every "dry" proposition. If I am mistaken, the gentleman can correct me.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman certainly misstated my remarks, and I know the gentleman from Tennessee does not intend to do that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course I do not. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee stood 16 to 2 against all these bills.

Mr. JENKINS. That was on the constitutionality.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is where I misunderstood the gentleman. I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. JENKINS. I know the gentleman from Tennessee is fair; and not only fair, but able.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1101, the penal code bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

STRIKING BILLS FROM THE CALENDAR.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following bills, of which I will give the numbers, be stricken from the Calendar, because the same were all passed in the so-called "Omnibus bill" (H. R. 21896). The bills that I ask to be stricken from the Calendar are numbered as follows: H. R. 7701, H. R. 17050, H. R. 17993, H. R. 18988, H. R. 21591, and H. R. 21632.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to strike from the Calendar the bills the numbers of which he has just read, the bills having been enacted. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LACEY BIRD LAW.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a copy of the Lacey bird law that we passed some years ago. I read a portion of it, and I desire that the whole law may be printed in the RECORD, so that Members may see it to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The law is as follows:

CHAP. 553. An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibit the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the duties and powers of the Department of Agriculture are hereby enlarged so as to include the preservation, distribution, introduction, and restoration of game birds and other wild birds. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to purchase such game birds and other wild birds as may be required therefor, subject, however, to the laws of the various States and Territories. The object and purpose of this act is to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct, and also to regulate the introduction of American or foreign birds or animals in localities where they have not heretofore existed.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time collect and publish useful information as to the propagation, uses, and preservation of such birds.

And the Secretary of Agriculture shall make and publish all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of this act, and shall expend for said purposes such sums as Congress may appropriate therefor.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to import into the United States any foreign wild animal or bird except under special permit from the United States Department of Agriculture: Provided, That nothing in this section shall restrict the importation of natural history specimens for museums or scientific collections, or the importation of certain cage birds, such as domesticated canaries, parrots, or such other species as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate.

The importation of the mongoose, the so-called "flying foxes" or fruit bats, the English sparrow, the starling, or such other birds or animals as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time declare injurious to the interest of agriculture or horticulture is hereby prohibited, and such species upon arrival at any of the ports of the United States shall be destroyed or returned at the expense of the owner. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this section.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to deliver to any common carrier, or for any common carrier to transport from one State or Territory to another State or Territory, or from the District of Columbia or Alaska to any State or Territory, or from any State or Territory to the District of Columbia or Alaska, any foreign animals or birds the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies or parts thereof of any wild animals or birds where such animals or birds have been killed in violation of the laws of the State, Territory, or District in which the same were killed: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the transportation of any dead birds or animals killed during the season when the same may be lawfully captured, and the export of which is not prohibited by law in the State, Territory, or District in which the same are killed.

SEC. 4. That all packages containing such dead animals, birds, or parts thereof, when shipped by interstate commerce, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be plainly and clearly marked, so that the name and address of the shipper and the nature of the contents may be readily ascertained on inspection of the outside of such packages. For each evasion or violation of this act the shipper shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200; and the consignee knowingly receiving such articles so shipped and transported in violation of this act shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200; and the carrier knowingly carrying or transporting the same shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200.

SEC. 5. That all dead bodies, or parts thereof, of any foreign game animals, or game or song birds, the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies, or parts thereof, of any wild game animals, or game or song birds transported into any State or Territory, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such animals or birds had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise. This act shall not prevent the importation, transportation, or sale of birds or bird plumage manufactured from the feathers of barnyard fowl.

Approved, May 25, 1900.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 23473) extending the time for final entry of mineral claims within the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation in Wyoming was changed from the Committee on the Public Lands to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The Speaker laid before the House the following request of the Senate, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
December 16, 1908.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7777) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 22274. An act to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.

H. J. Res. 206. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2999. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the extension of New Hampshire avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1907.

S. 4814. An act to amend section 491 n of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

S. 4308. An act to change the name of V street, from Florida avenue to Nineteenth street NW., to California street.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, joint resolution of the followiug title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. R. 105. Joint resolution for the purpose of more fully carrying into effect the convention concluded at Brussels on March 15, 1886, in reference to the exchange of official journals, etc.—to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. FLOOD for one week, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a detailed statement as to the employment of classified civil-service employees under lump appropriations—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Charles A. Doak and John R. Doak, heirs of Alfred W. Doak, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Andrew J. Tranghber against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the law relating to issue of patents to competent Indian allottees—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a repeal of leases of land within the Canal Zone—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 24344) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1803), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23196) granting an increase of pension to Bessie P. August—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 21719) granting an increase of pension to John V. Frisby—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 22610) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Stamps—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23788) granting an increase of pension to Solomon Winningham—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23787) granting a pension to George Stephens, sr.—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23871) granting an increase of pension to Florence A. Scott—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 24329) providing for a survey and new project for improving the Tillamook River, Oregon, bar and bay, and Hoquarton Slough to Tillamook City—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24330) providing for repair of dikes and maintenance work on Tillamook Bay and Hoquarton Slough, in Oregon—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GARNER: A bill (H. R. 24331) providing for the establishment of a Weather Bureau station at Laredo, Tex.—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MARSHALL: A bill (H. R. 24332) relative to patents on coal deposits, lands, etc.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24333) to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction of certain Indian claims—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 24334) to authorize the construction of a railroad siding to the United States navy-yard, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MAYNARD: A bill (H. R. 24335) granting permission to the Lynnhaven Terminal Corporation to improve the lower Chesapeake and Lynnhaven Bay by the construction of a breakwater—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 24336) to amend section 3613 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24337) to amend section 2625 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24338) to amend section 2619 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SABATH: A bill (H. R. 24339) to provide compensation for injuries to employees while solely engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, the handling, dispatching, or sorting of the mail or postal matter on cars or vessels, to which the regulative power of Congress extends under the Constitution of the United States, and to create a commission of injury awards, and granting powers and an appropriation to said commission—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 24340) to amend an act entitled "An act to distinctly designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purposes of assessment and taxation, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SMITH of California: A bill (H. R. 24341) to divide the southern judicial district of California into three divisions and to provide for the holding of terms of court at the cities of Fresno, Los Angeles, and San Diego—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 24342) to increase the efficiency of the army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILEY: A bill (H. R. 24343) authorizing that agents be sent into China and other eastern countries for the purpose of inquiring into and stimulating our trade relations with those countries, removing the boycott, and urging the use of American cotton goods—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. OLCOTT: A bill (H. R. 24345) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company of Maryland to enter the District of Columbia," approved May 29, 1908—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WILEY: A bill (H. R. 24471) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in Alabama—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24472) to appropriate $50,000 to deepen the channel and remove obstructions in the Conecuh River, in the State of Alabama—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: Concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 47) for the appointment of a committee to attend the formal opening exercises of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at Seattle, Wash., June 1, 1909—to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. MAYNARD: Concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 48) providing for an examination and survey to be made of the channel from the sea to the Norfolk Navy-Yard—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions: A bill (H. R. 24344) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors—to the Private Calendar.

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 24346) granting a pension to William H. Stephenson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24347) granting a pension to Rebecca Schofield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24348) granting an increase of pension to John G. Hearn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AIKEN: A bill (H. R. 24349) for the relief of R. Q. Merrick—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24350) for the relief of Mary Norris Keith—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24351) for the relief of J. M. Ellison—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24352) granting a pension to Charles J. Tribble—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24353) granting an increase of pension to Harry Horton—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 24354) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas J. Holmes and Richard R. Holmes, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BOUTELL: A bill (H. R. 24355) granting an increase of pension to Michael P. Roehrig—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24356) granting an increase of pension to Arthur J. Calder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 24357) granting a pension to George T. Keith—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CANDLER: A bill (H. R. 24358) for the relief of the heirs of Nancy Whitfield, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24359) for the relief of the heirs of Sarah R. Farmer, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CANNON: A bill (H. R. 24360) granting an increase of pension to William B. Estes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24361) granting an increase of pension to William O'Neill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24362) granting an increase of pension to James A. Hedges—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24363) to correct the military record of Clark W. Cottrell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COOPER of Texas: A bill (H. R. 24364) granting an increase of pension to Philip A. Work—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 24365) granting an increase of pension to George E. Wood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 24366) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Bradley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24367) granting an increase of pension to Robert T. Burton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24368) granting an increase of pension to John G. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24369) granting an increase of pension to Joseph M. Nichols—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24370) granting an increase of pension to Patrick H. Overman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24371) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Goodman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24372) granting a pension to Ellis T. Padgett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 24373) to reimburse Royal L. Sweany, late deputy collector of internal revenue at Tacoma, Wash.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DIXON: A bill (H. R. 24374) granting an increase of pension to John W. Roberts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24375) granting an increase of pension to William N. Barnett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24376) granting an increase of pension to Harold I. Wood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24377) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Wayman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUREY: A bill (H. R. 24378) granting a pension to Corinne E. Hall—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLOYD: A bill (H. R. 24379) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin M. Ammons—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 24380) granting a pension to Annie Groves—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24381) granting an increase of pension to William L. V. Kite—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24382) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of W. B. Chamness—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULTON: A bill (H. R. 24383) granting a pension to Henry H. Brunsteter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 24384) granting an increase of pension to James Looney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24385) granting a pension to Herman H. Richter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24386) granting a pension to William S. Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24387) granting a pension to Ella Mansell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24388) granting a pension to M. C. Bixby—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24389) granting a pension to Louisa K. Holbert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24390) to correct the military record of William Eller—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HASKINS: A bill (H. R. 24391) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24392) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel L. Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24393) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Bugbee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 24394) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas Biever—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24395) granting an increase of pension to Elias M. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24396) granting a pension to John Alexander—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 24397) granting an increase of pension to John McMahon—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24398) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Jordan—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24399) granting an increase of pension to William T. Hughes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24400) granting an increase of pension to David W. Travis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HINSHAW: A bill (H. R. 24401) granting an increase of pension to Simon P. Lash—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24402) granting an increase of pension to Alfred B. Ebner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLLIDAY: A bill (H. R. 24403) granting an increase of pension to Constantine G. Muil—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24404) granting an increase of pension to Frank Waters—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24405) granting an increase of pension to William M. Biggs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24406) granting an increase of pension to James Knight—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARNER: A bill (H. R. 24407) granting a pension to Bayard Fern—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: A bill (H. R. 24408) granting a pension to Margaret Wardrope—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24409) granting a pension to Hans Hansen—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 24410) granting an increase of pension to John T. Whetzel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 24411) granting a pension to Hester Young—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24412) granting a pension to Rachel Allex—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24413) granting a pension to Mary Ann Farnley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24414) granting a pension to Sweeting Miles—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24415) to remove the charge of desertion now existing on the records of the War Department against Charles Sansome—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24416) to remove the charge of desertion now existing on the records of the Navy Department against Charles Berry—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 24417) granting an increase of pension to Hezekiah Scott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 24418) granting an increase of pension to John L. Brennon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24419) granting an increase of pension to William H. Canaday—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 24420) for the relief of the heirs of John L. Doxey, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 24421) for the relief of the estate of William O'Donnell, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KIMBALL: A bill (H. R. 24422) granting an increase of pension to James W. Jesse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24423) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Green—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN: A bill (H. R. 24424) for the relief of S. H. Loftin—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KNAPP: A bill (H. R. 24425) granting a pension to Joanna J. Franklin—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24426) granting an increase of pension to Franklin A. Collins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KÜSTERMANN: A bill (H. R. 24427) granting an increase of pension to John H. Lentz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: A bill (H. R. 24428) granting a pension to Hannah M. Rising—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE: A bill (H. R. 24429) for the relief of the estate of John McCullough, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24430) for the relief of the estate of Ira W. McCutchen—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24431) for the relief of the heirs of John Lyday, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LOVERING: A bill (H. R. 24432) granting an increase of pension to Frank E. Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 24433) granting an increase of pension to Christopher Sigmund—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINNEY: A bill (H. R. 24434) granting an increase of pension to John E. Robeson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 24435) granting an increase of pension to Daniel H. Dunbar—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24436) granting a pension to Helen M. House—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24437) granting a pension to Mary E. King—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARSHALL: A bill (H. R. 24438) for the relief of C. C. Schuyler—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24439) for the relief of Marshall H. Jewell—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24440) for the relief of C. N. Valentine—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MAYNARD: A bill (H. R. 24441) granting a pension to Anna P. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORSE: A bill (H. R. 24442) granting an increase of pension to Eveline E. Hedges—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOUSER: A bill (H. R. 24443) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLCOTT: A bill (H. R. 24444) granting a pension to Julia B. Coghlan—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: A bill (H. R. 24445) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Brunker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POLLARD: A bill (H. R. 24446) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Parker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REYNOLDS: A bill (H. R. 24447) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Stonebraker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHINOCK: A bill (H. R. 24448) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24449) granting an increase of pension to Norval L. Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIORDAN: A bill (H. R. 24450) granting an increase of pension to William McMorrow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24451) granting an increase of pension to William McMorrow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24452) granting a pension to Thomas F. Marcus—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 24453) for the relief of Louis L. Coleman—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 24454) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth E. Ten Eyck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 24455) granting an increase of pension to C. F. Hausdorf—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24456) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Stark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24457) granting an increase of pension to Harriet A. Kelliher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24458) granting a pension to T. B. Maloney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STURGISS: A bill (H. R. 24459) granting an increase of pension to Pary McNair—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24460) granting an increase of pension to James E. Murdock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 24461) granting a pension to Louisa Lane Benedict—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24462) granting an increase of pension to Rollin A. Waters—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24463) granting an increase of pension to Joel A. Proctor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24464) granting an increase of pension to Oswald E. Gravell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TIRRELL: A bill (H. R. 24465) granting an increase of pension to George W. Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEISSE: A bill (H. R. 24466) granting a pension to Emil Schuett—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILEY: A bill (H. R. 24467) granting an increase of pension to Annie L. Benton—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24468) granting an increase of pension to Valentine Cook—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: A bill (H. R. 24469) for the relief of the owners of lighter No. 128—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24470) granting an increase of pension to John Knowlson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. AIKEN: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Mary Norris Keith and J. M. Ellison—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of R. Q. Merrick—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: Petition of L. O. Williams and others, of Buffalo, N. Y., for general reduction of the tariff—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mary Quillen—to the Committee on Invalid Pentions.

Also, petition of C. D. Kaser and others, of Young Mountain, against S. 3940 (religious legislation in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mary Whelchel—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John Knowlson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Andrew Davey, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRADLEY: Petition of Chester Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Orange County, N. Y., favoring extension of the parcels-post system on rural routes—to the Committee on the the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BURNETT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of James Barron (H. R. 24168)—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of citizens of Alabama, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of Rear-Admiral H. F. Pickering Naval Garrison, No. 4, of Erie, Pa., favoring retirement of petty officers and enlisted men of the navy after twenty-five years of actual service—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also petition of Asiatic Exclusion League, for legislation enacting more stringent immigration laws against Asiatics—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Michael J. Daley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Veteran Army of the Philippines, for legislation making August 13 a legal holiday, to be known as "Occupation Day"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of New York, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Edward A. Rollins and others, of Brooklyn, against duty on Philippine products—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of J. H. Ketcham and W. G. Rohrberg, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of J. G. Harbard, of Veteran Army of Philippines, for legislation making August 13 a legal holiday, to be known as "Occupation Day"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CANDLER: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Sarah R. Farmer and heirs of Nancy Whitefield—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DUREY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of residents of St. Johnsville, N. Y.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DWIGHT: Petition of Bean & Co., wholesale grocers, of Binghamton, N. Y., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FLOYD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Benjamin M. Ammons—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOWLER: Petition of Thomas F. Kershner and others, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of Eliot C. Moody, of Westfield; A. W. Beebe, of Millburn; and William R. Lynde, of Westfield, all of the State of New Jersey, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of retail shoe merchants of Chicago, Ill., for removal of duty on hides—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Jennie E. Parr and others, of Streator, Ill., favoring amendment to the Sherman antitrust law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition for appropriate legislation enhancing provisions of the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Asiatic Exclusion League, favoring a more stringent law relative to immigration of Asiatics—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of H. W. Letton, of insurance company of Stettin, Germany, favoring S. 279, relative to reimbursing fire insurance companies—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of Fred C. Mack and Charles W. Meyer, of Lodge No. 68, International Association of Machinists, favoring a more effective Asiatic-exclusion act—to the Commitee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Sacramento Drainage Commission and the River Improvement and Drainage Association of California, favoring H. R. 3892, for improvement of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of W. T. Hughes and David W. Travis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HIGGINS: Petition of B. P. Bishop, of Norwich, Conn., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HINSHAW: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Sallie J. Latham (H. R. 3204)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUSTON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of James B. Prosser (H. R. 23919)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John L. Doxey—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KAHN: Petitions of San Francisco Lodge, No. 68, International Association of Machinists; Frank Stockton and 48 other residents of Stockton; and A. V. Hoffman and 48 other residents of Stockton, all of the State of California, for the exclusion of Asiatics other than certain special classes, as merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KNAPP: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Franklin A. Collins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Joanna J. Franklin—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of residents of Jefferson County, N. Y., against S. 3940 (Sunday observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LANDIS: Petition of citizens of Russianville, Ind., against S. 3940 (religious observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LEE: Papers to accompany bills for relief of Juliet A. McCutchen; P. B. Lyday, heir of John Lyday; and J. W. McCullough—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MALBY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Alonzo Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLCOTT: Petition of Emma M. Donning and others, for a clause, in bill opening the Fort Peck Reservation in Montana, prohibiting liquor traffic on the reservation—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of Union League Club of New York, favoring passage of bill H. R. 220, by Mr. Goulden, against desecration of the flag by advertisements and in other ways—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Thomas Brunker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PUJO: Petition of citizens of St. Landry Parish, La., against construction of a dam across Bayou Courtableau—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. REYNOLDS: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Blair W. Peck—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of John Davis and Joseph H. Stonebraker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SABATH: Petition of Asiatic Exclusion League of North America, favoring a more effective Asiatic exclusion law—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mary A. and Clarence E. Haney—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of residents of Becker County, Minn., against the Johnston bill (S. 3940), providing for religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STURGISS: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Pary McNair—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TIRRELL: Paper to accompany bill for relief of George W. Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Charles M. Goodfellow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG: Petition of William S. Piper and others, of Michigan, favoring the pensioning of members of the Military Telegraphers' Corps in civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 17, 1908.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward Everett Hale.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. ALDRICH, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

DISMISSAL OF CASES BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a list of congressional cases dismissed on motion of the defendants May 13, 1907, for want of jurisdiction, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, certifying, pursuant to the order of the court, that the cases of Charles Choteau, No. 9990 (dismissed April 6, 1908), William Birdsong, No. 11907 A (dismissed January 6, 1908), and Andrew J. Musselman, No. 11908 C (dismissed January 6, 1908), were severally dismissed upon motions of the defendants, and were ordered by the court to be certified to the President of the Senate, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact filed by the court in the following causes:

In the cause of the Trustees of the First Presbyterian Church of Paris, Ky., v. United States;

In the cause of St. Augustine's Roman Catholic Church, of Lebanon, Ky., v. United States; and

In the cause of the Shiloh Presbyterian Church, of Calhoun, Tenn., v. United States.

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

THE PARLIAMENT OF TURKEY.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask leave out of order to present a resolution for consideration at this time.

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Department of State be requested to communicate to the newly convened parliament of Turkey the congratulations and good wishes of the Senate of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 7777) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 22879) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved January 23, 1908, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 2999. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the extension of New Hampshire avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1907;

S. 4308. An act to change the name of V street, from Florida avenue to Nineteenth street NW., to California street;

S. 4814. An act to amend section 491 n of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia;

H. R. 22274. An act to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.; and

H. J. Res. 206. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month.

ADJOURNMENT TO SATURDAY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS ON SATURDAY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the request that there be an understanding that no business shall be transacted by the Senate at its session on Saturday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island requests that it be understood that no business shall be transacted at its session on Saturday next.

Mr. HALE. I have just been present at a meeting of the Committee on the Census, and the chairman of the committee would like a reservation of the right to report the census bill on Saturday.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; that is excepted, as routine business.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] is not here. I know that he is very anxious to push along the consideration of the postal savings bank bill. I think, perhaps, it may not be his intention to take up the bill for action before the holidays, but as I understand the request of the Senator from Rhode Island, it would not preclude the continuation of debate this week on that bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. A large number of Senators are about to leave the city; in fact, quite a number have already left, and I think the discussion of any question of general importance ought not to take place in the absence of a majority of the Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. I think we should not make the agreement in the absence of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to let the question remain unacted upon until the Senator from Montana is present.

Mr. BURKETT. I think that would be perhaps the better way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island withdraws his request?

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the request for the present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of Joseph L. Atkins, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a United States court of patent appeals, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a memorial of the Brightwood Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the violation of section 16 of the act governing the operation of street railways by the street railway companies of the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Washington, D. C., and the petition of W. H. Rapley, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a high-pressure water system in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the committee on harbor of the Chamber of Commerce of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, praying that the present coastwise shipping law be continued in force, and also for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine by subsidy, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARNER presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Missouri, praying for the adoption of a certain amendment to the present widows' pension law, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of the Associated Banks of Sheridan, Wyo., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings bank bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. TAYLOR presented petitions of the Commercial Club of Johnson City, of the Business Men's Club of Memphis, and of the Board of Trade of Pulaski, all in the State of Tennessee, praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cleveland, Tenn., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the surviving members of the United States Military Telegraph Corps who served in the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DEPEW presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York City, Brooklyn, Mount Vernon, and Yonkers, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the surviving members of the United States Military Telegraph Corps who served in the civil war, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 984, Patrons of Husbandry, of Chester, N. Y., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post and postal savings bank bills," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented petitions of Local Unions Nos. 67, 199, 201, 237, and 249, of Bingham, Mercur, Castle Gate, and West Jordan, all of the United Mine Workers of America, in the State of Utah, praying that an investigation be made into the conditions of mines operated by the Treadwell Mining Company on Douglas Island, Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a petition of Local Lodge, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the immigration of Asiatics into the United States, excepting merchants, students, and travelers, and remonstrating against extending the right of naturalization to Asiatics, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CARTER presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Montana, praying for the enactment of legislation to create an additional land district in that State, to be known as the "Harlowton land district," which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BROWN presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 7055) granting an increase of pension to James M. Thomas, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 2706) granting an increase of pension to Alva L. Fitch, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEYBURN presented a petition of Local Union No. 9, United Mine Workers of America, of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, and a petition of Local Union No. 10, United Mine Workers of America, of Burke, Idaho, praying that an investigation be made into the conditions of mines operated by the Treadwell Mining Company on Douglas Island, Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 7874) granting an increase of pension to Eri C. Tuller, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 7323) granting an increase of pension to James Kirby, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ESTATE OF ISABELLA ANN FLUKER, DECEASED.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That Senate bill 7331 for the relief of the estate of Isabella Ann Fluker, deceased, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Tucker Act."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KNOX (by request) introduced a bill (S. 7903) to change the date of commission of Col. John L. Chamberlain, Inspector-General, U. S. Army, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOURNE introduced a bill (S. 7904) to increase the salaries of the President and Vice-President of the United States, respectively, to $100,000 and $25,000 per annum, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 7905) granting an increase of pension to Wesley Trafford, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7906) granting a pension to Charles N. Phelps, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7907) granting an increase of pension to Milo S. Goldthwait, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7908) for the relief of Patrick McCormick, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 7909) to amend an act entitled "An act to distinctively designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purposes of assessment and taxation, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 7910) for the relief of J. Blair Shoenfelt, former United States Indian agent, Union Agency, Okla., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. du PONT introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7911) granting a pension to William Miles; and

A bill (S. 7912) granting a pension to Hannah Traynor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND introduced a bill (S. 7913) granting an increase of pension to Edward D. Le Compte, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PILES (for Mr. CLAPP) introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (S. 7914) to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 460), entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect;"

A bill (S. 7915) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and making appropriation for the same;

A bill (S. 7916) to amend an act approved May 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 6 of an act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes;'" and

A bill (S. 7917) for the enrollment in the Five Civilized Tribes of certain persons inadvertently omitted from the rolls (with the accompanying paper).

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 7918) for the relief of Bernard W. Murray, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PERKINS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Territories:

A bill (S. 7919) for the protection of wild animals and birds in the interior of Alaska and setting aside a refuge and breeding place therefor; and

A bill (S. 7920) for the protection of wild animals and birds in Alaska and setting aside a refuge and breeding place therefor.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced a bill (S. 7921) granting a pension to Wiley S. Roberts, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OVERMAN (for Mr. SIMMONS) introduced a bill (S. 7922) for the relief of the heirs of Mary Everitt, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULBERSON (for Mr. GORE) introduced a bill (S. 7923) granting a pension to Jeremiah Dotter, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (S. 7924) granting an increase of pension to George W. Rollman, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 7925) to create an additional land district in the State of Montana, to be known as the

"Harlowton land district," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 7926) granting a pension to Julia B. Coghlan, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 7927) for the relief of the heirs of Sarah R. Farmer, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7928) for the relief of the estate of Ann M. Meehan, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7929) granting a pension to Maria E. Tilton; and

A bill (S. 7930) granting a pension to Aaron O. Houghton.

Mr. BORAH introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7931) granting an increase of pension to Samuel L. Shannon;

A bill (S. 7932) granting an increase of pension to Charles Hobart;

A bill (S. 7933) granting an increase of pension to George W. Curl; and

A bill (S. 7934) granting an increase of pension to Amasa Smith.

Mr. BOURNE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7935) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Fink; and

A bill (S. 7936) granting an increase of pension to Boyd Cannady.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (S. 7937) for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7938) for the relief of John H. Cole, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 7939) granting a pension to Ellen T. Cowen, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. On behalf of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], who was called away on account of a death in his family, I introduce sundry bills, with accompanying papers, and ask that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bills were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (S. 7940) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes;"

A bill (S. 7941) to amend section 3613 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (S. 7942) to amend section 2619 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (S. 7943) to amend section 2625 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 7944) granting an increase of pension to Gertrude S. Walker, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $400,000 for the purchase of a building and grounds, or of a site and the erection of a building thereon, in the city of Paris, France, for the use of the embassy at that city, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to China from $12,000 to $17,500, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

PANAMA CANAL PURCHASE.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to return to the Departments of State, War, and Justice all the documents and papers transmitted by the President of the United States to the Senate in his message of December 15, 1908, which were formerly a part of the files of these departments and were not printed by an order of the Senate.

THE MARINE CORPS.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask that the following resolution be read and referred to the proper committee.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States has lately promulgated a series of orders in connection with the Marine Corps, detaching them from battle ships and requiring them to perform certain tests, as are fully set forth in said orders: Now be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby instructed to inquire and report, first, whether the President, under existing statutes, has the authority to issue these orders.

Second. Whether, if he has such authority, the execution of these orders would not impair the efficiency of the marine service instead of advancing it, and whether the service would not thereby be diverted from the purpose for which it was intended by law.

Third. Whether Congress has not the right to prescribe a set of rules and regulations for the government of the Marine Corps which will bind the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States; and, if so, to report a set of rules for the government of the Marine Corps to effect the purpose for which said corps was organized and to promote its usefulness.

Mr. HALE. I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the resolution. Perhaps he may not have listened to the reading of it.

Mr. WARREN. I did not.

Mr. HALE. It provides that action relating to the Marine Corps, the President's order fixing the duties of members of that corps, shall be considered and reported upon by the Committee on Military Affairs. The Senator will remember that the Marine Corps is a part not of the army establishment, but of the navy. I should like to have his view as to whether this subject should go to the Military Committee or the Naval Committee.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I confess to having been engaged in reading a paper, and I did not hear the resolution. I wish it might be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution, at the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. If the Military Committee should be charged with the responsibility of that resolution, I think they would expect to have the views of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I see the reasons why the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs called my attention to it. I see no reason why the resolution should not go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the resolution going to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The President of the United States, I understand, by an order issued some weeks ago, detached the Marine Corps from the battle ships, to be turned into policemen or patrolmen or janitors or whatever else they may be called, and yesterday he promulgated another series of orders. I infer that the President intended to take them away entirely from the jurisdiction of the navy. It looks to me that way. For that reason I simply proposed to send the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs, but I want to say that I have not the slightest objection in the world to sending it to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I submit to any change the chairman of the committee wants to make in the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I have moved that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPPRESSION OF TRUSTS, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill (S. 7371) to suppress pools, trusts, and combinations in trade, and to provide penalties for violations of its provisions, and for other purposes, is on the Table Calendar. I desire to call up the bill for the purpose of moving that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill by title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GAMBLING IN FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to give notice that on January 26, after the morning business, I shall desire to address the Senate on the bill (S. 7370) to prohibit any person or corporation, for themselves or for or in the interest of any other person or corporation, directly or indirectly, from delivering, receiving, or transmitting, and from being interested in, or aiding in any manner, the receiving, delivering, or transmitting by mail, telegraph, telephone, or other means whatever, in any State, district, country, Territory, or place over which the sovereignty of the United States of America now exists, any message, information, intelligence, letter, writing, card, device, sign, symbol, cipher, or other thing whatsoever, the subject of the senses, or any of them, whereby intelligence or information may be conveyed or understood, relating to or in any manner or form concerning any transaction or proposed or suggested transaction, scheme, or plan to speculate or gamble, or gain or lose sums of money called "margins," which gains or losses, respectively, are made to depend upon the future increase or decrease of the market price of any product of the soil, provided that at the time of such transaction, proposed transaction, scheme, or plan for so speculating or gambling and such product of the soil be the subject of interstate commerce, or the subject of commerce from, or by and between, the people of the United States of America and the people of any foreign country.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 22879. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved January 23, 1908, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN OREGON.

Mr. BOURNE. I ask that Senate bill 6788 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 6788) to amend sections 2586 and 2587 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the acts of April 25, 1882, and August 28, 1890, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. BOURNE. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BOURNE. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, beginning with line 16, strike out the following words:

North of the forty-fifth degree of north latitude to the north bank of the Columbia River and east to the one hundred and twenty-third degree of west longitude—

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

within the territory described as follows:

"Beginning at the summit of the Coast Mountains on the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, running thence west to the Pacific Ocean, thence north to where the north bank of the Columbia River intersects the Pacific Ocean, thence easterly and southerly along and including the north bank of the Columbia River to where 122° 46′ 55″ west longitude intersects 45° 51′ north latitude, thence westerly to the summit of the Coast Mountains, thence southerly along the summit of said Coast Mountains to the place of beginning."

So as to read:

Third. The district of Astoria, to comprise all the waters and shores lying within the territory described as follows:

Beginning at the summit of the Coast Mountains on the forty-fifth degree, north latitude, running thence west to the Pacific Ocean, thence north to where the north bank of the Columbia River intersects the Pacific Ocean, thence easterly and southerly along and including the north bank of the Columbia River to where 122° 46′ 55″ west longitude intersects 45° 51′ north latitude, thence westerly to the summit of the Coast Mountains, thence southerly along the summit of said Coast Mountains to the place of beginning, in which Astoria shall be the port of entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. PAUL BRIDGE AND TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 7777) to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn., returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS METHOD OF POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CARTER. I submit the final report of the Joint Commission on the Business Method of the Post-Office Department and the Postal Service, under the act of Congress approved March 2, 1907, accompanied by a draft of a proposed bill to codify, revise, and amend the postal laws of the United States recommended by the joint commission. I move that the report and draft of the proposed bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 7945) to codify, revise, and amend the postal laws of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CARTER. In this connection I ask that 2,000 additional copies of the report and draft of the proposed bill be printed for the use of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the bill (S. 7945) to codify, revise, and amend the postal laws of the United States, and report thereon, for the use of the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

BUSINESS ON SATURDAY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I now renew the request I made a moment since, that there be an understanding that no business, aside from routine morning business, shall be transacted at the session of the Senate on Saturday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island requests that no business be transacted at the session of the Senate on Saturday next, excepting routine morning business. Is there objection?

Mr. FULTON. I understand that will not preclude the making of committee reports.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. FULTON. I am especially careful to have that reservation made, and I understand it has been made. I exercise this care because I am confident that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce is very industriously at work preparing a report on Senate bill No. 423, which was referred to his committee in the early part of the last session. During the late hours of the last session he very earnestly expressed his desire and affirmed his intention to report the bill before the adjournment this session for the holidays.

I am in deep sympathy with the Senator, because I know he has been laboring very earnestly to get up a report, and has found some difficulty in framing it just as he wants it. I have no doubt he will shortly solve the difficulties and will be here Saturday early asking leave to submit the report. It would be a bitter disappointment to him were he prevented from so doing by an oversight in the order now proposed.

Mr. LODGE. Saturday will be the last opportunity before the holidays.

Mr. FULTON. Saturday will be the last opportunity before the holidays, and, of course, it can not possibly be assumed or presumed that the Senator will fail to make the report at that time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Rhode Island is agreed to.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, it had not been my intention, I will say to the Senate, to occupy any time in a general discussion of this postal savings bank subject. I had rather expected to confine my remarks to some special provisions in the bill when it came up for final hearing. I will say I had also hoped that this bill might have passed to final consideration and passage before the holidays. But it seems from circumstances that we will not be able to get a final consideration before our adjournment for the holidays, and I desire therefore to speak this morning generally upon the subject.

I want to say in the beginning that I am not a recent convert, and that I speak as one long since persuaded of the advisability of such legislation, and as one who has already taken interest enough in the subject to prepare and introduce a bill at the last session of Congress, and also as one who took some part in securing a day certain for its consideration.

I also want to remind the Republicans of this body that we are each of us pledged to the American people by our last national platform, as well as by every speaker who went upon the stump in the recent campaign, to enact this legislation.

I had the honor, as did a good many Senators on the Republican side, to be a delegate to that convention and of helping to adopt that platform, and upon a hundred occasions I assured my hearers that this Republican pledge would be fulfilled.

Therefore I am true to my own convictions, I am true to my party's pledges, and I am true to the confidence which the American people reposed in us when I speak this morning in support of the pending bill.

In my opinion, Mr. President, we ought to enact this legislation without much of delay. We ought not to juggle with the confidence of the American people, so recently and so universally reposed in us as a party. We ought not, by procrastination, to exasperate the American people with the idea already too prevalent, let me say, that there are influences more potent and more controlling in legislation than the interests of the great mass of the people.

Whatever may be Senators' idea as to the effect of this legislation upon those within their own small circle of friends, no Senator can be blind to the efficacy of it and the desirability of it to the untold thousands of Americans without the domain of legislative influence other than the ballot of American citizenship.

I speak thus because we are all creatures of environment, more or less, and our personal contact with men may restrict our views to the interests of the few we know or the few who write to us upon the subject. But Senators should remember that beyond the few they know are the many they do not know, and beyond the comparatively few in number, and even more limited in the diversification of interests, who have written to them upon the subject, are the untold millions of Americans who have never written, who would not know how to write, and who would not have the courage, perhaps, to write to a United States Senator upon this or any other subject.

Those are the people that this legislation is for, and those people, I say, have never been heard from. Those people may have thought of this subject and they may have not. They may have thought favorably of it and they may have never thought of it at all. But there is not a Senator here who has followed the course of the history of savings banks in this country and of postal savings banks in other countries but must be persuaded of the value of the one and of the greater value of the other.

I am going to speak plainly here this morning. I understand—although I know no good reason for it—that there is a determination about the Senate Chamber to delay, with the possible hope of ultimately defeating, the consideration of this bill. I say I do not understand why, because it is legislation so long considered, so universally desired, and yet so long delayed, that, in my opinion, there can be no reasonable excuse for dilatory tactics to prevent its coming to a vote. The American people want it and, in my opinion, the emergencies of these times demand its enactment. So I can say that it is both popular in esteem and it is potential for good.

Of course sometimes we hear that the subject has not had consideration. Each of us within the last few days has had handed to us a very strong speech made against the postal savings proposition.

One of the criticisms in that speech is that it has never been considered, that it has been foisted onto the American Congress at this time by theorists, and that it is an untried venture. In fact, a member of this body said to me the other day, "Nobody has even considered this subject at all," and when I made the reply to him that we had already had some Senate reports heretofore he questioned the statement that it had ever been considered and was very certain that no report had ever been made before. And yet there have been two favorable Senate reports and none unfavorable. The House of Representatives has considered the subject, and their committee reported favorably upon it in times past. I find that three or four or half a dozen Presidents have recommended it in their messages. Every Postmaster-General has recommended it for almost twenty years. In addition to that, let me say that in 1897 the United States Senate itself took action in the matter and passed a resolution asking the Secretary of State to call upon our consular officers in foreign countries to report upon the result of postal savings banks operations there. Those investigations were made, and I have the Secretary's report this morning—over 300 pages. It was printed as a Senate document in 1898 and is a history of the working of the postal savings system in other countries up to that time.

Not only that, but away back in Blaine's time the Senate passed a similar resolution, and Mr. Blaine, as Secretary of State, sent to all of our consular officers abroad and got reports upon the operation of the postal savings system in other countries.

There have been 73 bills introduced in the Senate and the House. I find on looking up the matter 15 consular reports, separate from those that I refer to, contain articles upon the operation of the postal savings system in other countries. I also find 57 separate and distinct articles in the current magazines in the last half dozen years.

So I say it is not a new subject that has not been considered, and that the people are not concerned in, because I undertake to say that there has not been any matter of legislation that has received more universal attention than has the subject of the postal savings system.

I have observed in my short career as a member of this body that when any new legislation is contemplated it is met first with the doubt and fear as to its constitutionality, and second with the criticism that it is visionary in its inception and socialistic in its tendency.

I realize, of course, that any legislation which undertakes to have the Government do anything for the people is both visionary and revolutionary in the minds of some people, but I am glad to say that those people have never been able to control the Republican party for any great length of time, nor to handicap the American Congress in its course of progressive legislation. We all recall that the meat-inspection bill of a year or two ago was both revolutionary and unconstitutional in the minds of some people, but it is doing very successful and very satisfactory business, notwithstanding the somewhat of a handicap it labored under at the beginning, as beyond the pale of legitimate and honest legislation. The child-labor question has had to run that same gantlet.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. As the Senator from Nebraska is suggesting something about the constitutional feature of this bill, I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks it is within the power of Congress to enter within the domain of a State and control the domestic relations of the State with reference to the exemptions which should prevail, and with reference to the taxation of property and the exemption from payment of debts and of garnishee, as this bill purports to do? Can not that be better left to the States?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say, Mr. President, in response to that that I have not myself any doubt upon that proposition. I will also say to the Senator, as I said in the beginning, that it is not my intention to-day to go into any details as to the sections which I understand are to be the disputed sections. Section 10 provides as to exemptions from taxation and from garnishment and attachment. Perhaps that matter ought to receive consideration at the time when it is up especially for consideration.

I want to say, however, Mr. President, that the Senator's question only illustrates what we always have to contend with when we undertake to enact any legislation of this sort.

Senators can remember that it took almost a decade of time and almost a new generation of men to determine in this country that it was not unconstitutional for the American people to have pure food and pure drugs. For a hundred years the wise men of the past, statesmen and philosophers, respected more their vague and technical interpretation of the Constitution and their worm-eaten and antiquated ideas of governmental functions than their own health and happiness. I suspect when they partook of their frugal repast—as Senators' repasts always are, of rye bread and filled cheese, with oleomargarine for butter and clover seed and gelatin for strawberry jam—they comforted themselves with the hallucination that they were martyrs to the perpetuity of the Republic and the eternal luster of "Old Glory." For all these years this legislation has met with the same contention, the same doubt, the same fear somewhere that we might perhaps overstep the boundaries of our legitimate functions or of our powers and prerogatives.

It took fifteen years of patient and persistent endeavor to make some men believe that it would neither wreck the Republic nor ruin the railroads for Uncle Sam to take a hand in the legitimate control of our great transportation companies; and yet one objection after another has melted away, until to-day everybody wonders who it was that objected. Within a week we have seen in the public press the address of one of the great railway magnates in this country complimenting the Congress upon the legislation that it has enacted. When the resumption of specie payment——

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I do not know whether I am in favor of this bill or opposed to it. The trouble I have about it is this: You will admit that we must put this bill under some clause of the Constitution—I believe that is admitted—and that if we can incorporate postal savings banks they must come under some clause of the Constitution. Now, what clause of the Constitution is it under which this legislation is proposed?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say, in response to the Senator's inquiry, that I expect to refer briefly to that a little later on, but I think the general-welfare clause would cover it.

Mr. RAYNER. Oh, the general-welfare clause would cover everything on earth. I am aware of that.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, it has covered a good many things, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. RAYNER. Is that the proposition? You do not put it under the clause to establish post-offices and post-roads, for it is hardly possible that we could turn a post-office into a bank; you do not put it under the clause giving the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof; but this bill is put under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution. Some of us want to understand that, because we do not believe—I certainly do not believe—that the general-welfare clause means anything in the world, and I do not think the Supreme Court of the United States has ever said that it does.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, Mr. President, I will say that we may have some apprehension as to our power to start a bank under the Post-Office Department, but I think we have stretched our power to that extent. We are even to-day selling money orders and charging exchange for them. We have carried freight; we have done a messenger business, and are doing a messenger business. We have subsidized railroads and steamship lines; we are developing commerce; we have opened up the frontier under the little section of the Constitution providing that "Congress shall have power to establish post-offices and post-roads." Let me say, if we can not stretch that clause, there is that other clause that we shall be able to rely upon; under the general-welfare clause the Government by eminent domain acquired the battlefield of Gettysburg for park purposes. If it can be used there, I think we can safely rely upon it now, even though we may not have the power under the limitations of the clause with reference to establishing post-offices and post-roads.

I have seen Congress, or a part of it, apprehensive before, and that is why I have called attention to the meat-inspection bill and the rate bill in this connection. I have spoken as I have for the consolation of those really honest but timid souls who would rather offend the interests of all the people and the common sense of all the world than to offend their own theoretical and shelf-worn interpretation of governmental function. I have an optimistic notion that the world will finally become so practical that most men will be able to see that ideas expand as the years go by, and that our most profound convictions under to-day's environments may become our own jest on the morrow. But more particularly I have spoken of the development of governmental function for the sake of that other class of people always attendant at times like these, and who, less disturbed by conviction, are none the less persistent in projecting their ideas of function and power into every discussion of this sort.

Now, so far as the Constitution is concerned, I revere it, as every American citizen ought to revere it, as an instrument essentially for the protection of the people's rights, rather than for the curtailment of their opportunities and their possibilities. A written constitution was an experiment, we know, and there are strong men in the land to-day who believe that it must be enlarged very rapidly by interpretation or abandoned altogether under the strain of industrial development and the progress of human ingenuity. Within a month I have heard a judge of a United States court express the belief that it would have been better, as in England, never to have had a written Constitution, that we might never have been handicapped by the uncertain and the outgrown interpretation of written words, rather than directed by the necessities of the age, in the spirit of formula and precedent.

But however that may be, let me say that I am not disturbed by any fear of lack of power that we may have to enact this legislation. As I replied to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], the general-welfare clause has been too liberally interpreted and too often relied upon to sustain necessary legislation for the good of the people to halt us at this particular time and in this particular legislation. When I recall, as I said, that that clause gave the Government the power to acquire the battlefield of Gettysburg by eminent domain, a thing perhaps furthermost removed from the contemplation of those who framed the Constitution, and that perhaps it has been relied upon for the relief that we have extended to peoples beyond our own boundaries, I have no fear but what it will justify us in enacting this legislation at this particular time for the welfare of our own people.

Surely it is no further from the authority of the written word of the Constitution to pay interest on deposits of the people's money than it is to pay interest on bonded indebtedness if both dollars perform the same function for the Government. It is no further from governmental function to receive deposits than it is to pay exchange. The Post-Office Department to-day is doing a score of things beyond the strictly legitimate function of a post-office, to establish which only is Congress given authority in the words of the Constitution. Congress was given power under the Constitution to establish post-offices and post-roads, but to-day the post-office is doing a money-order business and charging exchange in competition with individual enterprise.

As I said a moment ago also, it is not only doing that, but under that single line of the Constitution the Post-Office Department to-day is carrying freight and doing a messenger business. It has subsidized railroads and steamship lines, and thus has developed commerce and opened up the frontier.

Let me say also that I am not dismayed by the uncertainty of the undertaking nor alarmed by its impracticability.

This is not a new venture, whose untrod paths should appall us, for practically every important nation on earth except the United States and one other has a postal savings system now in operation. Old England pioneered the way, and in 1861 brushed aside the obstacles and overcame many, I think I may say all, of the arguments that have been made against this legislation here and throughout the country.

I have been interested in reading recently a little musty old volume entitled "Lewins's History of Savings Banks" to find that more than half a century ago there was arrayed against postal savings banks in England identically the same interests—notice it—identically the same interests, and fighting with identically the same weapons and the same arguments that we have had to meet here in America in the progress of this legislation. Some people at the time that legislation was enacted there opposed it because they thought the people employed in the post-office department would not be competent for the work. Others opposed it for fear that it would raise up an institution of so gigantic proportions that it would have very important and very deleterious results upon the commerce and industries of the country. Others were afraid that it would not only absorb all the future deposits, but that it would absorb all the deposits in existing banks.

I remember another member of the House of Lords opposed it because he said it never could take root in the smaller places. There is an anomaly—one man opposing it for fear it would absorb all the deposits, another man opposing it for fear that it would never take root at all. Some opposed it on the ground of expense. Others opposed it because they wanted to keep the banking of the people separate from the National Treasury. Some objected to it for fear that the people would not be satisfied with the interest allowed and that in response to a popular demand the rates would be raised until it would interfere with existing establishments and entail a large expense on the people. Some had misgivings that it would put the Government to operating on the stock market. Some thought it unwise to establish new banks on the deficiencies of the old banks, and that it would be better to improve the old system than to create a new system, and referred to the old system of banks as the glory of England that all Europe had emulated.

Others opposed it, just as some are opposing it in this country, on the theory that it would be too centralizing in its effects and that it would tend to drain all the money out of certain localities. One member of the House of Lords, after it was found that the bill would certainly pass, offered an amendment that would restrict the new postal savings banks only to those localities where a bank did not already exist.

In it all there was apparently but one motive, and running through all the pages and volumes of speeches that were made against that legislation of England fifty years ago, one can not help but observe that there was but one real objection. William E. Gladstone, as was said by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] the other day, was leading that discussion, and he was master of the situation. Great mind that he had, he separated the kernel from the chaff, and tersely and effectively he drove home the argument that obliterated every objection and quieted for all time, so far as old England was concerned, every objector. After days of debate, of fear and frenzy, of misgivings and apprehension, Gladstone replied. He said he did not know whether the new banks would be injurious to the old banks or not; but if they should be, it would be only because the new banks would be the safest and the best. I am not so much concerned, said Mr. Gladstone, about supplying competition for the old banks as I am about supplying facilities that do not now exist.

So again I say this is not a new venture, uncertain in results and unvouched for by experiment. We are not embarrassed by possible or threatened industrial and financial revolution, for other nations have tried it. As was said here yesterday by some one, twenty-six nations have adopted a system of postal savings banks. England and Wales and Austria and Belgium, France and Hungary and Ireland and Italy and India, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Scotland, Sweden, and Russia and Japan have all adopted a postal savings bank system, and the United States and Germany only are without it, and, as was explained yesterday by the Senator from Montana, if I recollect aright, Germany, under her system, meets practically the same needs that this system is intended to meet.

Mr HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I take it that the Senator will not object to a question intended to develop the idea which he has just presented in his remarks. Is there any country in the world where the government hires money for the purpose of rehiring it out?

Mr. BURKETT. There is not, Mr. President.

Mr. HEYBURN. Where it takes in money under a contract to pay for the use of it in order that it may loan it at interest to some person?

Mr. BURKETT. I understand, Mr. President, that is an objection that may be raised. Now, if the Congress does not want to dispose of this money in the way provided by the bill, let somebody suggest a better way to dispose of it. Other countries carry their floating indebtedness with the people's money. Their indebtedness represents not only what our federal indebtedness represents, but also what our state indebtedness represents. I imagine that it is not a violation of the proprieties in the matter for us to take up the state bonds and, in addition, whatever national bonds we may want to take up, with this deposit of the people, to carry state indebtedness; and instead of the States in the future paying 4 and 5 per cent interest for their money they might use the people's money, if we chose to take up the state bonds and the state indebtedness, instead of loaning this to the banks at 2½ per cent; and the people would then furnish the money for the state indebtedness, just as the people in foreign countries are furnishing it for their national indebtedness.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask the Senator whether or not, in his judgment, it is the function of the Government at all to borrow the money of the people and loan it to the States or municipal corporations? I should like to say, in connection with that, that I do not make the suggestion as one opposed to legislation upon this subject, but merely for the purpose of testing the measure under consideration.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, Mr. President, some States—not every State, but some States—are to-day raising money by taxes and loaning it to other States in this Union without any specific provision in their constitutions one way or the other on that point, and they are doing that in the State where I live. The State in which I live has money loaned to half a dozen of the other States of this Union to-day that has been collected from the people of our State. Now, sir, if it is a proper governmental function to receive the people's deposits and use them to carry the national debt in 26 other nations of this world, it is not going any further in this country, organized, as we are, with a dual system, to use the money of the people deposited in postal savings banks to carry the indebtedness of the several States of this Union.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. The statement the Senator from Nebraska has just made strikes me as a little remarkable—that is, that the State of Nebraska collects money by taxation from the citizens of that State for the purpose of loaning it out to the people of other States or to other States. I want to ask the Senator on that point for information——

Mr. BURKETT. Did the Senator understand me to say that?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is the way I understood the Senator.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I will withdraw that. The State of Nebraska does not tax the people for the purpose of loaning the money to other States.

Mr. HOPKINS. What is the character of the loan, I would ask?

Mr. BURKETT. We buy the bonds of other States with the money in our treasury——

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURKETT. With our surplus in the treasury that is put there for school purposes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then the assessment and collection of money is not for the purpose of making these loans?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Where you have money in the state treasury, in order to keep that money active and increasing in value you buy the bonds of other States?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes. The object is to keep our schools going. The object of this bill is to furnish a safe depository for the people and to do something with the money. I simply stated that it was no further a stretch of governmental function or governmental power to loan that money to the Federal Government or to the States to carry their bonds than it was for one State with the money that it collected from the taxation of its people to loan it to another State. But I did not intend to say that Nebraska assessed her people for the sake of loaning money to the people of other States. That was not my intention.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. FLINT. I will simply state that to-day the Government is collecting money by taxation, depositing it in banks, and receiving interest for it just as is provided for under this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Nebraska——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is there now, or has there been, any instance where the Government borrowed money and loaned it out at interest?

Mr. FLINT. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; certainly.

Mr. FLINT. The Government, as a matter of fact, as the Senator well knows, has not borrowed money to loan it out, but has collected money by taxation that is now in the Treasury and deposited in national banks, and receives interest for that money, just as provided by this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it pays no interest on the money for its use. The money came through the ordinary channels of revenue. What I was seeking to have illustrated by the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska was the manner of handling this money after it had been borrowed under a contract to pay interest to the people. That is rather an embarrassing question in the consideration of the bill now before the Senate, because, in answer to my first inquiry, the Senator admitted that no country in the world had undertaken to do such a thing. I had not brought it down to our own country, but because of the remarks of the Senator from California I was enabled to ask a question, which I deemed pertinent, as to whether this country had ever borrowed money under a contract to pay for its use and then loaned it out under a contract to receive interest.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the Senator put that to me as a question, or was his statement in reply to the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT]?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Nebraska may answer it or not, but the Senator from California did answer it. He admitted that within his knowledge the Government had not done so. The question, of course, is submitted to the Senator from Nebraska for the consideration that he sees fit to give it.

Mr. BURKETT. I know of no occasion when the Government has borrowed money for the purpose of loaning it out to somebody else. It may have loaned some money that it had borrowed for other purposes, but I do not know of any such case.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will ask whether or not there is any provision in this bill, as he reads it and interprets it, that would suggest that the Government receive this money for any other purpose than for the purpose of reloaning it? Is there any provision in this bill that contemplates that the Government may for its own purposes use a cent of the money received from depositors in proposed postal savings banks?

Mr. BURKETT. I think there is in this bill a section that provides for the Postmaster-General buying bonds and taking up part of the national indebtedness, if he chooses to do so, but there was in a bill which I introduced——

Mr. HEYBURN. That is an alternative proposition.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the bill as reported does not contain the provision to which the Senator from Nebraska refers. The investment in securities of the United States is not contemplated. The funds are to be deposited, as the Senator has just stated, in the neighborhood where received, in the national banks. The provision referred to by the Senator from Nebraska is, as aptly suggested, a mere alternative proposition. In the event of the banks refusing to accept the deposits at the rate of interest provided by law, the Postmaster-General, upon the advice of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General, may invest not in United States bonds, but in the bonds of States, municipalities, counties, and so forth.

Mr. HEYBURN. Loan money to States and municipalities?

Mr. CARTER. I doubt if that is the loaning of money in the sense which the Senator puts the statement. It is the buying of securities in the open market for temporary investment in order to obtain interest equivalent to that paid the depositor, plus the cost of administration. The bonds would be disposed of in order to get the money with which to pay the depositor, and would be a temporary investment.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, there was in the bill which I introduced a provision authorizing the Postmaster-General, if the banks failed to take these deposits, to buy national, state, and municipal bonds; but I will say to the Senator that there never was any supposition from the beginning that there was any field of investment of sufficient extent to be worthy of the consideration of national bonds.

Mr. CARTER. I will suggest that the committee, in considering the advisability of authorizing the investment in United States bonds, met with a proposition that had been early urged, to the effect that the postal savings system would tend to cripple the banking institutions of the country. It never was the intention to so frame a bill as to do aught else than provide facilities to enable the people to save small sums. The widely extended arm of the Postal Service seemed to furnish the machinery to accomplish this purpose. If United States bonds should become the investment for the funds, it can readily be perceived that all the bonds needed for the basis of circulation of national banks might soon become absorbed as investments for the Post-Office Department funds, and thus, by indirection, the national banking currency would be practically retired. We avoided any provision looking to investment in United States bonds for the reasons stated.

Then, of course, another reason, obvious on the face of the market quotations, is that the amount of interest drawn by United States bonds, considering the premiums paid, would not suffice to pay the rate of interest which we allow to the depositor.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I shall get back to the Senator's original question, as to whether or not any other country has done this thing. I will say that his question was properly put, because I had referred to the fact and enumerated the other nations that have this system of postal savings banks. But, Mr. President, when I recited the number of nations that have postal savings systems in operation, I did not want to be understood as basing the advisability of our action upon the apparent success alone of similar experiments in other countries. My ten years of public service and somewhat of study, I will say to the Senator, of comparative conditions in this and other lands has made me fully to appreciate that things which are traditional in some countries would be revolutionary here. Because England or Switzerland or New Zealand has done some things with apparent success and with beneficial results I realize full well is no absolute certainty that we can do them here with equal success or even with equal propriety. I am mindful of the great extent of our territory, of the unequal distribution of our population and wealth, and of the great diversity of our industries. Neither am I unmindful, I will say, of the consideration that we owe to private enterprise and private capital which, responding to American ideals and American institutions and traditions, is already invested along similar lines.

I realize, too—and some Senators have called attention to the fact—that this legislation is not of the same importance to some sections of the country that it is to other sections of the country. I am also fully cognizant of the hesitancy of the American people of all parties and all creeds to enter the Government as a competitor with its individuals in industrial and commercial pursuits; in fact, I am one of those persons who believe that the less the Government does directly in trade and commerce the better it is for our development, both as individuals and as a nation. Theoretically the doctrine of the old school of statesmen was correct, "that nothing should be done by the General Government that the local governments could do, and nothing by any government that individuals could do for themselves."

But, practically speaking, we have long since outlived that doctrine, and at most we have only adhered to it in each instance within the limitations of a very loose interpretation of governmental functions after the interpolation of the words "as well." And a reasonably strict constructionist of governmental function and governmental prerogative to-day finds himself restricting the Government from doing those things only that state governments can do "as well" and eliminating all governments only when individuals can do them "as well." And between that strict constructionist's "as well" and the most liberal constructionist's extreme interpretation that all things are proper governmental functions unless individuals can do them better, the shuttlecock of legislation has traveled for lo these hundred years.

So, whatever misgivings other Senators may have as to the propriety of this legislation, I have brushed them all aside with a consciousness of public duty; and whatever objections there may be as to expediency is overcome, it seems to me, by the facts of necessity that present themselves.

Mr. HEYBURN. If it will not embarrass the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. BURKETT. It does not embarrass me. I was going to explain what I meant.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was to what the Senator had said that I desired to direct my remarks and to make a suggestion. What objection is there to receiving this money by the Government without the Government assuming any obligation to pay interest. If the purpose is to promote frugality and business thrift, why would it not be better promoted by making as slight as possible the inducement to allow these deposits to remain with the Government, the Government receiving the money at the post-offices under no contract to pay interest, and letting the money go back into the hands of the individual as soon as the individual can find use for it? What necessity is there in the spirit of this legislation that the Government should contract to pay interest on the money?

Mr. BURKETT. That is a matter of detail. Congress can pay 2 or 2½ per cent, or whatever rate it pleases, or nothing at all. I think we ought to pay about 2 or 2½ per cent. I would not quarrel if it was 1 per cent. I would not vote against the bill if the Government decided to pay no interest.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why should the Government, under any circumstances, borrow money for somebody else and pay interest on it?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say we are not borrowing money. That is not the object of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the result.

Mr. BURKETT. It is to help the frugal, industrious man, the man who has insufficient means to undertake a business proposition.

To-day from one end of the country to the other there is an agitation for safer banking. The deposits are unsteady and the loans are uncertain. We know it. The banker is nervous, and the borrower is without that assurance that makes for a stable business. When discounts are most needed, then the deposits are most liable to be reduced. When the banker least wishes to see his depositors, they loom up before the paying teller in greatest numbers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. It is proposed that the Government shall accept this money from the citizen and pay him 2 per cent, and turn about and loan it to the banks at 2¼ per cent. What is the difference in principle between that and the guaranty of bank deposits of which we heard a good deal in the last campaign?

Mr. BURKETT. I will get to the guaranty of bank deposits in about two minutes, if the Senator will wait that long. I will say that the speech which some Senators like to quote to us in favor of this proposition comes from a man who advocated the guaranty of bank deposits a year or so ago.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. BURKETT. I will not insinuate that all Senators who are questioning me here to-day advocate the guaranty of bank deposits.

Mr. BORAH. I am very frank to say that I have advocated the guaranty of bank deposits, and I am very glad that a majority of those who have opposed it are now coming around to that view, as presented in the proposition in this bill.

Mr. BURKETT. When the Senator interrupted, he asked me to make a later part of my speech first. I want to try to make it as I have it outlined on this paper, if I can. I have my topics arranged, and I should like to present them in the order in which I have them if the Senator does not seriously object, and if he will wait until I can get to that point I shall state my views upon it.

I have heard it said that it was the ignorance of bank depositors representing small deposits which has precipitated most of the bank runs. Perhaps every Senator has heard that statement. But I have thought, as I have heard it stated, that if they are ignorant, it is, perhaps, because their interests are so small in comparison with the great institutions with which they are dealing that it is never given them to know the real condition of the institution, and if they are nervous it is because their deposit, though small, is their all. It represents their toil and their sacrifice and their industry and their frugality. It means for them fuel for the coming winter, medicine when sick, and necessaries of life when temporarily out of employment.

It is for that class of people, let me say, that this legislation is intended. Yea, it is for the many more who might be in their class if they were only provided with better opportunities and better inducements to practice frugality. It is this class of people—who can not know about the bank's assets and who could not judge of them if they did—that make the enormous crowds and clamor loudest at the bank run. They start the whirlpool into which has gone to destruction many a bank that otherwise might have withstood the storm and stress of the times. Upon them demagogues flourish and into their ears the money quack pours most successfully his vicious nostrums for all banking and currency troubles. They are easy picking, because unlearned in the science they are more sensitive of their risk.

If this legislation has no other merit, it would at least relieve the commercial banks from the dangers of their nervousness.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that the greater nervousness is upon the part of the small depositors, rather than the large depositors?

Mr. BURKETT. I do not know what the Senator understood me to say. I undertook to quote the statements of a banker, that most bank runs have been precipitated by the nervousness of the smaller depositors.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to see proof in support of that statement. I do not believe it is true. So far as the large runs have been concerned, they have been started by the class of men that you speak of as the educated business men. The small depositor has only become excited after the start has been made by those who have large deposits.

Mr. BURKETT. I will not leave it that way, because it would not be fair to them nor true to fact, I will say to the Senator, to leave the impression that they are all who are clamoring for safer banking. Business men everywhere want safer banking. The bankers themselves want safer banking. They call it steadier banking, or more elastic banking perhaps, but from one end of the country to the other they are clamoring for a change in our banking and currency system to-day. The remedies which have been suggested have varied all the way from government guaranty of all deposits of the man who deposits only to the central bank of issue of the man who only uses money.

Mr. CARTER. I am aware of the desire of the Senator from Idaho to be exact at all times, and therefore I rise to request him to ascertain, on reflection, whether he would not like to change the statement he has just made. The question is somewhat academic and speculative, I understand.

The discussion was proceeding with a view to determining, if possible, the cause of runs on or panics in connection with banks. The Senator from Idaho suggested that the runs were generally started by large depositors. I rather think he meant to say the runs were started by the failure to pay sums of money due. It is the failure of the individual who has an obligation to find the deposit to meet it. Runs, of course, are precipitated, not by large deposits, but by failure on the part of the institution in which deposits are made to meet demands upon it.

Mr. BORAH. I am under great obligation to the Senator from Montana for suggesting a more precise use of language, but I do not care to change the fact. I maintain still that it was the steadiness and the stability of judgment of the small depositors in this country which saved the financial panic of 1907 from becoming much larger than it was. It was the disturbance created by the large depositors which started the panic, and it was the patriotism, as you may say, of the small depositors in leaving their money there still that helped to stop the run.

I am aware of the fact that the real crisis is reached at the time when payment can not be made; but the start of the run is before the payment is asked for, because they do not refuse to pay until somebody appears there and asks for payment; and when they refuse to pay, then the crisis begins. But the run has begun before that.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the panic of 1907 was quite unique. It was essentially a bankers' panic. It originated in the midst of the greatest financial career of the Western Hemisphere, and it was regarded throughout as a bankers' panic. Its fear and apprehensions never reached the remote sections of the country or the average depositor. It is unhappily true that all the money of the country—for the time being deposited in the depositories of great financial centers—was suddenly impounded, payments refused, the national banking law disregarded, and a situation existed which might well have brought calamity to the entire country. But, as the Senator well says, the panic was not of the disastrous kind so far as the body of the people was concerned, because it did not start with them. The most disastrous panic is that which originates in the steady, continuous withdrawal of money by the small depositor of the country, where the fever is widespread or universal.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator. It was a bankers' panic. That is the only kind we have during a Republican administration. But I want to say further that the panic was not precipitated by the people, and it stopped only when it got to them.

Mr. BURKETT. Whoever may have been responsible for that panic, whether it was the small depositor or the large depositor, we all agree as a result that from it there has been a flood of proposed legislation presented to Congress. I think I would not be overstating the fact if I said that within the last two years there have been more than twenty separate and distinct propositions for new banking systems in the United States presented, and, in addition to that, there are blends and combinations too numerous to mention. In my opinion most of them will fail to completely satisfy, because they entirely eliminate the great classes of depositors that this bill is intended to provide for. These depositors are not worrying about distributing money, but about saving it. The controlling thought of most of these proposed banking systems is the purposes of business.

The idea that dominates in them is to provide money in abundance when needed and to reduce it when not needed, so that it will answer the call of the West when the golden grain of the autumn time is ready for market, as well as the alluring song of the East when interest rates go up. That is the call of commerce, and is commercial banking; but I submit that it entirely overlooks the struggling toiler of hand and head, the frugal, industrious, and self-sacrificing depositor, whose only anxiety is that the dollar he saves is safe and that what he deposits shall be returned unto him even in the days of iniquity, when the shadows of adversity encompass him about. That is the great proposition.

On the other hand, the guaranty of bank deposits will not meet this proposition entirely as I see it, for the reason that it fails to recognize any difference among depositors.

The guaranty of bank deposits plan puts side by side the man who deposits money and the man who deposits his promissory note; the man who deposits for safety and the man who deposits for commercial purposes, impressed with all the risk and assured of all the profits that come from it. So I insist that as legislators we must recognize a difference between the savings account of "Willing Worker" and "Industrious Frugality" and the commercial account of the drivers of industry whose deposits are limited only by their credit and whose business relation with their bank forms only a part of the great speculation of life in which they are engaged.

If I have made my point clear as to the distinction between the two deposits, then I insist that the governmental function is different as between the savings depositor and the commercial depositor. A savings bank is not for the purpose of helping men to make money, but to encourage them to save it, and safety is the sine qua non. The commercial bank is for the purposes of trade, and must respond quickly to business needs and can not be hedged about by the slow and rigid rules of absolute certainty.

In its use there is possibility and risk, and the man who deals with it must do it always in the knowledge that he does it for his own aggrandizement and therefore at his own peril. The very nature of a savings bank makes it a legitimate field for governmental interference. It is a helping hand for the man without means, unacquainted with the business, profligate, and timorous, until he has acquired a sufficient sum to make an investment. His deposit is small, but the total possessions of the depositor. It is small in amount, but represents real toil and sacrifices. Its loss means more to him than the larger amount of the larger depositor. Its loss means to him financial ruin, mental anguish, perpetual discouragement, everlasting poverty, and public charity in declining years.

The great struggle of the ages has been to stimulate thrift among men. Nations have been strongest as their people have been thrifty. A government can afford always to stretch a little its effort to help the people to become self-sustaining, for that is far better than that they should be publicly sustained. To my mind, no nobler object ever appealed to any nation for consideration, and no more appropriate function of government ever called for legislation.

The whole world, as has been stated repeatedly, has responded, and the generations of men and the annals of nations testify to its wisdom. The question is, Shall we in America delay longer? Shall we in this proud Republic, where liberty reigns and where the people "do rule," longer deny to ourselves this great benefice to men vouchsafed to the peoples of every other land?

I understand the objections to this bill, and they are not unlike those made in every country where legislation of this kind has been contemplated and where they have all been answered. I understand the fear that the banker may have of the competition that the postal savings system may make for him. In my opinion, those fears are not well grounded. It will do in America, as it has in every other country—very largely take care of itself. It will build up its own clientele and, from entirely new sources, make up its own depositors. I do not mean to say that some money will not be diverted from its present channels, but history shows that the percentage is very small, and what may be diverted is more than made up by additional depositors, for the habit of deposit will be inculcated by the postal savings system, and this will add unto the commercial bank depositors.

I have here two or three brief extracts which I want to read. I will not go into the subject extensively. I had intended to call attention to them a little sooner, but I have been diverted from the line of the argument somewhat that I had intended to make to-day.

The Postmaster-General, in 1892—and he has done it once or twice before and since, I think—asked the postmasters-general of other countries the result of the postal savings-bank system, and these are the statements of those postmasters-general. I find those statements in the report which the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has made in support of this bill. There are reports from Sweden and Hungary and Italy and Belgium and the Netherlands and Austria and France, and perhaps some other countries. The question our Postmaster-General asked was, "Has the postal savings bank of your country, in its beginning or since, met with any opposition from private savings banks?"

Sweden says:

As far as known, no opposition has been manifested at any time.

The Hungarian postmaster-general says:

The private savings banks can never see a competitor in the postal savings banks, because their organization is different and because they serve a different class of people. The postal savings banks have not exercised any injurious influence on the development of private savings banks, which is shown by the circumstance that since the establishment of postal savings banks the deposits in the private savings banks have not decreased, but increased very considerably, as has also the number of private savings banks.

In Italy the postmaster-general replied:

There has never been any serious opposition to the establishment of the postal savings bank. In the beginning some apprehension was felt that the postal savings bank might injure the private institution of similar character, but this apprehension soon vanished, as it soon became apparent that each of the two kinds of institutions had its own circle of customers and did not interfere with each other. At present there are not a few localities where postal savings banks are in operation and flourish side by side with private savings banks.

Other countries report the same. The French report says:

The postal savings bank and the private savings banks do not exactly serve the same class of customers. The first mentioned offers especial advantages to economical persons who move about a good deal and who therefore appreciate the facility of making a deposit in one post-office and drawing it in some other office; the second, by reason of the higher rate of interest paid by them, are more advantageous to persons who always reside in one and the same place where they make their deposits and draw their money.

I shall not take time to read more of them, but what I do want to call attention to is a little book which I brought with me—Lewins's History of Savings Banks. At page 318, in discussing the question whether postal savings banks interfere with commercial banks, he says:

It is a somewhat remarkable fact that—

I will say this little book was written five years after the postal savings bank system went into operation in England, and he writes of the result in England—

It is a somewhat remarkable fact that of the total amount which had up to the end of last year been deposited in post-office banks not much more than a million and a half * * * had been withdrawn from the old savings banks.

From these facts it seems quite clear that the business acquired by the post-office banks, at any rate up to this time, is almost entirely newly created business, and that the older savings banks have only been interfered with to a trifling extent. * * * Other sums might undoubtedly have been placed with the older institutions, had there been no competition; but by far the greatest proportion is plainly derived from sources hitherto unreached, and consists of money which no amount of persuasion could divert from the hundred forms of indulgence to the older channels of economic hoarding.

Further along he says:

The post-office banks, further, seem not only to have attracted a public of their own, but to have created, as it were, a fresh race of provident people.

In my opinion the experience there would be repeated here, and from the cellars and the garrets, from the old stockings and chimney corners, from hollow logs and the cold, damp earth, from everywhere would come flowing into the channels of trade and commerce the hidden and hoarded money of the realm. I have the information here that 49 per cent of the circulating medium can not be accounted for to-day or at any particular time. Commerce is deprived of its use, because there has as yet been provided no means to attract it from its hiding place. It is hidden by those who fear and distrust their fellow-citizens in the private institutions, and is carried in the pockets of others for whom we have provided no adequate facilities for putting it back into circulation other than as it is expended.

Mr. President, it will not answer the demand nor meet the situation for us to glorify our present banking system. They did even that much in England fifty years ago. I received a letter yesterday from a constituent of mine, a very important man in my State, a very strong banker. He writes a very good letter. He said to me that in his opinion Congress ought to leave this matter to the judgment of the bankers, whose years of experience in financial matters made them more competent to judge of what legislation ought to be along this line. But it will not do to take the opinion of bankers, because their judgments have been overturned in every land. As I said in the beginning, if we had allowed our legislation to go until the men who are most particularly interested in it said so, we would never have had a meat-inspection bill, or a railroad regulation bill, or a child-labor bill for the District of Columbia, nor any of the magnificent legislation that we have had in this country in the last few years.

I am not one of those given to a wholesale and indiscriminate criticism of our present banking system, for my experience in the ordinary affairs of life is that that is one of the surest signs of a man's own incompetency, and woe to a man's reputation among his fellows who can see no good in the men and measures with which he comes in contact. I say frankly, after listening to the discussion of financial experts in Congress for ten years, I have about come to the conclusion that we have probably outlived our present financial system. But with my restricted vision and qualifying better as a historian than as a financial expert, I am bound to say that I find more specific things to applaud our banking system for than to criticise it for.

I recall the dark days of the Republic in which it was established, and the proud eminence of financial achievement into which it has brought us. I recall the stability with which it has sailed the tempestuous seas of industrial panic, and the dogged resistance it has maintained against the visionary and fanciful fads and hobbies that have assailed it from every quarter. I recall, as no small tribute to its success, that it is more responsive to industry and commerce, to progress and development, than any other banking system upon the face of the earth.

It is the realization of the fondest dream for the uses of trade; and I undertake to say that American ingenuity does not appear to better advantage anywhere than in comparing our banking facilities with those of other lands. Nowhere has a greater amount of business been done with less machinery, nowhere with greater convenience and greater dispatch. The American banker well deserves a large share of the credit for our industrial and commercial advance. But I am bound to say that with all his demonstrated ingenuity for distributing money he has not been successful in rendezvousing money. He has gathered together the large sums of a few depositors; he has put them to the very best practical use; but he has failed to reach the enormous amounts of the millions of Americans and put them to proper use.

The public function of a bank is to collect together the funds of the people who do not have any present use for them and put them into the hands of people who do have present use for them.

A system is successful only in the measure that it accomplishes what it is intended to do. If this system of ours does not reach all of the people, it is not wholly successful. If it does not reach all of the money, it is not wholly successful. If it is economical to gather together a part of the idle money for the uses of others, then certainly it would be more economical to gather together the largest amount possible.

Great Britain, with 45,000,000 people, has 11,000,000 bank depositors. America, with over 90,000,000 people, has less than 9,000,000 bank depositors. In Sweden 40 per cent of their people are bank depositors. In America less than 10 per cent of our people are bank depositors. No one contends that our people are less prosperous than the people of England and Sweden. No one doubts that the average American has more money about him than the average individual in any country in the world.

The trouble with us is that we have reached 10 per cent of our people, with an average deposit of $423, while Sweden has reached 40 per cent of her people, with an average deposit of $30.

So, without any reflections upon the banking system as it is and for what it was intended, I am only insisting that there is a limit beyond which it will not go, and that the experience of other nations teaches us that the postal savings banks are both stimulating to individuals and economical to the public.

Now, we have had a speech here, laid on the table of every Senator, stating that all the commercial banks of the country practically received savings-bank deposits. Yet we know that commercial banks do not invite small deposits—a dollar deposit, a 10-cent deposit. They do not want anything to do with such small deposits. In most places in this country there is a minimum limit of acceptable bank deposits. In three-fourths of the country there are no savings banks. One-fourth of the States of the Union have over 90 per cent of such institutions. In large sections of the country there is not enough reward offered to warrant private capital in investing in savings institutions.

In those portions of the country the man working for wages is driven to carrying his savings from month to month until he spends it or until he has acquired and saved up a sufficient amount to make him bold enough to lean against a commercial bank counter to make a deposit.

All that is a handicap to the commerce of this country. It is at the expense of our machinery of trade and commerce and helps to diminish our circulating medium. But, most unfortunate of all, when crises come and panics shake the confidence of men, when more money is needed more money is hoarded. So I say the emergency of our times demands the enactment of this legislation. It will put more money into circulation; steady deposits reassure borrowers, relieve nervous bankers; and it will turn thousands of profligate spendthrifts into frugal and self-sustaining citizens.

I have talked longer to-day than I intended when I started. I did not intend to-day to go into any of the details of this bill, although necessarily I have been called into a discussion of some of them. When the bill comes up for final action—and I hoped that it might be before the holidays—some of these sections will deserve and ought to have some further consideration.

I will say that I introduced a bill which, in my opinion, is better than the one reported, in some particulars. But I am not going to quarrel about the merits of the bill to-day. It will be voted upon when the question comes up. This bill that we have before us does provide, as a general proposition, for the things that it seems to me a savings-bank system ought to do. It provides for a government savings depository for small deposits. The rate of interest is small, as it ought to be, for otherwise it would attract all the money. The amount of deposits is limited. Possibly it ought to be smaller. If the amount is too large, the man with enormous sums could deposit them, even with small interest, and without any effort on his part be sustained by the Government. It provides that the deposits shall be redeposited in the nearest national depository to where they are collected, so as to preserve to each locality its own money. It also confines it to the post-offices of a presidential grade, and thus relieves the Postmaster-General of the necessity of placing them where they would not be needed or where there is no possibility of compensation equaling the expense.

Before I sit down I wish to call the attention of Senators to this magnificent report that the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has made, because it covers the twenty years of work that has been done on this legislation in this country and the fifty years of practical experience in other countries. The Senator from Montana deserves great credit for it. It is one of the most complete reports that has ever been made on this subject. He has shown his industry by going back through the last twenty years of investigation of this subject in this country, and he has collected the wisdom and the work of all the Postmasters-General and of former Senate and House committees that have reported on this question.

As I said in the beginning, I understand there is a disposition here to prevent this legislation from coming to a vote. I had hoped there would be more of those Senators present who oppose it that I might urge them not to take advantage of our rules or lack of rules to defeat this legislation. I understand that with our rules or lack of rules a few Senators can prevent a majority from doing business. But, I submit, the success of these rules and their longevity may be diminished by continued and repeated abuse. Freedom of debate in the Senate is traditional now, and if honestly and legitimately used is the greatest possible boon to good legislation, but if that freedom shall be abused, even unto the defeat of legislation, it then becomes a positive evil, and one that in time will be corrected.

I hope there will not be a determination to delay for the purpose of defeating this bill. If the older Senators, those I had expected to oppose it, had been here, I intended to urge upon them not to use the very prerogatives that mean so much for them in the seats of honor and power that they so splendidly grace in defeating this legislation. Every Senator ought to vote against the bill, if it is wrong, and if a majority of the Senate votes the bill down I have such an abiding faith in the wisdom and honesty of the Senate that I shall bow very respectfully to the superior wisdom of the Senate. But if we are to be deprived of the opportunity to vote upon it by stealth or strategy or legerdemain, then I shall bend to the adroitness of man.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The rapid increase of population in the National Capital within recent years has greatly altered social conditions, necessitating changes in the machinery of its administration. Greater efficiency and a better provision for the protection of both the industrial and dependent classes are required.

Recognizing these needs, I have had a special report made to me on the affairs of the District of Columbia which I transmit herewith. I cordially approve the recommendations in the report for: the substitution of a single head or Governor in place of three Commissioners; the establishment of District or Municipal Departments in place of the existing Bureaus; and the creation of a new department to be known as that of Housing and Labor. I ask your careful consideration of the entire report; Mr. Reynolds has rendered a great and disinterested service for which our heartiest thanks are due him.

A single executive head would increase efficiency, determine responsibility and eliminate delays and uncertainties inevitable under the present system; Municipal Departments headed by Commissioners to be appointed by the Governor would yield the same advantage.

In the proposed scheme of reorganization, the Department of Education should be coordinated with other City Departments.

I especially urge that the proposed Department of Housing and Labor be established. Poverty, disease and crime are largely due to defects of social conditions and surroundings. The need of improved sanitary inspection of dwellings, rear alleys and small shacks (such as unhappily still exist in Washington) and of stores, work shops and factories should not be left to subordinate Bureau Chiefs, but should be brought under the direct control of a competent head of the above named Department.

An equally important public responsibility is the protection of the independent industrial class which neither desires nor accepts charity, but whose members have often been led to misfortune and even crime through agencies licensed by the state, but defectively and inadequately supervised. Notable among these are pawn-shops, loan and industrial insurance companies and employment agencies. The supervision of these agencies is at present limited to the police. They should be under the direction of officials qualified to advance their efficiency and economic service to the public.

The above named changes would vastly improve the efficiency of the District Government, and would afford protection to its industrial and dependent classes which is imperatively needed.

I also transmit for the consideration of the Congress reports of the Committee on Building of Model Houses which was appointed in accordance with the recommendation of Mr. Reynolds.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 17, 1908.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKinney, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 5083) to amend section 1 of the passenger act of 1882.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR STEERAGE PASSENGERS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 5083) entitled "An act to amend section one of the passenger act of eighteen hundred and eighty-two," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered two, thirteen, and fourteen.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered one, three, four, five, ten, and eleven, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered six, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 4, line 3, after "thereof," insert the following: "subject to the allowance for measurement of public rooms, lavatories, and bathrooms, if any, provided for by paragraph ten;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 4, line 7, after the word "use," insert the following: "subject to the allowance for measurement of public rooms, lavatories, and bathrooms, if any, provided for by paragraph 10;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 4, line 12, insert after "thereof" the following: "subject to the allowance for measurement of public rooms, lavatories, and bathrooms, if any, provided for by paragraph 10;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 5, line 2, after "included" insert "and also, on whatever deck located" and strike out therefrom the following: "shall be provided for the exclusive use of steerage passengers, and the space so occupied shall also be included;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "apartments" and insert in lieu thereof the word "compartment;" and the House agree to the same.

W. P. DILLINGHAM,
H. C. LODGE,
A. J. MCLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

BENJ. F. HOWELL,
WILLIAM S. BENNET,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21899) providing for the appointment of an inland waterways commission, with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is an important bill, and I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that it ought not to be taken up when manifestly there is no quorum of the Senate present. I suggest to the Senator not to make that request now. I shall feel obliged to object to it if it is made, with manifestly no quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course I will have to yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island if he pushes it, but I apprehend that the Senator is under the impression that the bill which I have asked to bring up for consideration is the one that was originally introduced providing a comprehensive plan for the development of our waterways through the action of a commission, which was authorized to coordinate the various services of the Government through an active cooperation which would take in municipalities. This bill is a short substitute for that bill, giving the President power to appoint a commission, not exceeding nine, simply for the purposes of investigation, and giving the commission a small appropriation of $20,000.

I wish to say that there was no river and harbor bill at the last session, and there probably will not be one at the present session. Pretty nearly two years ago the President appointed a commission to inquire into these matters simply under his power of recommendation. This is intended to make a statutory commission in the place of the voluntary commission which has thus far acted.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether, in view of that statement, he still objects to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. I must confess that I have no clear idea about the present position of this question. We have had so many conventions and so many commissions that I am not sure whether Congress has any jurisdiction or power over any of these questions.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In view of the objection of the Senator from Rhode Island, I would therefore suggest as a substitute, that it be agreed by unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 21899) providing for the appointment of an inland waterways commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States be taken up for consideration on Wednesday, January 20, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, such consideration to be continued until the bill is disposed of.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I submit that the Senator from Rhode Island called attention to the fact that obviously there is no quorum present, and it seems to me that it would not be proper to do any business one way or the other until the presence of a quorum is developed.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that we may have a brief executive session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the statement of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. I submit that it would not be proper to go on with business after the statement made, and not contradicted in the record, that there is no quorum present. As I understand the rule, when a Senator calls attention to the absence of a quorum it is the duty of the presiding officer to direct the roll to be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island did not raise the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair does not understand that that question was raised by the Senator within the rule.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will submit a motion that a certain date be set for the bill. My motion is that House bill 21899 be taken up on Wednesday, January 20, for consideration immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, such consideration to be continued until the bill is disposed of. It is a motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada moves that House bill 21899 be set for consideration immediately after the close of the routine morning business on Wednesday, January 20 next, and that the consideration of the bill be proceeded with until the bill is disposed of.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the nature of the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is an act providing for the appointment of an inland waterways commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not yield for that motion.

Mr. HALE. I do not ask the Senator to yield. Pending his motion, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada will state his point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The point of order is that I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No; the Senator is not entitled to the floor. The Senator from Nevada submitted a motion to the Senate and his motion was before the Senate. The Senator from Maine rose and moved that, pending that motion, the Senate should proceed to the consideration of executive business. The motion of the Senator from Maine is entitled to precedence under the rule.

Mr. HALE. Upon that I call for the regular order, and that is the putting of the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, December 19, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate Thursday, December 17, 1908.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Rentfro B. Creager, of Texas, to be collector of customs for the district of Brazos de Santiago, in the State of Texas, in place of John W. Vann, removed.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

George E. Work, of West Virginia, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of West Virginia, in place of William E. Glasscock, resigned.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

John L. Lockhart, of Pierre, S. Dak., to be register of the land office at Pierre, S. Dak., vice Albert Wheelon, whose term will expire January 23, 1909.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

The following-named midshipmen to be ensigns in the navy from the 13th day of September, 1908, to fill vacancies existing in that grade on that date:

Gardner L. Caskey,
John B. Rhodes,
Philip G. Lauman,
Arthur W. Frank,
Albert C. Read,
George H. Bowdey,
Ralph T. Hanson,
Robert A. Theobald,
Richard Hill,
Fletcher C. Starr,
William L. Beck,
Alfred W. Brown, jr.,
Frank Russell,
Guy E. Baker,
John A. Monroe,
William F. Newton,
David A. Scott,
Willis W. Bradley, jr.,
David G. Copeland,
Raymond A. Spruance,
Calvin P. Page,
Earle F. Johnson,
Henry K. Hewitt,
Felix X. Gygax,
Guy E. Davis,
Weyman P. Beehler,
Lemuel M. Stevens,
Warren C. Nixon,
John W. W. Cumming,
Charles R. Clark,
Chester H. J. Keppler,
Charles A. Dunn,
Frederick W. Milner,
Charles G. Davy,
Horace T. Dyer,
Charles C. Gill,
Augustin T. Beauregard,
Damon E. Cummings,
Russell S. Crenshaw,
Robert A. Burford, jr.,
Warren G. Child,
Herbert S. Babbitt,
William H. Lee,
Bryson Bruce,
William P. Williamson,
Randall Jacobs,
Vaughn V. Woodward,
Richard S. Edwards,
Robert T. S. Lowell,
Clyde R. Robinson,
Richard T. Keiran,
Ralph C. Needham,
James B. Howell,
Charles C. Slayton,
John H. Hoover,
Louis H. Maxfield,
Raymond F. Frellsen,
William H. Walsh,
Alfred W. Atkins,
Claude A. Jones,
Harry Campbell,
George W. Kenyon,
Allan S. Farquhar,
Lucien F. Kimball,
Harold M. Bemis,
John M. Schelling, and
Bert B. Taylor.

Capt. William W. Kimball to be a rear-admiral in the navy from the 17th day of December, 1908, vice Rear-Admiral William H. Emory, retired.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 17, 1908.

CONSUL-GENERAL.

John P. Bray to be consul-general of the United States of class 4 at Sydney, New South Wales, Australia.

CONSULS.

Joseph M. Authier to be consul of the United States of class 9 at Guadeloupe, West Indies.

Frank C. Denison to be consul of the United States of class 9 at Fernie, British Columbia, Canada.

Edward A. Creevey to be consul of the United States of class 7 at St. Michaels, Azores.

George H. Jackson to be consul of the United States of class 8 at Cognac, France.

Frederick M. Ryder to be consul of the United States of class 6 at Rimouski, Quebec, Canada.

COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Charles P. Neill to be Commissioner of Labor, Department of Commerce and Labor.

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Huntington Wilson to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Roumania and Servia and diplomatic agent in Bulgaria.

ASSISTANT TO THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Wade H. Ellis to be assistant to the Attorney-General.

PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

W. Cameron Forbes to be vice-governor of the Philippine Islands.

Gregorio Araneta to be a member of the Philippine Commission and secretary of finance and justice in the government of the Philippine Islands.

Newton W. Gilbert to be a member of the Philippine Commission.

Rafael Palma to be a member of the Philippine Commission.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

Thomas C. Tillotson to be register of the land office at Roswell, N. Mex.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Andrew P. Adolphson to be receiver of public moneys at Leadville, Colo.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL OF ALASKA.

William L. Distin to be surveyor-general of Alaska.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Commander Patrick W. Hourigan to be a commander in the navy from the 11th day of July, 1908, vice Commander Henry C. Gearing, promoted.

Lieut. Commander William G. Miller to be a commander in the navy from the 20th day of July, 1908, vice Commander Burns T. Walling, promoted.

Ensign William D. Greetham to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the navy from the 30th day of July, 1908, upon the completion of three years' service in present grade.

Lieut. Commander George W. Kline to be a commander in the navy from the 1st day of August, 1908, vice Commander Clifford J. Boush, promoted.

Commander James H. Sears to be a captain in the navy from the 3d day of September, 1908, vice Capt. Greenleaf A. Merriam, deceased.

Capt. William P. Potter, an additional number in grade, to be a rear-admiral in the navy from the 30th day of October, 1908, with Capt. Gottfried Blocklinger, promoted.

Commander Charles C. Rogers to be a captain in the navy from the 30th day of October, 1908, vice Capt. Gottfried Blocklinger, promoted.

Capt. Nathan E. Niles to be a rear-admiral in the navy from the 12th day of November, 1908, vice Rear-Admiral James M. Miller, deceased.

Capt. Newton E. Mason, an additional number in grade, to be a rear-admiral in the navy from the 12th day of November, 1908, with Capt. Giles B. Harber, promoted.

Commander John T. Newton to be a captain in the navy from the 12th day of November, 1908, vice Capt. Nathan E. Niles, promoted.

Commander Benjamin Tappan, an additional number in grade, to be a captain in the navy from the 12th day of November, 1908, with Commander John T. Newton, promoted.

Lieut. Commander George R. Evans to be a commander in the navy from the 12th day of November, 1908, vice Commander John T. Newton, promoted.

Lieut. Walter S. Turpin to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 28th day of January, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander William L. Howard, promoted, to correct the date from which Lieut. Commander Turpin takes rank as confirmed on January 30, 1908.

Lieut. William S. Whitted to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 30th day of January, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Robert B. Higgins, promoted.

Lieut. Walter J. Manion to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 25th day of February, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Isaac K. Seymour, deceased, to correct the date from which Lieutenant-Commander Manion takes rank as confirmed on April 23, 1908.

Lieut. George E. Gelm to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 17th day of April, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Charles S. Bookwalter, resigned.

Lieut. Frank H. Brumby to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 23d day of April, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander John C. Leonard, promoted.

Lieut. James P. Morton, an additional number in grade, to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 23d day of April, 1908, with Lieut. Frank H. Brumby, promoted.

Lieut. Frank P. Baldwin to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 24th day of April, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander John M. Ellicott, promoted.

Lieut. George L. P. Stone to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 15th day of May, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Charles W. Dyson, promoted.

Lieut. Harris Laning to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Harry George, promoted.

Lieut. Franklin D. Karns to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Frederick L. Chapin, promoted.

Lieut. David W. Todd to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander William C. Herbert, promoted.

Lieut. John V. Klemann to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Alexander S. Halstead, promoted.

Lieut. Henry V. Butler to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Harry A. Field, promoted.

Lieut. Walter R. Gherardi to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Chester M. Knepper, promoted.

Lieut. James J. Raby to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Clarence S. Williams, promoted.

Lieut. Frederic N. Freeman to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Frank K. Hill, promoted.

Lieut. William H. Standley to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Roger Welles, promoted.

Lieut. Kenneth M. Bennett to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander John D. McDonald, promoted.

Lieut. Edward H. Watson to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Hilary P. Jones, promoted.

Lieut. James E. Walker to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander William R. Shoemaker, promoted.

Lieut. Rufus Z. Johnston to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Charles P. Plunkett, promoted.

Lieut. Thomas D. Parker to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 4th day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Volney O. Chase, promoted.

Lieut. Thomas T. Craven to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 19th day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander George R. Slocum, promoted.

Lieut. Daniel W. Wurtzbaugh, an additional number in grade, to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 19th day of July, 1908, with Lieut. Thomas T. Craven, promoted.

Lieut. Ralph Earle to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 20th day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander William G. Miller, promoted.

Lieut. Gatewood S. Lincoln to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 1st day of August, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander George W. Kline, promoted.

Lieut. Wat T. Cluverius to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 25th day of October, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Harrison A. Bispham, promoted.

First Lieut. Frank C. Lander to be a captain in the Marine Corps from the 13th day of May, 1908, vice Capt. Newt H. Hall, promoted.

First Lieut. Eli T. Fryer to be a captain in the Marine Corps from the 13th day of May, 1908, vice Capt. Charles S. Hill, promoted.

First Lieut. Earl H. Ellis to be a captain in the Marine Corps from the 14th day of May, 1908, vice Capt. David D. Porter, appointed assistant adjutant and inspector.

Second Lieut. Samuel W. Bogan to be a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps from the 13th day of May, 1908, vice First Lieut. Robert Y. Rhea, promoted.

Second Lieut. Albert E. Randall to be a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps from the 13th day of May, 1908, vice First Lieut. Thomas Holcomb, jr., promoted.

Lieut. Jonas H. Holden to be a lieutenant-commander in the navy from the 11th day of July, 1908, vice Lieut. Commander Patrick W. Hourigan, promoted.

Asst. Paymaster Horace B. Worden to be a passed assistant paymaster in the navy from the 23d day of October, 1907, upon the completion of three years' service in present grade.

Mate William G. Smith, U. S. Navy, retired (died June 9, 1907), to be a mate on the retired list, with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, viz, the lowest grade of warrant officers, from the 29th day of June, 1906, to the date of his death, June 9, 1907, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 29, 1906.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

George R. Lewis to be postmaster at Bessemer, Ala

ARKANSAS.

James F. Burrus to be postmaster at Atkins, Ark.

DELAWARE.

John R. Black to be postmaster at Milton, Del.

FLORIDA.

Charles E. Barnes to be postmaster at Plant City, Fla.
Newell B. Hull to be postmaster at Starke, Fla.
Charles H. Jones to be postmaster at Quincy, Fla.

IDAHO.

Nettie B. Carpenter to be postmaster at Grangeville, Idaho.
Charles C. Moore to be postmaster at St. Anthony, Idaho.

A. T. Shane to be postmaster at Idaho Falls, Idaho.
Thomas C. White to be postmaster at St. Maries, Idaho.

INDIANA.

Charles E. Hillstrom to be postmaster at Chesterton, Ind.
Phineas O. Small to be postmaster at Laporte, Ind.
Moses Specter to be postmaster at East Chicago, Ind.

KANSAS.

Eli A. Baum to be postmaster at Burden, Kans.
Orlando A. Cheney to be postmaster at Fort Scott, Kans.
Frank S. McKelvey to be postmaster at Gas, Kans.
Lewis Pickrell to be postmaster at Minneapolis, Kans.

MICHIGAN.

Herman A. Wyckoff to be postmaster at Pontiac, Mich.

MISSOURI.

William Bostian to be postmaster at Independence, Mo.
Solomon R. McKay to be postmaster at Troy, Mo.

MONTANA.

Richard W. Garland to be postmaster at Malta, Mont.

NEBRASKA.

George H. Borden to be postmaster at Beaver Crossing, Nebr.
Augustine A. Hyers to be postmaster at Havelock, Nebr.
Charles F. Leetham to be postmaster at St. Paul, Nebr.
Charles W. Meeker to be postmaster at Imperial, Nebr.
Frederick W. Richardson to be postmaster at Battle Creek, Nebr.
Isaac Roush to be postmaster at Kimball, Nebr.
Clifton F. Stockwell to be postmaster at Bassett, Nebr.
Fay Whitfield to be postmaster at Peru, Nebr.

NEW MEXICO.

Edward Pennington to be postmaster at Deming, N. Mex.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Daniel E. Forrest to be postmaster at Efland, N. C.
Augusta Meares to be postmaster at Clarkton, N. C.
Benjamin O. Morris to be postmaster at Mocksville, N. C.

OHIO.

George C. Braden to be postmaster at Warren, Ohio.
E. C. Gething to be postmaster at Hubbard, Ohio.
William C. Newell to be postmaster at Bainbridge, Ohio.
George W. C. Perry to be postmaster at Chillicothe, Ohio.

OKLAHOMA.

Henry Amey to be postmaster at Fort Cobb, Okla.
Alfred M. Clark to be postmaster at Gage, Okla.
Horace Gray to be postmaster at Tahlequah, Okla.
Ira A. Hill to be postmaster at Cherokee, Okla.
Alexander B. Holliday to be postmaster at Crescent, Okla.
Will Huston to be postmaster at Thomas, Okla.
Walter F. McCague to be postmaster at Ralston, Okla.
Erastus G. McRee to be postmaster at Granite, Okla.
Downey Milburne to be postmaster at Coweta, Okla.
George Ruddell to be postmaster at Weatherford, Okla.
A. J. Thompson to be postmaster at Okarche, Okla.
Merrel L. Thompson to be postmaster at Hartshorne, Okla.
Benjamin F. Williams to be postmaster at Sayre, Okla.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Samuel C. Graham to be postmaster at Starjunction, Pa.
John Nelson to be postmaster at Leetsdale, Pa.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Marion H. Moore to be postmaster at Bellefourche, S. Dak.
Thomas T. Smith to be postmaster at Canton, S. Dak.

UTAH.

Jonathan S. Page, jr., to be postmaster at Payson, Utah.

WYOMING.

Frederick E. Davis to be postmaster at Wheatland, Wyo.

WITHDRAWALS.

Executive nominations withdrawn from the Senate Thursday, December 17, 1908.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Charles A. Judson, of Ohio, to be collector of customs for the district of Sandusky, in the State of Ohio, sent to the Senate December 8, 1908.

POSTMASTER.

WYOMING.

William O'Connell to be postmaster at Kemmerer, in the State of Wyoming.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 17, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE SECRET SERVICE—PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the special committee appointed to report upon certain portions of the President's message, I offer the following resolution and ask that it be reported by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there was contained in the sundry civil appropriation bill which passed Congress at its last session and became a law a provision in reference to the employment of the Secret Service in the Treasury Department; and

Whereas in the last annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress it was stated in reference to that provision, "It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes," and it was further stated, "The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men," and it was further stated, "But if this is not considered desirable, a special exception could be made in the law, prohibiting the use of the secret-service force in investigating members of Congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent, or at least to hamper, effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government;" and

Whereas the plain meaning of the above words is that the majority of the Congressmen were in fear of being investigated by secret-service men, and that Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive in enacting the provision in question; and

Whereas your committee appointed to consider these statements of the President and to report to the House can not find in the hearings before committees nor in the records of the House or Senate any justification of this impeachment of the honor and integrity of the Congress; and

Whereas your committee would prefer, in order to make an intelligent and comprehensive report, just to the President as well as to the Congress, to have all the information which the President may have to communicate: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the President be requested to transmit to the House any evidence upon which he based his statements that the "chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men," and also to transmit to the House any evidence connecting any Member of the House of Representatives of the Sixtieth Congress with corrupt action in his official capacity, and to inform the House whether he has instituted proceedings for the punishment of any such individual by the courts or has reported any such alleged delinquencies to the House of Representatives.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is recommended unanimously by the special committee. It calls for information to be furnished upon which the committee may make its final report. Upon the receipt of the evidence that may be supplied by the President the matter will be further considered, and a report then made for the consideration of the House.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this resolution will pass the House unanimously, and substantially without debate. The object of the resolution is to give to the President of the United States an opportunity to show upon what grounds he made his late seemingly unprovoked and unjustified attack upon the honor, the honesty, and the reputation of the legislative branch of the Government. So far as this committee has been able to discover, there is not a scintilla of evidence to support those statements; but the committee has thought that it is just and fair to the President to give him further opportunity to produce testimony, if he has any.

The American people have the right to know, if the American Congress be corrupt, that it is corrupt; and the President having made the statement to the effect that the entire body of the National Legislature has been actuated by the corrupt motive of shielding criminal Congressmen, we have thought it was right, before we brought in the final resolution, to give him all opportunity to establish the fact that he had some reason for making that statement. If he does not furnish any evidence, or furnishes insufficient evidence, to support his statement, then the country, which is the master of both of us, will come to its own judgment of his conduct. Meanwhile, this committee will remain in session—it does not become functus officio—and it will be ready to receive, to consider, and to weigh whatsoever competent and relevant evidence the President can furnish, and to act toward him and toward the House with absolute justice and impartiality, and to advise this House on a full analysis of the facts.

I hope the resolution will pass the House unanimously as an expression of its opinion.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will my colleague yield two minutes to me?

Mr. PERKINS. I will when I have first said a word. I wish to state to the House that the committee, instead of passing upon the message without further remark except the examination of the statements in the message itself, in order that any report that it may make shall be entirely just both to the President of the United States and to the Congress of the United States, presents a resolution that any further information which may bear upon our judgment may be furnished by the Chief Executive.

Such a resolution I think, Mr. Speaker, must surely commend itself to the entire body of the House, regardless of any difference of individual views; and therefore it seems to me it does not require debate; and I join in the wish expressed by my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that this resolution may be adopted without debate. When this committee makes its final report upon the question submitted to it, then there will be an opportunity for any man in this House who concurs or disagrees to the report to state his views to the House and to the country. Now I will yield with pleasure to my colleague from New York for any question he may see fit to ask.

Mr. BENNET of New York. My question, with the kind permission of my colleague, is this: As I understand the reading of the resolution, the recital simply indicates the present state of mind of the committee, and is not binding on the House any further than that?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; the gentleman is entirely right. The resolution indicates the present view of the committee on the evidence that is before them. When further evidence is received the committee will impartially pass upon all the evidence before it, and upon that make a report which may be approved by the judgment of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman from New York allow a question?

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand, from the way the resolution reads, that it is an imperative call on the President and omits the usual language in resolutions of inquiry—the words "if not incompatible with the public service."

Mr. WILLIAMS. We purposely omitted that.

Mr. PERKINS. It is not an imperative command. The House could not issue any imperative command on the Chief Executive. We request him to furnish us with any evidence that he may have bearing upon the character of the Members of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi to say that the committee purposely omitted the usual language?

Mr. PERKINS. My friend from Mississippi speaks for himself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, since the gentleman has used my name, I can not conceive of any public policy which could overrule or be superior to the question of the honor and integrity of the legislative branch of the Federal Government. Therefore it never struck me that the usual language ought to be contained in this particular resolution.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for a vote.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, may we have the resolution again reported?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the resolution.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from New York for a question.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Is there any objection on the part of the committee, so far as its chairman can express the view of the committee, to inserting in that particular recital which attempts to state the plain meaning of the words of the President the words "in the present opinion of your committee," so as to make it the opinion of the committee and not of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, that would necessarily follow. This resolution is reported by the committee. We say that we, the committee, have not been able to find any evidence upon which the charge is sustained. We say that our interpretation of the statement contained is as we state it. I should object to any amendments. The committee would object to any amendments to the resolution which we have brought in.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Would my colleague yield to me for the purpose of offering that amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. No; I can not.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Surely, for a question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Does the adoption of this resolution this morning contemplate that there shall not be any further report from the gentleman's committee?

Mr. PERKINS. Entirely the reverse.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I wanted that fairly understood.

Mr. PERKINS. Why, surely. The committee requests——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Now, when the entire report does come from the gentleman's committee, are we to understand that there shall be ample opportunity for full debate and amendment of the resolution in case of some of us do not agree to it?

Mr. PERKINS. Why, surely, Mr. Speaker; and the gentleman need not ask for any consent of the committee under the rules of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am not asking for consent, but only for assurance; that is all.

Mr. PERKINS. Why, certainly. Under the rules of the House the gentleman has a right to be heard, and he has a right to offer any amendment which the House will act upon.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I desire to say that I am very glad the resolution comes in in the form in which it does. I think it is entirely right, and I want to see it adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I would like to have the resolution reread. [Cries of "I object."]

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does this resolution undertake to speak on behalf of this House or of Congress? The President's reference was to the Congress, and not to one Chamber of it. The purpose of my question is to inquire if the committee has considered the propriety of endeavoring to make this a subject of joint action by both Houses, so that the request for information might be preferred by Congress as distinguished from a request for information by the House, to which no express reference was made in the President's message.

Mr. PERKINS. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that the committee was appointed by this House to report to this House, and we are not authorized to recommend any joint action by the two Houses. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for a vote or move the previous question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PERKINS. I can not yield, Mr. Speaker. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. On the resolution and the preamble?

Mr. PERKINS. On the resolution and the preamble to a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution and preamble.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the preamble and the resolution?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a separate vote. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask that the preamble be read separately now?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it could be read separately. However, the vote is first on the resolution.

Mr. COCKRAN. I thought a demand was made for a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. A demand has been made. The vote first will be taken on the resolution, and then would come the vote on the preamble. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the preamble.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to have a separate vote on each "whereas," on each recital?

Mr. COCKRAN. Let us have it read first.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand a separate vote upon each "whereas?"

Mr. BENNET of New York. I demand a separate vote upon the recital which contains the words "the plain meaning," which puts the House——

The SPEAKER. That is in which preamble?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think it is in the third preamble.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote is demanded by the gentleman from New York upon the third preamble.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think that is the one.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on the other four; if not, the vote on the other four will be taken together.

Mr. PARSONS. Let them be read first, Mr. Speaker, so we will know just what we are voting on. I ask that they be reported again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the preambles upon which a vote is to be taken together will be read. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there was contained in the sundry civil appropriation bill which passed Congress at its last session and became a law a provision in reference to the employment of the Secret Service in the Treasury Department; and

Whereas in the last annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress it was stated in reference to that provision, "It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes;" and it was further stated, "The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men;" and it was further stated, "But if this is not considered desirable, a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret-service force in investigating members of Congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent, or at least to hamper, effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the Government;" and

Whereas your committee appointed to consider these statements of the President and to report to the House can not find in the hearings before committees nor in the records of the House or Senate any justification of this impeachment of the honor and integrity of the Congress; and

Whereas your committee would prefer, in order to make an intelligent and comprehensive report, just to the President as well as to the Congress, to have all the information which the President may have to communicate; now therefore

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote will be taken upon the four "whereases" in the preamble together. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The question was taken, and the four "whereases" were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the remaining "whereas" will be read. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the plain meaning of the above words is that the majority of the Congressmen were in fear of being investigated by secret service men and that Congress as a whole was actuated by that motive in enacting the provision in question; and

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote is demanded, and the previous question has been ordered.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I call for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the remaining preamble——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Speaker called for the other side. The Speaker has not called for those opposed to stand up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withdrew the demand.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I will renew the demand for a division.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from New York called for a division and he can not withdraw that call without unanimous consent, and I object to the withdrawal.

Mr. MACON. I renew the demand.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 270, noes 14.

So the remaining preamble was agreed to.

CONGRATULATIONS TO NEWLY CONVENED PARLIAMENT OF TURKEY.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I ask the Clerk to report, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives respectfully requests the Secretary of State to communicate to the newly convened Parliament of Turkey the congratulations and best wishes of the House of Representatives of the American Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken on the resolution and it was agreed to. [Applause.]

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask for a change of reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks a change of reference, which he will state.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of House joint resolution 202. The resolution provides for the holding of the inaugural ball, and it deals with departments of the Government—the Interior and War departments—and provides for a direct appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States. I think this resolution, instead of being referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent to change the reference of the bill, of which the Clerk will read the title, from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (No. 202) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909—

And so forth.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SIMS. I would like the gentleman to withhold his objection until I can be heard. This resolution, Mr. Speaker, provides for the use of the Pension building for the holding of the inaugural ball, provides for the use of public spaces under the jurisdiction of the War Department, and makes a direct appropriation of $23,000, payable one-half from the Treasury of the United States and one-half from the funds of the District of Columbia. The portion of the resolution that deals directly with District affairs is of minor importance compared with the main body of the resolution, and calls for a direct appropriation.

I think it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations, because if this resolution reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia is amended so as to make an authorization of the expenditure, then the Committee on Appropriations will have to appropriate the money; and as the resolution deals with questions that are very largely not local or pertaining to the District government, I think it would be in the interest of good procedure for this resolution to go to the Committee on Appropriations. That is the reason I have made the request.

Mr. Speaker, if it is in order and the request is not granted by unanimous consent, I will ask to move a change of reference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I move that the change of reference be made.

The SPEAKER. Is that made on behalf of the committee?

Mr. SIMS. Not by direction of the committee; no. The committee has not directed it. I said, "if in order."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it competent for any member of the committee to move a change of reference of this bill from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Appropriations after the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. This motion would be in order on behalf of either committee immediately after the reading of the Journal, but it is not in order unless it voices the committee action.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

PASSENGER ACT OF 1882.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill S. 5083, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think the report ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The objection is heard, and the report will be read.

The conference report and statement of the House conferees were read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 5083) entitled "An act to amend section one of the passenger act of eighteen hundred and eighty-two," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered two, thirteen, and fourteen.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered one, three, four, five, ten, and eleven, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered six, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 4, line 3, after "thereof," insert the following: "subject to the allowance for measurement of public rooms, lavatories, and bathrooms, if any, provided for by paragraph ten;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 4, line 7, after the word "use," insert the following: "subject to the allowance for measurement of public rooms, lavatories, and bathrooms, if any, provided for by paragraph 10;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 4, line 12, insert after "thereof" the following: "subject to the allowance for measurement of public rooms, lavatories, and bathrooms, if any, provided for by paragraph 10;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 5, line 2, after "included" insert "and also, on whatever deck located" and strike out therefrom the following: "shall be provided for the exclusive use of steerage passengers, and the space so occupied shall be included;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "apartments" and insert in lieu thereof the word "compartment;" and the House agree to the same.

BENJ. F. HOWELL,
WILLIAM S. BENNET,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. P. DILLINGHAM,
H. C. LODGE,
A. J. MCLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The principal matters in difference between the two Houses were:

First. The amount of air space accorded to each immigrant.

Second. The question whether certain public rooms on the steamers should be made mandatory.

As to the first proposition, the Senate adopts the views of the House, which give the larger amount of air space.

As to the second proposition, the mandatory provision is not adopted, but the description of the House defining the public rooms is adopted, the net result being that the bill as agreed to gives the immigrant the largest amount of air space ever accorded to him.

In detail the effect of the amendments is as follows:

First. Those on which the Senate recedes:

One. Makes the provisions of the law apply to outgoing as well as to incoming steamers.

Three and four. Substitutes the word "shall" for "may."

Five, ten, and eleven. Increases, respectively, the amount of air space given to each immigrant.

Second. Those on which the Senate recedes and agrees with an amendment:

Six, seven, eight, and nine. These Senate amendments permit public rooms to be located on decks other than those on which the immigrants sleep.

Twelve. Simply a verbal correction.

Third. Those on which the House recedes:

Two. Leaves the word "section" as safer legislation than the word "act."

Thirteen and fourteen. Necessarily receded from on the assumption that the bill is to become a law before January 1, 1909.

BENJ. F. HOWELL.
WILLIAM S. BENNET.
JOHN L. BURNETT.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, the explanation of this bill will be brief. It brings the legislation with respect to steerage passengers up to date by adapting it to ships which now have from six to ten decks. The principal thing that it does outside of that is to increase the amount of air space which every immigrant is entitled to by law from a hundred cubic feet to an average of 184 cubic feet. There is a complete agreement between the two Houses, after some discussion in committee and in the conference. I have nothing more that I desire to say.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BENNET of New York, a motion to reconsider the motion by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] asks unanimous consent that the pension bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF CIVIL WAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. CAPRON]. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The first pension business was the bill (H. R. 23849) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Christopher C. H. Mace, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Gray, late of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James G. Proctor, late of U. S. S. Ohio and Onward, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oliver H. Gilbert, late of Company B, One hundred and eighty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas C. Blevens, late of Companies F and G, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James M. Wilson, late of Company A, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James M. Derby, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John R. Meredith, late of Company F, Two hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Iden, late of Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Harrison Howard, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph W. Daniels, late of Company G, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George D. Crane, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry J. Lyda, late of U. S. S. Essex, U. S. Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ephraim K. Pond, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac Crocker, late of Company E, Fortieth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Gustavus A. Springer, late of Company C, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Jones, late of Batteries H and K, Second Regiment United States Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James F. Shepard, late of Company I, Eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of McLin P. Wilson, late of Company K, First Regiment Mississippi Marine Brigade Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Harvey, late of Company F, Fifty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Goodner, late of Company E, Seventieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Dean, late of U. S. S. Nahant, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert O. Crawford, late first lieutenant Company B, Eighty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hartford Matherly, late of Company I, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph B. Nichols, late of Company I, One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay hims a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Austin Daugherty, late of Company A, Tenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John G. Gilmer, late assistant surgeon, Thirty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph S. Davis, late of Company H, Forty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ada Richards, widow of Isaiah Richards, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and general service, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Wesley B. Brown, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Bryner, late of Company I, Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nathan D. Gorton, late of Company C, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary J. Stone, widow of James Stone, alias James Thompson, late of Company C, Thirty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said soldier until such child shall arrive at the age of 16 years.

The name of James Yoder, late of Company D, Eighty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Davidson, late of First Battery, Wisconsin Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Walker, late of Company G, One hundred and tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph H. Blackburn, late captain Company A, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hattie W. Lord, widow of Henry T. Lord, late of Tenth Unattached Company, Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William Baughart, late of Company D, One hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sherman Hurd, late of Company G, First Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Tester, late of Company C, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albertus Bowen, late of Company B, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Augustus D. Sanborn, late captain Company G, Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles E. Thurber, late captain Company I, Eleventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William M. Clark, late of Company E, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Mercer, late of Company C, Ninety-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis N. Gibson, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah E. Hathaway, widow of John F. Hathaway, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James R. Allen, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Blevins, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah A. Turner, former widow of George Anderson, late of Company I, Twenty-seventh Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of David Lackman, late of Company H, Twentieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Calvin Elam, late of Company M, Thirteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Buchanan, late of Company A, One hundredth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David C. Clouse, late of Company B, First Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Milk, late of Company B, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alpheus F. Vanniman, late of Company A, Thirty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Malinda Jane Odell, widow of Jeremiah Odell, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Albert S. Scroggins, alias Allen S. Craig, late of Battery H, West Virginia Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Ellis, late of Company H, Nineteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel H. Davis, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and first lieutenant Company F, Ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George F. Morgan, late captain Company G, One hundred and fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George B. Matthews, late of Company D, Twenty-ninth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James T. Myers, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment, and Company B, Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Trahey, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi Howe, late of Company B, One hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William S. Landis, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Law, late of Company A, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. McKenzie, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas J. Tupper, late of Company K, First Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas W. Tattershall, late of Fourth Battery Wisconsin Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Reeser, late of Company E, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Sheedy, late of Company B, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jefferson Good, late first lieutenant Company H, Eighty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Allen T. Blank, late of Company D, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Meagher, late of Companies K and B, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward Lindsey, late of Company D, Second Regiment U. S. Volunteer Sharpshooters, and Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Russian B. Moody, late of Company E, Sixty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary West, former widow of James West, late of Company K, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William T. Collins, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Ezra Tait, alias Ezra Davison, late of Company E, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James M. Pixley, late of Second Battery Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William McClister, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter S. Burke, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward L. Burke, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Haney, late of Company I, Twenty-eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Fred Augustus Chandler, late of Company H, First Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Cavalry, and Company K, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jesse S. Camac, late of Company C, Sixty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lena Osborn, widow of Charles H. Osborn, late of Company A, Seventy-second Regiment, and Company A, Thirty-third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Homer W. Ayers, late captain Company B, Seventy-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William B. Tingley, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Oldham, late of Company A, Twenty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. H. Stout, late of Company F, First Regiment Alabama Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Paris Nordyke, late of Company K, Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert A. Herron, late of Company C, Ninety-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. Mullin, late of Company A, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David W. Bogard, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Emilia Goerisch, helpless and dependent child of Christian Goerisch, late captain Company H, Second Regiment U. S. Reserve Corps Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and captain Company B, First Battalion U. S. Reserve Corps Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James R. Atkins, late of Company C, Thirty-ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Philip Jenkins, late first lieutenant Company C, Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William R. Coe, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and Company A, Seventeenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Halleck Siverson, late of Company H, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Culby, late of Company E, Ninety-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martha A. Adams, widow of George F. Adams, late surgeon Sixty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Maria E. Ackert, widow of Lord M. Ackert, late of Company H, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth G. Hall, dependent mother of Samuel D. Hall, late of Company F, First Battalion Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles Claflin, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James B. Morgan, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jennie Bennett, widow of Charles H. Bennett, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Waterman Griggs, late of Companies I and A, Eleventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Haley, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Fowler, late of Company K, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin Andrews, late of Companies I and C, Third Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wesley Ellison, late of Fourth Battery, Wisconsin Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James M. Johnson, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. Hurtt, late of Company A, Eighteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Emrick, late of Company I, Eleventh Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo T. Morriston, late of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Georgianna Fanning, widow of George M. Fanning, late of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Lewis F. Fanning, helpless and dependent son of said George M. Fanning, this pension shall be reduced to $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Lewis F. Fanning: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Georgianna Fanning, the name of said Lewis F. Fanning shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Georgianna Fanning.

The name of James P. Emmons, late of Company H, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Slagle, late of Company E, Thirty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles B. Griffin, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mathew Jellison, late of Company F, Sixty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Company G, Seventeenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Morgan, late of Company I, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Tenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew Smith, late of Company A, One hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John N. Fox, late of Company D, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Rittenhouse, late of Company B, Sixty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi Bolton, late of Company A, and commissary-sergeant Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William E. Hobson, late colonel Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abraham C. Newcomer, late of Company A, independent cavalry attached to the Fifty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Marvine E. Payne, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Boals, late of Company K, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry W. Barnard, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ewing W. Davis, late of Company K, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 a month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harley S. Hobbs, late of Company A, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Enoch F. Blackwell, late of Company E, Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James M. Best, late of Company A, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Hamilton, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Clark Guinn, late of Company H, Ninety-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Margaretha Loether, widow of Ernst C. W. Loether, late of Company F, One hundred and third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Henry Stocks, late captain Company A, Ninth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Francis M. Burnett, late of Company D, Thirtieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. Blanchard, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John West, late of U. S. S. Ohio, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel F. Duff, late of Company B, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abraham Bennett, late of Company B, One hundred and third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Jones, late of Company C, Ninety-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Graham, late of Company C, Sixty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Eighteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Judson Graves, late of Company B, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas J. Roberts, late of Company B, Seventy-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elias Dedmore, late of Company F, Tenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Fourth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James A. Hicks, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel S. Conklin, late of U. S. S. Bienville, Sweet Briar, and North Carolina, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis Flick, late of Company K, Eighty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Stephen P. Chase, late of Company H, Eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rosanna A. Fitzpatrick, widow of John Fitzpatrick, late of Company F, Nineteenth Regiment New York State Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin A. Anderton, late of Company H, Thirty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Steel, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Mathis, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George T. Gibbs, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Ropp, late of Company F, Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James F. Ellis, late of Company G, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Snoke, late of Company H, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elias C. Minium, late of Company I, Fifty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James B. Lyon, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Sheaffer, late of Company D, Seventh-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Catharine Roach, widow of John Roach, late of United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Weaver, late of Company F, Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. J. Snyder, late of Company G, One hundred and eighty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Konigstein, late of Company M, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph T. Lokey, late second and first lieutenant Company E, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christopher Staffen, late of Company F, Ninetieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter Jagers, late of Company D, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Rifles, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Condon, late of Company I, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Valentine, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Conrad G. Boehme, late of Company D, Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram Cornell, late of Companies B and M, Sixty-first Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John Coppee, late of U. S. S. Princeton, Wyalusing, and Vermont, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Henke, late of Troop D, First Regiment U. S. Dragoons, and Battery A, Third Regiment U. S. Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. Stocking, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David A. Nations, late of Company G, Fifty-sixth Regiment, and Company K, Eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth A. Blades, widow of Charles S. Blades, late of Company A, First Regiment Eastern Shore Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George W. Williams, late of Company H, Twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Amos Kiehl, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Scott, late of Company F, Thirty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theodore Clark, late of Company A, Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David J. Bishop, late of Company D, Nineteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram E. Hubbard, late of Company E, First Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abiel H. L. Giffin, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter Dix, late of Company I, Forty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Arthur G. McNeill, late of Company D, Fourth Independent Battalion Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and Company C, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob T. Martin, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Patrick Gillin, late of Company C, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ebenezer N. White, late of Company K, One hundredth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Francis M. Browning, late of Company I, Sixtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Hall, late of Company E, Sixteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Miner E. Fish, late of Company C, and second lieutenant Company D, Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jesse Heaton, late of Company H, Twenty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Birdsong, late of Company E, First Battalion Mississippi Volunteer Mounted Rifles, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Matilda Nicholson, now Mixon, former widow of Jeremiah Nicholson, late of Company F, Sixty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Samuel South, late of Company B, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry T. Hatch, late of Company F, First Regiment Indiana Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Philander G. West, late of Company G, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Solon Hyde, late hospital steward, Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James B. Dutch, late of Companies B and A, First Regiment Illinois Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rufus H. Brittell, late of U. S. S. Brooklyn, U. S. Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel R. Cone, late paymaster's steward, U. S. S. St. Louis, Western Gunboat Flotilla, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John Thomas, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Second Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Perry Knickerbocker, late of Company H, Ninety-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Richard H. Williams, alias Richard Lawson, late of Company G, Thirty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Sizelove, late of Company K, One hundred and fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adolphe R. Candy, late of Company D, Thirty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frederick Winter, late first lieutenant Company L, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and Company B, One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Bischoff, late of Company C, Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Smith, late of U. S. S. Ino, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram Prusia, late of Company H, One hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac Shoemaker, late of Company K, Forty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hamilton C. Ingles, late of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel B. Piper, late first lieutenant and adjutant, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Basil D. Prather, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Fidelis W. Sweetman, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Cephas F. Mosher, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Fisk, widow of Henry C. Fisk, late colonel Sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of James Ousley, late of Company K, First Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Bedford Randolph, late of SCompany A, Tenth Regiment, and Company M, Second Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nancy Mitchell, widow of John Mitchell, late lieutenant Company I, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Henry K. Price, late of Company C, One hundred and thirty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oscar Davis, late of Company D, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Gross, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Carey W. Howe, late assistant surgeon, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joshua F. Bishop, late second lieutenant and captain Company H, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elias Gerberich, late second and first lieutenant Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James G. Rumbolz, late of Company D, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rebecca B. Baker, widow of Gen. T. Baker, late of Company E, Seventy-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Francisco Lucero, late of Company A, First Regiment New Mexico Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Francis M. Hunting, late of Company G, Seventy-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter Boyer, late of Company I, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Arthur P. Gilman, late of Company B, Twenty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hugh McLaughlin, late of Company A, One hundred and sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John K. Pickens, late of Company A, Thirty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Chauncey F. Mitchell, late captain Company A, Tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Tilley, late of Company C, Thirty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton Edwards, late of Company G, Twenty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and second lieutenant Company H, Sixth Regiment U. S. Colored Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Grim, late of Company I, One hundred and fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Barney H. Mayfield, late of Company A, Eighteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew B. Shattuck, late of Tenth Independent Battery Massachusetts Volunteer Light Artillery, and Company C, Eleventh Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Clara P. Swift, widow of Ebenezer Swift, late captain and assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Freeman, late of Company G, Seventy-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and U. S. S. Brooklyn and Fort Jackson, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary P. Glynn, widow of James G. Glynn, late second lieutenant Company A, One hundred and seventy-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ross Rush, late of First Independent Battery, Iowa Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel H. Kettering, late of Company E, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Signal Corps, U. S. Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin P. Bussom, late of Company D, Twenty-third Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas J. Bennett, late of Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles S. Breese, late of Company L, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah E. Murray, helpless and dependent child of Ivory Murray, late of Company I, Twelfth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James Knox, late of Company B, Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Catherine Green, widow of Daniel Green, alias David Green, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and Company K, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Lizzie S. Alty, widow of Josiah S. Alty, late of Company G, Thirty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Isaac D. Pease, late acting ensign, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Wildes, late of Company H, First Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, First Regiment Kansas Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, on page 9, I move to amend by striking out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14. The beneficiary is dead.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out on page 9 lines 11, 12, 13, and 14.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Also, on page 20, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out lines 17, 18, 19, and 20. The beneficiary is dead.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out on page 20 lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF CIVIL WAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23850) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Alcot Stover, late of Company E, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of W. H. Twiford, late surgeon, Twenty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Wilcox, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis C. Queen, late of Captain Damron's independent company, Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martha E. Gilbreath, widow of Josiah R. Gilbreath, late of Captain Gilbreath's company, Alabama Scouts and Guides, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James Cupps, late of Company E, One hundred and first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Hendershot, late of Company M, Second Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. McCutchon, late of Company B, One hundred and fifteenth Regiment, and Company G, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Mehringer, late of Company K, Twenty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Dobbins, late of Company B, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John F. Moyer, late of Company B, One hundred and fifteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Timothy Johnson, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and Company C, Fifty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles May, late of Company I, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Melissa W. Pitcher, former widow of Francis Wheeler, late of Company H, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Chauncey H. Graves, late of Company A, Sixty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and first lieutenant Company K, One hundred and fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Tripp, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and second lieutenant Company H, Nineteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Parker Green, late of Company G, Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Clutts, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Lewis, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Ashmore, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob E. Dreibelbies, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Sappenfield, late of Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George B. Cock, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and captain Company G, Fifth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Austin P. Maguire, late adjutant, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James E. Scott, late of Company F, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward Gooly, late of Company F, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth A. Gold, widow of Peter H. Gold, late of Company F, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Alexander Guyon, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. McKee, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alice B. Moore, widow of Pliny Moore, late captain Company C, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Henry C. Edmiston, late of Company E, Twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Storey, late of Company F, Seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Quackenbush, late of Company E, First Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Barney O. Flinn, late of Company I, Eleventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rufus M. Liggett, late of Company D, First Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Drummond, late of Company B, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Richard Welch, late of Company E, One hundred and fifty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Catherine Sasse, former widow of George Imwalle, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Henry B. Arnold, late hospital steward, Two hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Florence H. Porter, widow of John B. Porter, late quartermaster-sergeant, One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of David Leadbetter, late of Company L, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles W. Mann, late of independent company, Dennison Guards, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company M, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joshua J. Brown, late of Company L, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Selden M. French, late of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christian Kaiser, late of Company E, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George F. Wattson, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Dulieu, late of Company A, Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Smith, late of Company C, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Klinesmith, late of Company H, Twenty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and first lieutenant Battery H, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adolphe Legout, late of Company D, Thirty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry S. Briggs, late of Company A, First Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George F. Hood, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Susan C. Crary, widow of Arthur B. Crary, late of Company E, One hundred and thirty-eighth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Arthur B. Crary, helpless and dependent son of said Arthur B. Crary, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Susan C. Crary the name of said Arthur B. Crary shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Susan C. Crary.

The name of John Akerman, late first lieutenant Company I, Forty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward B. Wright, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas B. Rogers, late of Company I, Forty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Pleasant A. Cashon, late assistant surgeon, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hugh H. B. McMaster, late sergeant-major, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas L. McDonald, late of Company B, Forty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Herman Lerner, late of Company C, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hyrcanus Highley, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Flint, late of U. S. S. Ohio, Gemsbok, and North Carolina, U. S. Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Pike, late of Company D, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin M. Redlon, late captain Company B, Twenty-ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis Grant, late of Company H, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Almira Goetchins, widow of Newton Goetchins, late of Company A, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Nelson S. Bowdish, late first lieutenant, Battery M, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jesse F. Camp, late of Company H, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and One hundred and tenth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James A. Finney, late of Company K, Fifty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Franklin Weidler, late of Company A, Ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Martin, late of Company K, Eighty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John McCausland, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Ormsby, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Hecock, late of Company A, Thirty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob F. Bradt, late of Company K, Eightieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry F. Carr, late of ordnance detachment, Watervliet Arsenal, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Saunders, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Thayer, late of Company D, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wellington Harder, late of Company B, Ninety-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Wood, late of Company B, Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Agnew, late of Battery D, First Regiment Illinois Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Buchanan, late of Company F, Thirty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edwin H. Atwood, late of Company I, Twenty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac A. Pearce, late first lieutenant Company E, and chaplain, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew S. Johnston, late of Company L, Ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William R. Ingalls, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eveline Aiken, widow of Dwight A. Aiken, late captain and commissary of subsistence, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Richard Vaughn, late of Company E, Ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William E. Oldham, late first lieutenant Company A, Twenty-first Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nicholas J. Snyder, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment U. S. Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Henley, late of Company B, Fifty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ward Haines, late of Company A, Eighth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Perry Kipp, late of Company L, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Pulaski Fraker, late of Company I, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and Company G, Twenty-second Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Mefford, late of Company C, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sylvester C. Smith, late of Battery D, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Kate C. Simkins, former widow of Thomas G. MacNeill, alias Thomas G. Connor, late of U. S. S. Agawan, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Enos W. Ruland, late first lieutenant Company B, One hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John M. Lukens, late of Company C, Thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Merrit Tompkins, late of Company M, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William S. Lessig, late of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Conner, late of Company F, Eighty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Issac N. Coakley, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Fay, late unassigned, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ephraim Plumpton, late of Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $60 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Bracey, late of Company I, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Horatio W. Longa, late of Company M, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $60 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elam T. Heatherly, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram H. Fisher, late of Company C, Eighty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Berger, late of Company E, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oliver D. Bemis, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. H. Tilghman, late of Company F, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Spencer C. Williams, late of Company I, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Engineers and Mechanics, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Michael B. Van Buskirk, late of Company H, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Darnell, late of Company D, Thirty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Twenty-first Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Linenkugel, alias Lincogen, late of Company D, Second Battalion, Eighteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Romosier, late of Company H, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jesse S. Clum, late of Company C, and first lieutenant Company D, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Cyrus D. McCaskey, late of Company B, Seventy-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Cephas C. Miller, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Laban A. Timmons, late of Company A, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George S. Connor, late captain Company A, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levis T. Houk, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Arthur Gorman, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles J. Nelson, late of Company A, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin S. Waggener, late of Company A, Third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 4, line 5, by changing the spelling from "Graves" to "Groves."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 5, change the spelling of the name from "Graves" to "Groves."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I also move, on page 13, lines 5 and 6, to change the spelling of the name from "Goetchins" to "Goetchius."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, lines 5 and 6, change the spelling of the name from "Goetchins" to "Goetchius."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I also move, on page 15, line 3, to strike the letter "u" out of the name "Saunders," so as to make it read "Sanders."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 3, strike the letter "u" out of the word "Saunders."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF THE REGULAR ARMY AND NAVY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 24344) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Samuel H. Thacker, late of Company A, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Robert Fitzgerald, late of Captain Pickett's company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Norman Statham, late of Captain Pickett's company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James A. Woodward, late of band, Twentieth United States Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Shadrach Hudson, late of Capt. W. W. Chapman's company (I), Second Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel A. Brown, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment U. S. Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Harriet H. Hardwick, widow of Pleasant F., who served as B. F. Hardwick, late of Captain Lucas's company, Georgia Volunteers, Creek Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Sebe N. Scott, late of Company G, Thirty-eighth Regiment U. S. Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James H. McMillen, late of Captain Lee's company, First Regiment Oregon Riflemen, Cayuse Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Allen Philpot, who served as William Philpot, late of Capt. John Witcher's company, Georgia Mounted Volunteers, Cherokee Indian disturbances, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The name of George W. F. Reeve, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment U. S. Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Archibald McN. Harrison, late of Capts. H. Wilber's and T. R. Cornelius's company (D), First Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Allen Kirk, late of Capt. J. K. Kelly's company (C), First Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Willingham, late of Captain McNeil's independent company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac A. Redd, late of Lieutenant Addison's company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Allen D. Douglass, late of Captain Smith's company, Florida Volunteers, Florida Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is receiving.

The name of Charles Calvin Eaton, late of U. S. S. John Hancock, United States Navy, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac V. Mossman, late of Captains Hayden's and Burch's companies, Oregon Volunteers, Yakima Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Orr, late of field and staff band, Fourth Regiment U. S. Infantry, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Lane, late of Capt. W. H. Wallace's company (D), First Regiment Washington Territory Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James T. Phillips, late of Company C, Second Regiment Washington Territory Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Fox, late of Capt. W. A. Wilkinson's company (F), Second Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers, Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 8, by inserting, after the word "Twentieth," the word "Regiment."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "Twentieth," insert the word "Regiment."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. On the same page, Mr. Speaker, line 20, after the word "Company," amend by adding the words "Second Regiment."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "Company," amend by inserting the words "Second Regiment."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, the several votes by which the bills were passed were laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order for the House to go into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. While this is Thursday in the week, it is Friday under the rule adopted by unanimous consent, just the same as it would be on any other Friday, when private bills are in order. Therefore the motion would be in order.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I make that motion—that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Of course the motion would have to be to consider bills on the Private Calendar, under the rule.

The SPEAKER. It would have to be under the rule.

Mr. MANN. The motion was not put that way, and it might not be construed that way.

The SPEAKER. Of course, all the rules are in force and all business must be considered under the rules, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I take it that if the House went into Committee of the Whole now it would be on any bill on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to go into Committee of the Whole for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PRINCE. Following the language of the rule itself.

Mr. MANN. But the motion is not made "under the rule."

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair does not see that it would hurt to add to the motion the words "under the rule."

Mr. FITZGERALD. But on one Friday a certain class of business is in order, and on another Friday another class is in order, but only the class of bills which would be in order on pension day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will recollect that the rule has been, and as the Chair recollects the practice of the House has been, that after all pension bills on the Private Calendar to-day are disposed of the House can go ahead in the Committee of the Whole House to consider other bills, it being still Friday.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, without reference to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, would it not be in order to call up for consideration desertion cases that are on the Private Calendar?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have the preference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair's recollection of the rule is that, this being pension day, and the business of pensions having been concluded by the House, it would first be in order on to-day to take up desertion cases which are passed with pension bills, and then it would be in order, if they should be finished, to consider the Private Calendar generally.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The reason I called attention to the form of the motion a while ago was as to whether a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar would give to the committee the authority to take up such bills on the calendar as the committee pleases, or whether they are limited to taking up first bills from the committees other than claims and war claims, two days being especially set apart for claims and war claims. Heretofore it has been the custom——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in error. This is pension day. Now, that business having been concluded, it would be in order, as the Chair understands, for the House to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar; and under the rules of the House, this being pension day, the desertion bills would have first right of way, pension bills having been concluded; and if that right of way is not claimed, or if that order of business should be finished, then any other bills on the Private Calendar would be in order, as the Chair understands.

Mr. MANN. But if the Chair will permit, my recollection is that on pension day it has been the custom and practice to take up bills on the Private Calendar reported from committees other than claims and war claims. I may be mistaken about that.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule pension bills formerly took up all day. Latterly they have not taken up all day, and the House has not seen proper to go into the committee to consider other bills in order; but under the rule it is quite within the power of the House, in the opinion of the Chair, to go now into the Committee of the Whole House for private business, or to do anything else that it desires to do.

Mr. MANN. In order that we may have a distinct proposition before the House, I beg leave to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that originally the rule provided that Friday in every week shall be set apart for consideration of private bills, unless otherwise determined by the House.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Then the House adopted a rule setting apart the second and fourth Fridays:

The second and fourth Fridays shall be set apart for the consideration of private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion.

Thereafter the House provided by resolution that the second and fourth Friday of each month it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of private business according to the old rule, giving preference one week to war claims and the other week to claims. Now, it seems to me that when the House specifically provided that certain days should be set apart for claims and war claims, it intended to and did abrogate the original rule setting apart every Friday for the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that all the rules should be considered, so as to let each one operate, if practicable.

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by the House.

Subsequently the two Fridays spoken of were dedicated for pensions. Now, if pension business is completed, under the rule which the Chair has just read it seems to the Chair, and it has been so held, as the Chair recollects, that it is in order for the House, under the rule just read, to take up any business on the Private Calendar in order, as provided by the rule.

Mr. MANN. A further parliamentary inquiry. Last week—I think preceding Friday—the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], as I recollect, asked unanimous consent that Thursday of this week might be set apart for the consideration of pension bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, that is a mistake.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer that suggestion. It was dedicated the same as a Friday, when pensions are in order, and for that purpose it is Friday, by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the rule.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with Mr. CAPRON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, in order to have the matter settled properly before the House, I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12760.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the bills in the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the regular order will first be bills removing charges of desertion.

Mr. PRINCE. That is exactly the motion I have made, if gentlemen will not be too previous, as they sometimes are.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order, further, will be to take up such bills in their regular order as are on the calendar, unless it be by a vote of the committee to take up some special bill.

Mr. PRINCE. I am willing to take them in the regular order.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAWSON. Is the bill the gentleman from Illinois proposes to call up the first case of desertion on the calendar?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not know. I know it is the first bill on the calendar where a Member who has the bill in charge of that character is present.

Mr. MANN. What is the number?

Mr. PRINCE. H. R. 12760, Calendar No. 985.

Mr. DAWSON. Calendar No. 934 is the first desertion case on the calendar—H. R. 14343—and I make the motion that that be laid before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no earlier bill, the Clerk will read the bill (H. R. 14343) to correct the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell and issue to said Randolph W. Campbell, or his heirs, an honorable discharge from said service as of April 16, 1863, in recognition of his three years' subsequent faithful service in the United States Army.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6 of the bill strike out the words "an honorable" and insert in lieu thereof the word "a."

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, if no one desires to ask any question, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to have an explanation. The report does not speak very favorably of the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. The first question is if the committee wants general debate as to whether the bill ought to be favorably considered. The report in this case does not indicate a very favorable case, and I wish the gentleman in charge of the bill would give some explanation of it.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois really desires an explanation of the case, I should be glad to give it.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman for the purpose. I have no desire to take up unnecessarily the time of the House.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a case which comes clearly within the rule adopted by the Military and the Naval committees in considering cases of this kind. This boy, 16 or 17 years old, enlisted in the navy in October, 1862, and served faithfully until April, 1863, at which time he came ashore at New York. It should be remembered all along that he was only a boy of 16 or 17 years of age. On coming ashore he fell in with a lot of boarding-house runners and others and was shanghaied. When he regained consciousness he found himself on a merchant ship bound for China. Of course there was no way for him to return to his country and complete his enlistment in the navy. When he did return to this country, however, his enlistment in the navy had expired. He had been at home only a few days—and this shows his good intention—when he reenlisted in the army and served until after the close of the war and was honorably discharged September 22, 1865.

Now, it seems to the Naval Committee that it is only an act of simple justice that he should be given a discharge from the service in the navy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's explanation seems to be very satisfactory, and it would seem to me that if the case is such that it ought to be acted on favorably at all, it ought to be acted on more favorably. This proposition now before the committee will not do the gentleman a particle of good. What is it? It is to give him a discharge, not an honorable discharge. If he is entitled to any action from Congress, he is entitled to an honorable discharge. He now has a dishonorable discharge, and that is all this committee proposes to give him.

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman will permit me—under the regulations of the Navy Department, the word "honorable" preceding discharge gives a man additional privileges and pay in case of reenlistment in the navy. The members of our committee would be very glad indeed to allow the word "honorable" to remain in; but as I say, under the regulations of the Navy Department where a man is granted an honorable discharge the years he has served prior to that discharge are counted in reckoning his pay.

Mr. MANN. If the man reenlists. Does the gentleman from Iowa think there is any danger of a civil war veteran now reenlisting in the navy and being accepted?

Mr. DAWSON. I do not.

Mr. MANN. Is not the real purpose of this bill, first, to give the man an honorable status among his neighbors, and, second, to permit him to apply for a pension, neither one of which will he obtain if the recommendation of the committee be adopted? If the gentleman will permit me, at the last session of Congress, in every case that came up from the Committee on Naval Affairs, where we struck out the word "honorable" and the bill was passed at all, the committee retained the word "honorable," believing that if anything was to be done in behalf of the man justice ought to be done, and justice does not go half way.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to accept the amendment intended to be proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. All that is needed is to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman's committee. That is the reason I call attention to the case.

Mr. DAWSON. I will say for the benefit of the House that the word "honorable" in all the bills reported from the Naval Committee has been stricken out at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, in accord with the policy of that department, and I will say further that I think the bill in terms as it is before the House will carry the benefits which the claimant expects.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the statute requires before you can get a pension that you must have an honorable discharge.

Mr. DAWSON. But, Mr. Chairman, this claimant has an honorable discharge from the military service. This bill would straighten out his naval service.

Mr. MANN. But the rule is that he must have an honorable discharge for each service in which he enlisted. One honorable discharge does not do a man any good unless he has an honorable discharge each time.

Mr. DAWSON. For my part I should be very glad to see the word "honorable" in there, although I do not desire to jeopardize the success of this bill after it has passed both Houses of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe in presenting a gold brick to a man and calling it gold.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] whether, if this bill was passed, this man would be entitled to a pension.

Mr. DAWSON. I think so, in its present form, although I should prefer to grant this man an honorable discharge.

Mr. MANN. Vote down the committee amendment. That is easy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. FOSTER of Vermont having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. MCLAURIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 52.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

ROBERT S. DAME.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 10606) for the relief of Robert S. Dame, Calendar No. 946. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], of the Military Committee, reported the bill and has charge of it. I see now that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] is in the Chamber. I did not know that he was here when I called up the bill.

Mr. PRINCE. For that reason I question whether any other Member not authorized by the Military Committee to do so can call up a bill when the bill has been authorized to be called up by a member of the Military Committee.

Mr. BATES. Oh, it is my bill.

Mr. PRINCE. That does not make any difference. The gentleman has no authority to call up the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that any Member can call up a bill that is properly on the Calendar which is in order under the rules.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That Robert S. Dame shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a second lieutenant, Company D, First U. S. Veteran Volunteers, and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue him a certificate of honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know by what rule of procedure the bills that are being taken up are called?

The CHAIRMAN. By their position upon the Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this bill. This is not a bill for the removal of the charge of desertion. This man was court-martialed and dismissed from the army.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the Chair will recognize that this bill is properly before the House.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the Chair to page 3 of the report of the committee under the heading "Charge 2," wherein he was found guilty of both charges and specifications and was sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the service of the United States, with loss of all pay and allowances.

Mr. ROBERTS. With what was he charged?

Mr. MANN. He was court-martialed.

Mr. ROBERTS. They charged him with desertion.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I will state the case in a few words. It is for an honorable discharge. This lieutenant served over four years, and he had gone up to his home while his company was being mustered out, and they sent word to him to come back, and he sent in his resignation as they were being mustered out in 1866, and then they took him back and court-martialed him at that time and dismissed him from the army.

Mr. ROBERTS. On what charge?

Mr. PARKER. On the charge of absence without leave.

Mr. ROBERTS. That is practically desertion.

Mr. PARKER. Well, he resigned while on a week's leave.

Mr. MANN. This is not to remove the charge of desertion. The man was court-martialed——

Mr. PARKER. It is very hard to get a chance to be heard in the confusion. I trust the gentleman will not make any objection to this very deserving case.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to this case being considered in its proper place.

Mr. PARKER. Well, we are all ready to consider it now, and it takes less time to consider it at this time and conclude the matter, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection and let it go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires to pass it by unanimous consent I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ISAAC N. FORDYCE.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 12760) to correct the military record of Isaac N. Fordyce.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Isaac N. Fordyce shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from Captain Gilmore's company, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, as of date of November 19, A. D. 1862.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LAFAYETTE L. M'KNIGHT.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 16015) for the relief of Lafayette L. McKnight.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lafayette L. McKnight, also borne as Lafayette McNight, be held and considered to have served as a private in Captain Brooks's company, Mechanic Fusileers, later designated as the Fifty-sixth Illinois Infantry, from October 20, 1861, to January 28, 1862, and to have been honorably discharged therefrom.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask my colleague to make a statement? It would appear, of course, this man was not mustered into the service, and even the term that he purports to have been in the service would not reach the term under which a man can obtain a pension—ninety days.

Mr. PRINCE. All I can say to my colleague is this: That this person was on the pension roll and drew a pension for a great number of years. Under the searching examination made by our former colleague, the present Commissioner of Pensions, a number of persons like this pensioner or applicant were dropped from the rolls. The Commissioner of Pensions appeared before our committee and urged in person that this one be placed back upon the rolls, as under the evidence before the Pension Bureau, as well as affidavits on file with the committee, he ought to be mustered in and given a place upon the pension rolls, for he was disabled while in the line of duty before he could be mustered into service. Largely upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions himself, who appeared before the committee, the committee made this favorable report, and I trust the House will lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, if there are no more bills dealing with desertion cases, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there are other bills dealing with desertion.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then bring them up; the last bill was not a desertion case.

The CHAIRMAN. It was considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman got the floor and brought the bill up before we realized what the bill was. I shall object to any more bills which do not deal with desertion if taken up out of their order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill which deals with the matter of desertion.

THEODORE F. NORTHROP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2253) for the relief of Theodore F. Northrop.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Theodore F. Northrop, late first lieutenant, Second Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, shall be held and considered to have been a captain of cavalry, in command of scouts in the army of General Sherman, from September 10, 1864, to May 22, 1865; and the Secretary of War is authorized to issue to said Northrop a certificate of such service and of honorable discharge in accordance with this act: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall become due and payable by reason of this act.

The substitute committee amendment was read, as follows:

That Theodore F. Northrop, late first lieutenant, Second Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, and who commanded a body of mounted military scouts in the army of General Sherman from January 3, 1865, to March 31, 1865, shall be held and considered to have been an officer of the Volunteer Army during that time, for the purpose of an application for a medal of honor: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall become due or payable by virtue of this act.

Mr. ROBERTS. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I wrote that bill myself, and I do not think it is a desertion case.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order if there are any Members desiring to bring up desertion cases.

The CHAIRMAN. It was an error. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GEORGE W. HEDRICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7006) to correct the military record of George W. Hedrick.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George W. Hedrick, late of Company B, Seventh West Virginia Volunteers, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the service of the United States as of April 2, 1864.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Add at end of the bill:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. ROBERTS. Does this bill relate to desertion? There is nothing stated so far.

Mr. MANN. It is a clear desertion case.

Mr. KAHN. This is a case of a soldier who served three or four years.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill clearly relates to the charge of desertion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill as amended will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

DE WITT EASTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4749) for the relief of De Witt Eastman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the name of Dewitt Eastman, late of Company B, Second Minnesota Volunteers, and of the Fourth U. S. Artillery: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

WILLIAM H. HOUCK.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 11460) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Houck.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to ascertain the calendar order of the bills relating to the removal of the charge of desertion.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is a desertion case—Calendar No. 1060, H. R. 11460. I have a copy if the Clerk has not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Houck, late of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to said William H. Houck an honorable discharge, to be dated July 20, 1864

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided, That said William H. Houck shall receive no pay or other emoluments by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just to illustrate what we are doing in removing charges of desertion, in this case the soldier testified that he became intoxicated and was ordered, as the result of that, to be confined in the guardhouse, and as he did not approve of the order, he deliberately deserted, and there is no other explanation in regard to it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me say this, Mr. Chairman, that this soldier enlisted in April, 1861, and he deserted April 21, 1865.

Mr. MANN. But he knew better.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. After the war was over. He went into the army for the purpose of fighting, and the ordinary volunteer soldier in the civil war gave but little consideration to red tape or military conventionalities. This man lacked just eleven days of having served four years. He did not get intoxicated until the war was over [laughter], until the fighting had all been finished. He deserted after the surrender of Lee, after the capitulation at Appomattox. I think a man who served his country faithfully for four years without any shirking or evasion of duty may be excused now if he got intoxicated once after the war was over.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman seems to think that the charge of desertion is a charge of intoxication, but that is not the case. We are not removing the charge of intoxication, but we are removing the charge of desertion—not deserting when he was drunk, but deserting when he was sober.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The facts in this case are that the soldier deserted on the 21st day of April, 1865, and was away about two or three weeks. After the amnesty proclamation, issued by Mr. Lincoln, he went back and joined his command, expecting to be mustered out, and they took him down into Georgia. He was there five or six weeks, and he wanted to go home and do some work. They did not allow him to, and he did not have anything to do but loaf around the camp. He got somewhat intoxicated and was put in the guardhouse, and he thought it a little humiliating for a union volunteer soldier to be treated in that way for so small an offense after the close of the war.

Mr. MANN. He deserted twice.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He got out of the guardhouse and went home.

Mr. MANN. He deserted twice.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He deserted twice, but after the war was over.

Mr. MANN. That is a very good plea; but he deserted twice.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That does not make any material difference. He was with the army as long as there was fighting to do, and he deserted when the fighting was all over. Many Union soldiers quit the service after the war was over without the formality of being mustered out, and Congress made a law authorizing the Secretary of War to issue discharges to those who had served faithfully for six months or more and deserted after May 20, 1865. This soldier had served faithfully for nearly four years, but he deserted April 21, 1865, returned to his command about May 10, 1865, and then quit the service June 18, 1865. The Secretary of War holds that he did not serve faithfully for six months prior to May 20, 1865, because of his absenting himself from the service in April. He is given no credit under the law for his four years of honorable and faithful service during the actual conflict.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM A. HINSCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3388) to correct the military record of William A. Hinsch.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey addressed the Chair.

Mr. PARKER. I wanted to call up that bill. Let me state the facts in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. I raise the point of order on the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Let me state the facts in relation to it.

Mr. MANN. You can state the facts on the point of order.

Mr. PARKER. It is practically a desertion case.

Mr. ROBERTS. I object.

Mr. PARKER. May I have order for a moment? I would like to say what this is. This man enlisted——

Mr. MANN. I made a point of order on the bill.

Mr. PARKER. I understand your point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will suspend.

Mr. MANN. I just wanted the Chair to get the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3388) to correct the military record of William A. Hinsch.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to so amend the records of the War Department as to show that William A. Hinsch was honorably discharged from Company F, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was duly and properly mustered out of such service before enlisting for three years' service in the Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances may accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. PARKER. This man served three months. He then enlisted for three years. There is no discharge on record for his three months' service, so that he appears technically on the records as a deserter, although he was not a deserter, and is marked there as such. He went into the three years' service, but there is no muster out and no discharge from the three months' service, and therefore it is the removal of a charge of desertion.

Mr. ROBERTS. I say it is not desertion.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is desertion. If he was not held as a deserter, he could get his record corrected at the War Department.

Mr. ROBERTS. I understood the gentleman to say there was nothing on the record.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He was not mustered out, supposed to be in another regiment; that leaves him here without any record of being mustered out.

Mr. PARKER. So he is marked on the rolls with a record incomplete and virtually as a deserter.

Mr. ROBERTS. I object to that class of cases being taken out of their turn. I have a similar case.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then you ought to pass it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it has been the custom of Members introducing bills to avoid the use of the words "removal of the charge of desertion," as far as possible, and put in the words "correcting the military record." Now, the Chair thinks that this bill actually removes the charge of desertion, although it is not so worded.

Mr. PARKER. I move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES M'KENZIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7071) for the relief of James McKenzie.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7071) for the relief of James McKenzie.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to remove the charge of desertion standing against James McKenzie, of Company D, First Battalion Eleventh U. S. Infantry, and issue to him an honorable discharge as of date from August 26, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That James McKenzie be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from Company D, First Battalion, Eleventh U. S. Infantry, as of date of August 26, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if this is a desertion case?

Mr. KAHN. It is; and I move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that this bill also is precisely of the same class as the one previously passed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether 1039 has been considered?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; it was passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New Jersey that the bill he inquires about has been laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ALFRED BURGESS.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the bill (S. 1162) to correct the naval record of Alfred Burgess. He had a charge of desertion against him.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, are we proceeding in regular order on these bills?

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the Chair is informed, we are.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have a desertion bill that is ahead of that.

The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible for the Chair to tell until the bills are examined, and when there is no objection bills as they have been called up by Members have been considered; but if it is found that they are not in their calendar order, we will proceed in that order so far as possible.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have a bill ahead of this one in the regular order, but I will wait until after the consideration of this bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the record of Alfred Burgess, late a seaman on board the U. S. S. Sonoma and Juniata, and to remove any charge of desertion now standing against the record of said Alfred Burgess and to issue to him an honorable discharge.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I may, I should like to get a little information from the distinguished Committee on Naval Affairs. I notice that in all the bills that have been brought up from the Committee on Military Affairs to remove charges of desertion, they have invariably recommended this amendment:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

And that in all of the bills brought in from the distinguished Committee on Naval Affairs that provision is carefully omitted. Now, I understand that different committees may have different policies, but the House itself ought to have the same policy on bills coming from both committees and relating to desertions from either the army or the navy. I should like to inquire what that means. If it is proper in cases of military desertion, it certainly is proper in cases of naval desertion.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose that in each case the report is upon the facts. I have no knowledge whether this sailor desires to ask for a pension or not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that it has been construed that that language does not cut a man out of a pension.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It cuts him out of any extra pay or bounty, but not out of a pension.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Chair will permit me, I will repeat that I have no knowledge whether this man intends to apply for a pension or not. The bill was passed by the Senate and referred to the House Committee on Naval Affairs. We considered it and concluded unanimously to report it back to the House with the recommendation that it pass. The man may be entitled to a pension. I do not know. The question was not asked.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I suppose the purpose of the bill is, partly at least, to enable him to get a pension, and nobody is objecting to that part of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state again to the gentleman that I have no knowledge whatever of the intention of the sailor. I do know that it was not the intention of the Naval Affairs Committee to allow him what is commonly known as "back pay."

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman have any objection to putting in the amendment which is usually put in bills of this character:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act—

With the assurance that that does not affect at all the question of a pension?

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection whatever. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not know who introduced this bill. I know that it was reported by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG], who is absent because of illness, and I concluded that I would call up the bill and ask the committee to consider it. I have no objection to the insertion of that amendment in the bill. I would not like, however, to see the sailor deprived of his right to apply for a pension.

Mr. MANN. That does not deprive him of the right.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say that when similar bills affecting the soldiers were considered by the Military Committee some years ago, it was found that if a bill passed without any limitation it raised the question of considerable pay while the man was absent from his command. It would entitle him to go back and collect any bounties that had been offered for that enlistment and all other emoluments forfeited by desertion.

The Committee on Military Affairs did not believe that any man restored to his rights by having an honorable discharge should be deprived of a pension, and after consultation with the authorities the committee got up this form, and now attached to all bills from the Committee on Military Affairs, that cuts them off from any pay they should not have. It cuts them off from going back and getting a bounty or for any clothing allowance that may have been due at the time of desertion, but leaves them as free before the Pension Commissioner to secure a pension under the law as any man who has never deserted. So that the amendment would not affect his rights to a pension in the slightest degree.

Mr. BUTLER. This man did not desert. He was by accident marked a deserter; he served until 1865. The affidavits of comrades and the Senate report show that he was ordered from his ship while at a point along the Florida coast and carried to New York and put in the navy-yard, where he served as a blacksmith.

The engineer who made the affidavit says that the man did not desert; by mistake his name was not handed to the paymaster, and the paymaster on the ship marked him a deserter. He went to the navy-yard in New York and served until 1865. I submit to the House that whatever this man is entitled to have he ought to have. It may be that he only wants this correction for patriotic purposes, simply to improve his military record. The man served his country and did all the service he was asked to do, and I do not believe that under those circumstances this committee should deprive him of any of his rights.

I do not know what his purpose is, whether it is mercenary or patriotic.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is simply to correct his record; it was not a desertion at all, according to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BUTLER. He is marked a deserter, and therefore we consider it as a case of desertion.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Therefore it is necessary to pass the bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Will my colleague yield to me? I would like to answer a little more fully the interrogation by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in regard to the policy of the Naval Committee as to such bills as this.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us pass this bill first. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I only yielded to the gentleman a short time. I had the floor, I believe.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I took the floor and yielded to the gentleman from Iowa, and then asked the gentleman from Iowa to yield back the time to me.

Mr. MANN. I took the floor and was entitled to one hour, and I yielded to the gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not know that by the gentleman rising and asking a question he took me from the floor.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not have the floor.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, will either gentleman tell me how they took the floor away from me? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. This is rather an academic discussion. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. MANN. I do. I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill the words:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the House will not adopt that amendment under the circumstances I have stated in this particular case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the words "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say a moment ago a word or two regarding the policy of the Naval Committee as to these bills. The gentleman from Illinois is in error in assuming that all bills of this character which are reported from the Naval Committee do not carry the provision that he has presented as an amendment to this bill. I will state to the House that the policy of the Naval Committee is to place that limitation on bills where they do carry any back pay or other allowance, and sufficient consideration is given to every bill to determine that fact before the bill is reported. In these bills where back pay or other allowances would accrue to the claimant the provision is included in it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask my colleague what process the Committee on Naval Affairs goes through to find out all the record of a man, as to whether he would acquire any extra pay without this provision.

Mr. DAWSON. I can not take the time of the House now——

Mr. ROBERTS. We get the reports from the department and examine them.

Mr. DAWSON. It would take too much time of the House to go through in detail every case, but it must be clear to the Members of the House that in this particular bill that rule has been followed; that this man simply appears on the record as a deserter; that he was not at the time a deserter; and if there is any back pay or allowance due to him on account of his service in the navy, then I say the Congress, in fairness and justice, ought to pay it to him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] assumed, I think, that the Committee on Naval Affairs ascertained whether there is any back pay due, because certainly no one in the House knows better than he that there is no department of the Government that can tell whether there is back pay due or not until an application is made and audited and all of the papers are gone through. The gentleman can not ascertain now within two weeks' time whether there is back pay due this man from the Auditor for the War Department, because there is no way of telling until the whole matter is investigated, and very often the auditor does not have the facts upon which he can decide the case until additional evidence is presented. Now, as to this case. This case was referred to the Navy Department. They did not report anything in reference to whether there was back pay due, but the Secretary of the Navy said in regard to this matter that the department sees no reason for special legislation in this case. So far from getting the report of the department as to whether there was anything due or not, the committee disregarded the recommendation of the department against the bill. It may be they had sufficient information——

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, no; it was not a recommendation against the bill.

Mr. MANN. It may be they had sufficient information, but if so, it was not disclosed in the report.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me read the balance of the report.

Mr. MANN. The department says it is a matter for Congress to determine.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, we do not need the report from the Secretary of the Navy that Congress determines whether special legislation shall be passed, but the department says that the department sees no reason for special legislation.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then why does the gentleman cite the department as against the bill?

Mr. GARRETT. What does the department state?

Mr. MANN. The department states as a fact that the man was a deserter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. Of course, if this man was in fact a deserter, why, this amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I will concede the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Illinois states that the department reports that he was a deserter.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a fact that the department so reports; as a further fact he was marked on the record as a deserter, when in fact the evidence shows that he did not desert. The evidence of his superior officer shows that he was taken from the ship by authority and ordered to New York, and the mistake is with this officer, because he did not inform the paymaster of the ship, who marked the sailor absent without leave. The sailor was taken, with his comrades, to the navy-yard in New York, and there he served as a blacksmith under the direction of the Navy Department until after the war had terminated.

Mr. GARRETT. It was wholly without his fault?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and upon a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 1, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

BUSINESS METHODS IN POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee rise informally to receive a report from the joint commission on the business methods in the Post-Office Department and postal service, to accompany a bill to codify, revise, and amend the postal laws of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the committee rise informally for the purpose of receiving a report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FOSTER, of Vermont], having assumed the chair, Mr. OVERSTREET submitted a report from the joint commission on the business methods in the Post-Office Department and postal service, to accompany a bill to codify, revise, and amend the postal laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Final report of the joint commission on the business methods of the Post-Office Department and the postal service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be received and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and ordered printed. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order. The committee will resume its sittings.

CHARLES A. BESS.

The committee accordingly resumed its sitting.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 14974) for the relief of Charles A. Bess, calendar No. 1068, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from, correct the military record of, and grant an honorable discharge to Charles A. Bess, who was a private in Company B, First Regiment California Infantry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this bill. This is a bill to remove the charge of desertion and to correct a military record. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has no jurisdiction over such a bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. It comes from the Military Committee.

Mr. MANN. That may be; I do not say where it comes from. I see it reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and that it was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. ANTHONY. You have a copy of the first reference. I think that it was afterwards referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That was corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The report is from Mr. ANTHONY from the Committee on Military Affairs, and undoubtedly the heading is a misprint.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I notice the usual clause is not on that particular bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to that clause.

Mr. MANN. I do not see why it should; the House just voted the other way. It is not nearly as bad a case as the one we just passed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say it is a mistake of the subcommittee, because in the Committee on Military Affairs we put that on all of them.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that that clause be put upon that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following proviso:
"That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JACKSON PRYOR.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 8545) for the relief of Jackson Pryor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Jackson Pryor, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, so as to grant him an honorable discharge as of the date when said company was mustered out of the service of the United States.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EDWARD T. LINCOLN.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8615) to correct the naval record of Edward T. Lincoln.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the record of service of Edward T. Lincoln, late an acting master's mate in the navy during the war of the rebellion, to show that he was discharged the service on January 8, 1865.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa for a question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Do the records show he was honorably discharged?

Mr. ROBERTS. The records do not show he was ever discharged; the records show he was dismissed from the service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What date?

Mr. ROBERTS. The date of November 28, 1864. As a matter of fact, he served until early in January, in 1865, before the action of the department had ever reached him, and during that year he participated with his ship in two battles. For some reason or other the action of the department was not communicated to this officer at all until several months after they have it recorded on their files.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, undoubtedly, without any limitation, that would give him back pay up to the date provided by this bill.

Mr. ROBERTS. Unquestionably, if he served from the date on which they have that discharge to a time subsequent, and has not received his pay, he could receive it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, Mr. Chairman, that happens in all branches of the service, that men are not really mustered out until the papers are approved and returned.

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, that was not the point. This was not a mustering out. This man was dismissed from the service under charges, if the gentleman will listen for a moment, without a hearing and without any knowledge that the charges were even pending. He was dismissed by the Secretary of the Navy when the law at that time contemplated only dismissals by the President, and it was afterwards amended so that these dismissals only continued for a short time, a few years, and that was afterwards repealed. In this case, if the gentleman will pardon me for a moment, there was an ill feeling that arose between this master's mate and a superior officer on his ship, and the superior officer went in to do up this man, and he did him up by stabbing him in the back, by preferring charges of which the officer had no knowledge, and which were acted on by the department notwithstanding that when the knowledge did come to him he asked for a hearing and it was denied him.

He served gallantly and honorably, and it is only fair that this officer should have an honorable discharge from the service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, we are not challenging the committee on that proposition at all. What I believe, though, to be absolutely right, is that the limitation should be to give this man his discharge and not open up his accounts. This is a discharge after the department said he was separated from the service. You have taken the evidence. I want to say in this connection, Mr. Chairman, if it had not been for the pension act of 1890, by which everyone gets a pension on honorable service, regardless of his disability in the army, there would hardly be a case of this character before Congress. There has been an increase of military cases in a year after the passage of that act of over 2,000 of this character of bills. I sympathize with their wanting to get on the pension rolls, but I do not want Congress to open up the accounts of all these officers that have been separated from the service by their desertion or by the action of their superior officers. And I think if we restore them in such a way that they can all get on the pension roll, and draw the same pensions as though their records were absolutely clear, Congress is acting in a very generous spirit toward them. For that reason I want to see this amendment put on that bill, unless of the character just reported, when a man was continued in the service and was assigned by his superior officer, for the reason that he was there during the pay days and undoubtedly got all his pay.

Mr. ROBERTS. This officer did continue in the service after the date upon which the Navy Department had him separated from it, and he participated in two battles in that period. Now, as I stated a moment ago, I do not know whether his accounts were settled down to the time he actually left, or whether they were settled at the time the department says he left. If they were not settled down to the time of his actually separating himself from the service, then he is entitled to some pay and emoluments for those two or three months, and he ought to have it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, Mr. Chairman, we are giving him pay and emoluments as long as he lives by the rights he secures under the pension laws.

Mr. ROBERTS. As a matter of fact, if the gentleman will pardon me, the record of the Navy Department in this man's case does not seem to be very accurate anyway. They have him connected with the service at an entirely different date from the real date. For instance, they say he was appointed September 3, 1863. He brings before the committee his original appointment, dated August 7, 1863. The records of the Navy Department in this case, to say the least, are not very trustworthy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. When did he first apply to Congress for relief?

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman from Massachusetts, my colleague [Mr. McCALL], introduced the bill. I do not know when it was first introduced. I yield to him.

Mr. McCALL. This man drew his pension up to two or three years ago—November, 1905. His record was absolutely unchallenged, and somebody in making an examination with a microscope thought he ought not to have a pension, and he was stricken from the roll. Now, the man has had three services. He had enlisted from Illinois, served out his term very honorably, and immediately reenlisted, served three years, saved a gun with great heroism at Fort Donelson, and was wounded. Then, after that service, he had this service as master's mate, and he served along, as my colleague has said, until 1865, and was then informed he had been separated from the service under charges of which he had no notice and upon which he had no hearing. During that time he fought in two battles. Now, I do not know that he makes any claim. I assume he does not make any claim, because he did not dream that he was not honorably discharged until 1895. I do not know that he makes any claim for back pay.

It does seem to me it is as fair a case as ever came before the House of Representatives. It is as strong as the case just acted upon, and I should prefer to have it go precisely as it has been reported by the committee.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman serve three years in one enlistment?

Mr. McCALL. I understand so.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is evidently mistaken.

Mr. McCALL. I will give the exact record. He enlisted April 23, 1861, for three months. Then it gives his record in detail, which was a very honorable one. Then he reenlisted, and he was mustered out July 31, 1861. That is a little more than three months. Then he enlisted in the military service on August 5, 1861, for three years, and was discharged at Fort Donelson August 3, 1863, by order of the War Department for promotion in the United States Navy.

Mr. MANN. Discharged.

Mr. McCALL. He only served of that enlistment two years. He enlisted first on August 5, 1861, and was discharged at Fort Donelson August 3, 1863, two years after, by order of the War Department, for promotion in the United States Navy for services rendered on or about August 10, 1861, just as my colleague has made out.

Mr. MANN. Only your colleague was mistaken about the War Department being in error.

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, no; it is the Navy Department I am speaking of.

Mr. MANN. This man was transferred in August.

Mr. ROBERTS. But the Navy Department says it was in September.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Navy Department says August.

Mr. ROBERTS. But Mr. Lincoln submitted to the committee his original appointment under date of August 7, 1863. That is in the report, and was the statement I made.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. McCALL. I do not think it is at all material.

Mr. MANN. Except as a little reflection upon the navy record, which agrees with the army record. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ROBERTS. I want that little point cleared up, because the record is September at the department. It appears that he was appointed acting master's mate September 3, 1863, and Mr. Lincoln brought before us his original appointment by which he acquired the office, dated August 7, 1863.

Mr. MANN. The two statements do not contradict at all.

Mr. ROBERTS. Why, they simply show that the Navy Department did not record him as an officer on the day appointed. They gave him his commission and recorded it as of a date different from that on which he got it.

Mr. MANN. It only shows that the commission was not issued as soon as he assumed the duties of the office.

Mr. ROBERTS. He had been assigned to the duty, and the Navy Department did not make record of it until a later date.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman, with his record, tell us why this man was dismissed from the service?

Mr. ROBERTS. I stated that a moment ago.

Mr. MANN. I did not hear the gentleman state it.

Mr. ROBERTS. I stated that there were charges preferred against him for borrowing money from shipmates of the U. S. S. Peri. He had no knowledge of those charges at the time they were made, and when he got his dismissal he first learned why he had been dismissed, and then he sought a hearing. The department denied it to him. He never had heard until he was separated, why he had been separated, and the separation was merely dismissal. He was not discharged, but simply dismissed from the service of the navy, and he did not get a discharge, honorable or dishonorable. He got no discharge whatever.

Mr. MANN. He was dismissed because he was borrowing money from the men on board ship.

Mr. ROBERTS. He was dismissed because somebody alleged he was borrowing money.

Mr. MANN. And there was no denial?

Mr. ROBERTS. And he denied it.

Mr. MANN. There is no denial of the charge in the report. If the gentleman from Massachusetts who introduced the bill knows the facts, I should like him to state them.

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman from Illinois is quibbling.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not quibbling. The gentleman did not even refer this bill to the Navy Department for a report. Perhaps that is quibbling.

Mr. ROBERTS. I think the gentleman said a little while ago that Congress could act without instructions from the departments, and here in the first case where we propose to so act he says that the bill has not been referred to the department. I think we are able to dispose of this matter without requiring any further explanation from anybody.

Mr. MANN. Nothing is stated here in the report showing what the facts are to support the passage of this bill. Whatever the facts are I am quite sure the gentleman from Massachusetts does not know, or he would have told us. Now, if my other friend from Massachusetts will state the facts——

Mr. McCALL. I have stated all the facts in the case.

Mr. ROBERTS. This bill was referred by the committee to the Navy Department.

Mr. MANN. The report does not show that it was referred. The report says they had the record of this man.

Mr. ROBERTS. What difference does it make whether the report shows that the case was referred or was not referred?

Mr. MANN. I think it makes a good deal of difference.

Mr. ROBERTS. The House has the facts, and we are willing to abide by its decision.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I suppose the House in its present temper, where each Member has a bill on the calendar that he desires to have passed, will vote for any bill.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside and to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN B. FORD.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 4737) to correct the military record of John B. Ford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John B. Ford be held and considered to have been mustered into service as a private of Company A, Seventh Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, as of date of September 22, 1863, and an honorable discharge be issued in accordance with this act.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. HEDRICK.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7006) to correct the military record of George W. Hedrick.

Mr. KAHN. That has already been laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that that bill has already been favorably acted upon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Vermont rise?

Mr. HASKINS. I rise for the purpose of asking——

Mr. MILLER. I desire to call up the bill H. R. 13319, Calendar No. 929. I understand all the desertion cases have been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there still remains another desertion case on the calendar undisposed of, and the Clerk will report that bill.

CORWIN M. HOLT.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 4931) to correct the military record of Corwin M. Holt, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of being absent without authority now standing on the rolls of the army against the name of Corwin M. Holt, late a first lieutenant of Company B, One hundred and third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge.

The following committee amendment was read and agreed to:

At the end of the bill insert the words "as of May 1, 1865."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PLEASANT THOMAS.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 1086) to correct the military record of Pleasant Thomas, late of Company B, East Tennessee National Guards.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a desertion case?

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. It is reported from the Military Committee.

Mr. MILLER. Are not the Committee on Claims entitled to the floor now, for the purpose of calling up bills on the calendar in their regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will repeat what was stated by the Speaker of the House before he left the Chair, that bills removing charges of desertion and kindred bills are first in order.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman——

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. My bill is reported by the Military Committee, and I understand the gentleman from Kansas has yielded to me for the purpose of having it considered.

Mr. MANN. He could not yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized in his own right, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the military record of Pleasant Thomas be, and the same is hereby, so corrected as to read: "Enlisted in Company B, East Tennessee National Guards, September 1, 1863," instead of October 1, 1863, "and honorably discharged December 15, 1863."

The following committee amendment was read:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the cases in which the committee were not unanimous. I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] desires to be heard on that. I do not think unanimous consent ought to be given at this particular time for that bill.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the bill.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not think this is the bill. This is a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. PARKER. I will tell you why I can not be mistaken: In making up the roll of bills to go into an omnibus bill the committee were called together to see whether there were any members of the committee opposed to those bills. We were only going to put into an omnibus bill at the last session those cases in which there was no opposition on the part of any member of the committee. This is a bill which corrects the date of a man's enlistment and the date of his discharge, changing the rules so as to give him three months' service instead of two months' service, away back in 1863. It is not of very great importance, because his service was good between the two dates, anyhow. I do not want to take the responsibility of objecting.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Then do not object.

Mr. PARKER. I will let it go, under the circumstances.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PATRICK CONLIN.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7963) for the relief of Patrick Conlin.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that a charge of desertion?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is the same as the last three or four that were passed.

Mr. MANN. No; it is not in order.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Patrick Conlin shall hereafter be held and considered to be entitled to all of the rights and benefits that he would be entitled to on account of military service, except pay, bounty, and other emoluments, if he had been continuously in the military service of the United States as a private of Company I, Fifty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, from the 27th day of January, 1862, to the 8th day of August, 1865, and had been honorably discharged on the date last named herein.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, in this case Patrick Conlin said he was in the army three years, but there is not a single bit of record to show his being there. There is no doubt that he was around with the regiment and that he did service part of the time as a soldier. He was a very young boy; he was not enlisted; he was not mustered, but carried his gun. I am inclined to think there is quite enough merit in it to make it go, and I make no objection. I only want to state the fact.

Mr. MANN. I do not agree with the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object. The man was wounded in the service of his country. They would not muster him in on account of his youth, because he was so small, but they gave him clothing and they gave him a gun, placed him in the company, and he served in it for a period of more than three years. This is all gone over in the regimental history. The bill has passed this Congress twice. It once suffered a pocket veto, and on another occasion it was vetoed, not because of its merits but because of the language that is used in the bill. I will state that the language used now in the bill was language prepared by The Military Secretary and agreed to by the War Department.

Mr. MANN. I can readily believe the gentleman that if the bill passed it was vetoed twice. Any President who would take the trouble to read the report from the committee would veto the bill. I object to it.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I have looked over the case, and it is the case where the man did fight valiantly all through the war.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois read the report.

Mr. MANN. I have read it more carefully than has the gentleman from Kansas. I can quote things from the report, which I doubt if the gentleman himself can.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. MANN. I objected, Mr. Chairman, to the consideration of the bill. I said when the gentleman called the bill up that I objected to the consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. O Mr. Chairman, it has been considered, and the bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the ground on which the gentleman from Illinois objected to the consideration.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, and I objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so interpret it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I asked unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. The gentleman from Illinois objected to that. Now, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not see why the consideration of the bill is not in order. If the gentleman from Illinois will state to the Chair the reason, the Chair will keep his mind open.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Kansas has the right to make the motion, and that any other person who receives recognition from the Chair has a similar right to take up any bill on the calendar. Of course I do not insist on the point of order, although I do not believe in taking the bills up out of the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 53 ayes and 4 noes.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all war-claim bills on the Private Calendar be passed for this day.

Mr. SIMS. Let me make an inquiry. Does the gentleman ask it because he thinks they will not be reached or considered after the order that we are now on is completed?

Mr. HASKINS. I make that request for the reason that this morning I had an understanding with the Speaker that to-morrow was war-claims day, and upon that I notified several Members who have claims pending that they would not be required to attend to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. Under the rule, war claims will not be considered on this calendar anywhere to-day. Is not that right?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that after the passing of the special bills removing charges of desertion, and of kindred nature, the Speaker of the House decided that bills on the Private Calendar would be in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Including war claims?

The CHAIRMAN. They were neither included nor excluded, and so the Chair recognizes the gentleman's request for unanimous consent that the committee may understand that those bills were not to be taken up at this session to-day. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the bill reported from the Committee on War Claims be not taken up at this session to-day.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HASKINS. Very well, Mr. Chairman; I move that all war-claims bills on the Private Calendar be not taken up to-day or be passed.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman, if that motion prevails when will the claims come up?

Mr. HASKINS. To-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they will probably never be reached again if they are not taken up to-day.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] states that he has notified several gentlemen interested in these war claims that they would come up to-morrow instead of to-day, and for that reason asks that they all be postponed until then. I am interested in one of them—a bill for the relief of the estate of Samuel Beatty, deceased—and I am here to-day, and I would like to have it acted upon to-day, because I might not be here to-morrow; and I am afraid that if I am here these cases may not be taken up, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested. This claim should have been paid many years ago, and I do not like to see it further postponed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont that in the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar to-day bills reported from the Committee on War Claims be not considered to-day.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the motion to be to pass them for to-day or to be considered to-morrow?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no authority to say as to to-morrow. That is the understanding.

Mr. CLAYTON. Just passed without——

Mr. ROBERTS. Without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Without prejudice.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. That wants to be understood.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 68, noes none.

So the motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN C. WELCH.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] called the attention of the Chair to a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 5388. For the relief of Benjamin C. Welch.

Mr. BUTLER. Against that I make the point of order. The next bill is calendar No. 554, a bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts if this bill which he calls up is a bill for removal of the charge of desertion?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; but it is analogous to these others.

Mr. MILLER. Then, Mr. Chairman, the first bill on the calendar is calendar No. 554.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5388) for the relief of Benjamin C. Welch, which the Clerk was reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that a point of order has been made against the consideration of the bill. The point of order is that special bills now being considered, it is clearly in order that we shall begin at the head of the calendar.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move that this committee proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the committee proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5388) for the relief of Benjamin C. Welch.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire whether that is the next calendar number? I think No. 554 on the calendar is the next one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts clearly has the right to make the motion now before the committee. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the committee proceed to the consideration of the bill S. 5388.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 16, noes 46.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. MILLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move that all bills be taken up in their regular order, with the exception of war claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that motion is not necessary, because that is the rule. The Clerk will report the first bill in order.

THOMAS P. MORGAN, JR.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. H. 1081) to pay Thomas P. Morgan, jr., amount found due him by Court of Claims.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas P. Morgan, jr., $6,357.82, in satisfaction of the findings of the Court of Claims of the United States in the case of Thomas P. Morgan, No. 692, Congressional, on the dockets of said court, said amount being the sum due said Morgan on a dredging contract in Norfolk Harbor with the Government, and for which the Government got value received.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "Morgan," insert the word "junior."

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Claims, and the committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment, and that amendment is that in line 8, page 1 of the bill, after the word "Morgan" the word "junior" be added. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the motion for the adoption of the amendment is presented I desire the floor for a moment. I do not desire to consume the time of the House in the reading of the report, but I do wish the gentleman from Indiana would state the merits of the case, about which there has been a great deal of controversy, and I think it is due to the House, if this bill be passed, that there be some statement in the RECORD concerning it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me, immediately after the adoption of the amendment I intended to yield to the gentleman from Indiana for that very purpose.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman from Indiana will have plenty of time to make a statement, but I would like to have it now——

Mr. MILLER. And I hope the committee will grant him that time. I yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY], who will make a brief statement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I have the floor. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] out of my time such time as he needs to make a short statement of the case.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, this is the case of Thomas P. Morgan, who had a dredging contract with the Government down here in Norfolk Harbor. Mr. Morgan's contract having been annulled on account of differences in disputes over the rapidity with which the work was done and from the long delay of the case in the War Department, failed to bring an action against the Government under the general jurisdiction of the Court of Claims within the statutory period so that he might have obtained a judgment for the amount due him. The amount that the Court of Claims found to be due him was retained percentages on the contract, for by the terms of the contract 10 per cent of the amount to be paid the dredger for the work was to be retained until after the contract had been executed. At the time the contract was annulled there was also a balance due him on account of the dredging work that had not been audited on the work when the contract was annulled. So the account that was sued for in the Court of Claims consisted of the items of retained percentages and the dredging work which was actually done by the contractor and which had not been stated for payment at the time that the contract ended and for which he was never paid. So these two items were sued for in the United States Court of Claims, and the court found on the evidence adduced that this amount of money—the retained percentages and the balance due on account of dredging work—should be paid, and found in his favor for that amount. Had he brought his suit within the period of the statute of limitations the court would have announced a judgment in his favor in the amount of money for which the court now makes findings merely. Owing to the fact that the court could only state its findings, and not a judgment, under the Tucker Act, the findings of the court are here for our consideration in the sums justly due Mr. Morgan, which he sued for. The United States got the benefit of the work that he did, and the money that is embraced in this finding is justly due to Mr. Morgan, and he ought not to be kept out of it any longer, and therefore I think it is a very just and proper thing to be passed now. The amount which the Committee on Claims has found is the same amount that the Court of Claims found. There is no guesswork about it. It was a judicial determination by the Court of Claims, which in this case makes the same sort of judicial investigation that it makes in a case where it pronounces a judgment.

So that there could be no question about the justice and merits of this case, and I submit that the bill ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM PARKER SEDGWICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1199) for the relief of William Parker Sedgwick.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William Parker Sedgwick, late midshipman, an ensign in the United States Navy, and to place him upon the retired list as such, with three-fourths the pay of his grade.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, upon this calendar No. 1020 is identically the same bill, it having been reported back from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House after favorable action by the Senate on the same thing. It is identically the same, and I ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 5263 for this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FASSETT. Now, I move that this bill, unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to hear about it——

Mr. MANN. I know about it.

Mr. FASSETT (continuing). Be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I did not object to the consideration.

Mr. FASSETT. I yield to the gentleman for a statement.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. FASSETT. I do not want to give up the floor, then, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can hold it as long as he pleases, and when he is through I will take it.

Mr. FASSETT. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will not content himself with giving me the floor. Am I not entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT] has the floor for one hour.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the time of this House further than to briefly state, first, that this bill proposes to entitle a midshipman to the benefits of the usual laws of retirement in the navy. This is done on the recommendation of the department. The House approved a similar action in the case of Midshipman Childs a year or two years ago, on the theory that the young man was disabled and met his disabilities in the service of his country and in the line of his duty. This young man graduated, I think, in 1904, completing his course at Annapolis, and standing twenty-fifth in a class of some sixty-odd, and was assigned to duty. In the line of duty he was overtaken by physical misfortune, was denied an examination, and on repeated examination promotion to the rank of ensign, where he would be entitled to retirement. Without this help he is left broken in health in the service of his country, and we ask for him now what the Navy Department has asked shall be provided for in a general bill, namely, that he may be retired on three-quarters pay. It substantially amounts to that, and I hope the House will be generous to this young man.

Mr. BARTLETT. How old is this young man?

Mr. FASSETT. He must be in the neighborhood of 36.

Mr. BARTLETT. And physically unable to perform any service in the navy?

Mr. FASSETT. He is not able to pass the physical examination. He contracted the white plague, tuberculosis, while in the service. If he is promoted to ensign, he can then get the benefit of the national hospital for such unfortunates.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is that the only benefit he will get?

Mr. FASSETT. He will get his retired pay, which will be three-quarters of the regular pay.

Mr. BARTLETT. No back pay?

Mr. FASSETT. No back pay.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. This is one of three or four similar cases considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. Two of them are cited in this report. One similar in circumstances and facts passed this House about a year ago. That was the case of a Mr. Childs, who while still a midshipman contracted tuberculosis of the lungs, or consumption, and Congress very generously passed a special law placing him upon the retired list. It was accomplished upon the recommendation of the Navy Department. I repeat what the gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT] has said—the department has suggested that a general law be passed providing a general remedy such as is asked for in this case specially. I believe this to be the only branch of the service to which this right or privilege does not apply. This young man, at the expiration of the four years at the academy, went to sea and contracted this disease while performing service for the Government as a midshipman. He asks permission to go on the retired list at three-fourths the pay of an ensign, which is $1,540 a year, and which amounts to eleven or twelve hundred dollars. He asks that this bill may be expedited, that he may be possessed of sufficient funds to enable him to go to a hospital to make an effort to be cured.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Cheerfully.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the midshipman, if he becomes disabled during his term as such, does not go on the retired list.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN (continuing). And if he gets to be an ensign and becomes ill the next day, he could be put on the retired list.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman has stated the situation correctly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, a midshipman, after actually leaving the academy, is still called a midshipman and can not be put on the retired list.

Mr. BUTLER. He can not be put on the retired list.

Mr. MANN. And after serving at the academy they do not get their appointment at once?

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. MANN. It is still six years.

Mr. BUTLER. He has to serve two years at sea before being commissioned an ensign.

Mr. MANN. Suppose he had taken consumption while at the academy, is there not just as much reason for placing him on the retired list as there would be during the time he was serving two years afloat?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know how to answer the gentleman's question. We were moved to report this bill favorably because this young man had had two years at sea, and his time for promotion was about reached when, upon physical examination, he was discovered to have consumption of the throat or lungs. Furthermore, it was reported to us that he had contracted this disease while at sea in the performance of his duty, and, having established a precedent not more than a year ago, the feeling of the committee was that we should ask the House to give this unfortunate young man the advantage of it and place him on the retired list.

Mr. MANN. It seems almost queer. This young man had two troubles—one was with his eye and one was with his lungs.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN (continuing). How would he be able to get into the academy with defective vision and defective lungs?

Mr. BUTLER. They both developed after admission. I believe that both of these disqualifications developed after he was admitted. He eventually adjusted the trouble with his eyes with glasses, and later on developed tuberculosis and was removed from the service.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a further question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. It is whether there is any effort on the part of the committee to adopt the suggestion made by the Secretary of the Navy, that a general bill be passed covering this kind of cases?

Mr. BUTLER. I have no doubt that such a bill will be reported, but with so many duties pending before the committee this one is not neglected, but is waiting its turn, and has not yet been considered; but I know of no division upon it in the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. MANN. There is no bill of that kind now?

Mr. BUTLER. None; but we do expect to report one during the next term of Congress.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the House bill will be reported with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

There was no objection.

H. C. LINN AND SAMUEL POWELL.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the next bill on the calendar in its regular order be passed without prejudice, for the reason that the author of the bill [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] is absent, and he has an amendment that he desires to offer.

Mr. MANN. What is the bill?

Mr. MILLER. It is the bill (H. R. 14000) for the relief of H. C. Linn and Samuel Powell, introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]. He is absent, but I am informed that he has an amendment he desires to offer to the bill, and that is why I ask that it be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

JOHN CROWLEY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7807) to place John Crowley on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7807) to place John Crowley on the retired list of the United States Navy.

Be it enacted, etc., That in consideration of services rendered in the United States Navy during a period of thirty-two years, from April 11, 1865, to June 20, 1897, that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place John Crowley on the retired list of the navy with the retired pay of the rating in which he was serving at the time of his last honorable discharge.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. ANDREWS], and as a member of the subcommittee on private bills of the Naval Committee it was assigned to me to report and bring up in the House.

The report states that John Crowley, after thirty-six years' continuous service in the army and navy, was mustered out, and this bill seeks to give him the benefit of the provision of the retirement act of 1906, he having been retired about a twelvemonth before that legislation. The man had served thirty-six years, practically continuously, in both the army and navy, and he holds eight medals for reenlistment. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. The report of the Naval Committee upon it was unanimous.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I know it meets with the disapproval of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] to ask why the Naval Committee does not get reports from the department on bills, but I am not sure that it would meet with the disapproval of all the Members of the House to have such reports. Whatever may be the authority of Congress, it is the practice to send almost all bills relating to different departments to those departments for reports, and I wish that somebody for the Naval Committee would either tell why they did not do it or else say that it none of our business.

Mr. BUTLER. Why, there is a report here.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no report from the Navy Department on this bill.

Mr. BATES. There are set forth in full in this report two letters from the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department.

Mr. MANN. I have them before me. I have read them.

Mr. BATES. They are certainly department reports, as this Chief of the Bureau of Navigation has more specific and intimate knowledge and intimate relations with this class of cases than the Secretary of the Navy could have.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, there is not another committee in the House, I dare say, that will insist that a private letter, or any other kind of a letter, addressed to a Member of the House in reference to a proposition, is a report on a bill from the department. The committee of which I have the honor to be a member would not for a moment consider that to be a report of a department, and we would not think for an instant of bringing a bill here in reference to putting a bridge over a stream and submitting a report that contains a letter from the Chief of Engineers to Mr. MANN, or to Mr. JONES, or somebody else in the House. The bills are referred in regular order to the head of the department, who assumes some responsibility in connection with the legislation. This is not the first bill of this sort that has been in here to-day without a report from the department. As far as the letter from the chief of the bureau is concerned, the bill would seem to have some merit; but I think that we are entitled to have the departments pass upon matters of that sort.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman surrender the floor to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I am through. I have the floor no longer.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that there ought to be department reports in all instances. I call the gentleman's attention, however, to the fact that this is a bill of a character upon which the department gives no special advice. This is a gratuity, if anything, to this old sailor, in view of his thirty-seven years' service. If you pass this bill, you will put him on the retired list with pay of about $28 or $30 a month. He would have been entitled to this retired pay if he had been able to hold out a year or perhaps a year and a half longer, but he reached the statutory age when he had to quit the service too early to receive the benefits of general law. A year after that, or perhaps a year and a half, a general law was passed which would have placed him upon the retired list, but unfortunately for him his service at this time was complete. While we do not desire to establish a precedent, the long and faithful service of this sailor induced us to recommend to the House that he go onto the retired list, where he will find his companions retiring one year later placed under the general law.

Mr. BATES. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM JENNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17059) for the relief of Mate William Jenney, U. S. Navy, retired, and the 8 other retired mates who have been placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, we are informed that by a recent ruling by the Department of Justice they have been given all that they could be given under this bill. I ask to have it passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Then, why do you want to keep it on the calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill just reported be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the reason for keeping it on the calendar?

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. The information came to us only a little while ago, and we would like to verify it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

KENNETH M'ALPINE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16927) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Kenneth McAlpine.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Lieut. Commander Kenneth McAlpine, U. S. Navy, a commander in the navy on the active list, subject to examination, to take rank next after Gustav Kaemmerling, as originally borne on the Navy Register from 1886 to 1903.

SEC. 2. That the said Kenneth McAlpine shall be considered to have been continuously in the naval service from the date of his appointment on September 13, 1877, but that he shall receive no pay or emolument for the period from July 17, 1903, to March 3, 1905; and that he shall be additional to the number of officers prescribed by law for the grade of commander in the navy, and to any grade to which he may thereafter be promoted.

SEC. 3. That the said Kenneth McAlpine shall perform engineering duty only, on shore only.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I move this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the Clerk read the report, or a part of it, in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16927) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Kenneth McAlpine, U. S. Navy, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

The committee recommend the enactment into a law of this bill for the relief of Lieut. Commander Kenneth McAlpine, U. S. Navy, restoring to him the rank and numbers, subject to examination, as originally borne on the Navy Register from 1886 to 1903, in the same manner as if he had remained in the service continuously from the date of his appointment on September 13, 1877. The said Kenneth McAlpine was, on July 21, 1903, discharged from the naval service with one year's pay for the alleged reason that he was morally disqualified for promotion, though he was declared to be mentally, professionally, and physically qualified for such promotion. The case was inquired into by the Committee on Naval Affairs during the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

From the evidence adduced it was the opinion of the committee that an injustice had been done this officer, and upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, the commmittee reported with favorable recommendation a bill restoring Lieut. Kenneth McAlpine to service in the United States Navy. On March 3, 1905, Congress enacted this bill into a law and Lieutenant McAlpine was restored to duty in the United States Navy to rank at the head of the list of lieutenants.

From further investigation under the pending bill (H. R. 12967) it is apparent that the dismissal of this officer from the United States Navy was a punishment grossly in excess of the offense alleged, and that being out of the service between the time of his dismissal and his reinstatement by act of Congress this officer's punishment was in excess of the requirements for the good of the service.

The committee therefore believes that the restoration of the rank and numbers to this officer, which were lost to him by his dismissal from the service, is an act of justice, and is due him, in view of his record previous to the offense for which he was removed and since his restoration by act of Congress.

Mr. MANN (interrupting). That is all I desire to have read. I do not want to detain the committee, in view of the necessary absence from the House of the gentleman who introduced the bill, who is now before the Ways and Means Committee with some of his constituents. This is the second bill proposed in the interest of this gentleman. Congress passed one bill in 1905, giving him probably either all that he asked for or else all that the Naval Committee and Congress were willing to give him. There is one other case that is pending on one of the calendars, I believe, where they are asking for the third bill in behalf of one gentleman or his family. It seems to me, as a rule at least, that where one of these officers gets back into the navy by the aid of Congress, he ought to be willing to modestly wait, and not come in here before the ink is dry on the paper and ask for additional help.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS J. MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13319) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas J. Miller.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into and ascertain the loss and damage sustained by Thomas J. Miller by the seizure and sinking of his ferryboat on the Columbia River by the armed forces of the United States, for the purpose of preventing the same being used by the hostile Indians during the late Bannock war in the Territory of Washington, in or about the month of July, 1878; and the sum of $500, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to adjust and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of the said Thomas J. Miller the amount of said loss and damage as allowed under the authority of this act.

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

After the word "damage," in line 16, insert a comma and the words "not to exceed $500," so as to read: "not to exceed $500, as allowed under the authority of this act."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the amendments to this bill be adopted and it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WALTER W. KEEFE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8733) for the relief of Walter W. Keefe.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $427.75 to Walter W. Keefe, late civil plumber in the Quartermaster's Department at Fort Egbert, Alaska, for property destroyed by fire at Arlington dock, Seattle, Wash., on May 6, 1906.

Mr. MILLER. I move the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY SWIFT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2952) for the relief of Chaplain Henry Swift, Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. Army.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,231.98, said sum to be a payment in full for all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the wreck of the U. S. transport Morgan City in the Inland Sea of Japan on or about September 1, 1899.

The following amendment was recommended by the committee:

At the end of the bill insert the following:

"Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall require a schedule and affidavit from him, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of War."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DEPOSIT SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, MOBILE, ALA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3760) for the relief of the creditors of the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, Ala.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, a body corporate under the laws of Alabama, be, and it is hereby, relieved of all liability for the tax of 10 per cent on the amount of its own notes used for circulation and paid out by it previous to the 3d day of March, 1875, under the provisions of section 6, acts of March 3, 1865, and July 13, 1866, and of section 3412 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal receiver of the Deposit Savings Association the sum of $7,394.73, this sum being the amount of money heretofore made and collected by the United States of and from the property of said association on account of the liability of said association for said 10 per cent tax.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay or refund to the legal receiver of the said Deposit Savings Association the sum of $5,100, that being the purchase money of certain real property situate in the port of Mobile, which was, on August 20, 1874, as the property of said association and on account of its liability to said tax of 10 per cent, sold at public outcry, and afterwards by deed conveyed to the use of the United States, and subsequently, to wit, on the 12th day of September, A. D. 1881, sold by the United States for the said sum of $5,100, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the said legal receiver of said association the sum of $1,857.77, which sum was collected by the United States as rent for said property from 1875 to 1881, inclusive.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, this is the unanimous report of the Committee on Claims, and I move it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. This bill, Mr. Chairman, is without a precedent. There certainly ought to be some one on the Committee on Claims who knows enough about it to explain it.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], who made the report.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR], and has been favorably reported more than once. It was the unanimous report of the Committee on Claims of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and also the unanimous report of the committee of the Sixtieth Congress. It grew out of the issuance of some certificates of deposit or outstanding vouchers on the part of this institution amounting to about $20,000. Before these certificates were issued and put into circulation the question was submitted to the authorities of the United States Government. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in a letter addressed to the assessor at Mobile, decided the association was not subject to the tax. The same question was again submitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and a similar decision rendered. These two letters are appended to this report as Exhibits A and B, and will speak for themselves.

The question was for a third time decided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the same way, which letter is also appended to this report, marked "Exhibit C."

Acting upon these repeated decisions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the association paid out its notes as certificates of deposit, as before stated. But the Attorney-General of the United States, in reply to a question, "Can a state bank pay out its own notes without paying the tax of 10 per cent imposed by section 6, act of March 3, 1865?" submitted to him for his opinion by the Secretary of the Treasury, answered the question on the 14th day of August, 1872, in the negative. Again, on the 23d day of February, 1874, in reply to the question—

Whether the phrase, "state banking associations," used in said section, should be taken to refer exclusively to associations organized under what are known as "state banking laws," or whether it includes an ordinary business partnership formed between two or more individuals for the purpose of doing a banking business, or a railroad company issuing scrip in the form of currency—

submitted to him for his opinion by the Secretary of the Treasury, answered that said section comprehends not only associations organized under state banking laws, but associations or partnerships formed by private agreement for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking. Also, that it may be taken to include a railroad company issuing scrip in the form of currency, where the issue by the company possesses the essential characteristics of a banking operation.

The Treasury Department followed the opinion of the Attorney-General, and in the assessment list of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for November, 1873, the Deposit Savings Association of Mobile was assessed at $40,000, being an assessment of 10 per cent of the amount of such certificates of said association, which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue assumed had been paid out by said association between the 11th of October, 1873, and the 30th of November, 1873.

The collector of internal revenue at Mobile issued his warrant to seize the assets of said association for the payment of this assessment, and under it seized and sold and conveyed to the United States the bank building of said association in Mobile. He also seized the sum of $7,394.73 in money, the property of the association, which he deposited in the Treasury of the United States. The seizure was made on the 29th day of June, 1874. The deed under which the land was conveyed to the United States is dated August 25, 1875. The said land and buildings were sold afterwards by the United States for the sum of $5,100, and title made thereto on the 12th day of September, 1881.

It was subsequently referred to the commissioner again, and he says, "The case would seem to be one, therefore, in which equitable relief might be given if Congress is so disposed."

So we have the opinion rendered previous to the issuance of the certificates of deposit by the internal-revenue collector in three different instances, in which he held that these certificates were not subject to a tax of any kind, and under the decision of the officers of the United States these certificates of deposit were issued, and but for the decision of the proper authority of the United States Government they would not have been issued. Subsequent to that time, and acting upon the good faith of these decisions, they were issued, and afterwards it was held that they were taxable and the property was sold. They simply asked for the refund of the money of the proceeds of this property taken from them pursuant to these opinions, which were contrary to what was afterwards thought to be the law. Subsequently, as I say, it was again submitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and he decided that it was a question for Congress.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Were these deposits something like those clearing-house certificates issued in New York a year ago, that the gentlemen on that side of the House were insisting ought to pay this 10 per cent tax?

Mr. CANDLER. Well, I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of the issuance of the clearing-house certificates of New York to give the gentleman the information he desires, and I do not think that matter is involved here.

Mr. MANN. I would like to get some gentleman over there who is familiar with it. I have heard a number of gentlemen on that side of the House insisting that the administration ought to be condemned in every way because it did not require the 10 per cent tax to be paid on the clearing-house certificates. What is the difference between those and the gentleman's claim?

Mr. CANDLER. There may be none at all, so far as that is concerned, but the Attorney-General of the United States held in an opinion that the clearing-house certificates were not subject to tax.

Mr. MANN. Then I take it that the gentlemen on that side who vote for the claim with the gentleman vote with him for the claim and against him on principle, and that it is a question of dollars and cents and following the flag.

Mr. CANDLER. Which remark is accepted as a matter of pleasantry, in which spirit I am sure the gentleman makes it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

COMPAÑÍA DE LOS FERROCARRILES DE PUERTO RICO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15681) for the relief of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, given to the Court of Claims (notwithstanding any statutory bar of limitations) over the claims of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico, with power to find the facts and to enter judgment against the United States for the reasonable value of the services performed by said company in the island of Porto Rico for transporting the municipal police and guardia civille between the 12th day of August, 1898, and the 31st day of August, 1902, and for the difference between the amount allowed for transporting the troops, munitions of war, supplies, and the like and the reasonable value of said services for the same period, together with the expense of repair and maintenance of telegraph lines of the Signal Corps, all of said services having been performed during the military occupation of said island.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, given to the Court of Claims (notwithstanding any statutory bar of limitation) over the claims, legal or equitable, of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico, with power to hear and determine the same, finding the facts, and render judgment against the United States, upon any liability of the United States, if such liability be found, for alleged services performed by said company in the island of Porto Rico in transporting the municipal police and guardia civille between the 12th day of August, 1898, and the 31st day of August, 1902, and in transporting the troops, munitions of war, supplies, and the like, and for alleged expense of repair and maintenance of telegraph lines of the Signal Corps, all of said services having been performed during the military occupation of said island."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

L. H. LEWIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10986) for the relief of L. H. Lewis.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to L. H. Lewis, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $33.65, amount due him for expenses incurred in excess of his traveling allowance as deputy collecter of internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

A. A. LEWIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10987) for the relief of A. A. Lewis.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to A. A. Lewis, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $128.02, amount due him for expenses incurred in excess of his traveling allowance as deputy collector of internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FREDERICK DAUBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17344) for the relief of Frederick Daubert.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to pay to Frederick Daubert $596.31, out of the moneys paid by said Daubert under cash entry No. 195, made at the El Reno (Okla.) land office, and to deposit in the Treasury of the United States on account of sales of public lands the sum of $85.19, being the balance paid by said Daubert under said entry.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like for the chairman of the committee to give an explanation of this bill.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I can explain. Under the act of Congress of May 2, 1890, settlers upon these lands in Oklahoma were permitted to enter them for town-site purposes upon the payment of $10 per acre. Mr. Daubert, named in this bill, entered a tract of land and paid $10 per acre. They afterwards decided not to use it for a town site, and he went on and improved it as under a homestead entry, for which he would have paid $1.25 per acre, but he had already paid in at the rate of $10 per acre, and he now seeks to get back the difference, and the only way to get it back is by an act of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

WOODWARD CARRIAGE COMPANY, SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5826) to pay the Woodward Carriage Company, of San Antonio, Tex., for the loss of a horse while being used by the Department of Agriculture.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Woodward Carriage Company, of San Antonio, Tex., the sum of $100 for a horse that died while in use by an employee of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill may not be an illustration of the laxity of the committees, but it draws another moral lesson which I desire to call to the attention of the House. I do not remember in my service in the House in any other bill where Congress was called upon to pay for the loss of a horse which had been turned over for the use of an official of any other department of the Government, and it seems to me somewhat peculiar that that branch of the Government especially devoted to the proper care of horses should send in to Congress a request for payment for a horse killed through the inefficiency and lack of knowledge of the man who fed the horse. The report says:

The veterinarian who was immediately called said that the death of the animal was caused by improper feeding while employed by the agent of the Department of Agriculture.

[Laughter.]

The committee, in addition to recommending the payment of the money, ought to require all officials of the Department of Agriculture when they hire a livery horse to carry with them some of the numerous bulletins from the Department of Agriculture telling how to properly feed a horse. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will introduce a bill of that sort we will try to accommodate him by making a favorable report upon it. I now move that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JABEZ BURCHARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7843) for the relief of Jabez Burchard.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill S. 3125 be substituted for the House bill. I ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill, which has already passed the Senate in place of the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to substitute an identical Senate bill for the one on the House Calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. And that the House bill be reported back to lie on the table?

Mr. BATES. Yes; I was going to put that motion later, and I may as well make the motion now. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the House bill lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer, United States Navy (retired), from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent list of retired officers under section 1588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to take effect from the date of his retirement.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill for the relief of Jabez Burchard, introduced by Mr. BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania, recommended by the unanimous report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I am designated, as a member of the subcommittee on private bills of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to report the bill. Jabez Burchard was a third assistant engineer in the United States Navy, and this bill seeks to give him the advantages, having been disabled by reason of duty in the service, of three-fourths instead of one-half pay. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation, and a similar House bill was ordered to lie on the table.

SALARY OF UNITED STATES JUDGE, PORTO RICO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2210) to increase the salary of the United States district judge for Porto Rico.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the salary of the United States district judge for Porto Rico shall, from and after the 1st day of July, 1908, be $6,000 per annum.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that bill, although on the Private Calendar, belongs on the Union Calendar. It is not a private bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair). Does anybody wish to be heard in opposition to the point of order?

Mr. MILLER. Not at all. I am not interested in this matter. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is not here, and he is the author of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

GEORGE W. YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 534) to reimburse George W. Young, postmaster at Wanship, Utah, for the loss of postage stamps.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the reimbursement of George W. Young, postmaster at Wanship, in the State of Utah, for postage stamps stolen from a safe without fault on his part, $163.87.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know but the bill ought to be passed, but I think the gentleman ought to show very briefly that there are special reasons for this, because the reading of this bill, if the law, would cause postmasters to think, or other people to think, that the Government made no provision for cases of this kind where stamps are stolen. They endeavor to make out, and probably do make out, a case, not without fault on the postmaster's part, as far as the regulations are concerned.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, there is not anything in this case that is different from any other of this class of cases. It is a case of a fourth-class postmaster who was taking the same care of the funds of the Government of the United States as he was of his own property, and it would have made no difference whatever where the money had been at this time. It would have been stolen anyhow. He asked to be relieved by the Post-Office Department, and the Post-Office Department declined to relieve him.

The Postmaster-General says he knows no reason why this should become a law. We think where the postmaster of a fourth-class office, without any salary, and no allowance scarcely, where he has taken honest care of the postage stamps of the United States Government and loses them, ought not be required to stand the loss. We have reported a number of bills of this character, and they have become law.

Mr. MANN. I said that I thought probably the bill ought to pass, but it ought not to leave the inference that there is nothing exceptional in the case from the ordinary case, because the Government makes provision without acts of Congress for paying, if the man had complied literally with all of the postal regulations.

Mr. STAFFORD. I noticed, reading from the letter of the then Postmaster-General, Mr. Cortelyou, that the department considered he had been derelict in ordinary care in taking charge of these postage stamps, because the safe from which the stamps had been pilfered by robbers had been previously broken into and had never been repaired. One of the regulations of the department, so far as the care of postage stamps is concerned, requires postmasters to keep postage stamps in their personal custody or else exercise reasonable care for their preservation, and here we find that the postmaster did not take the reasonable care that the department thought should be exercised by postmasters of securities of this high order.

Mr. MILLER. The evidence in this case showed to the committee conclusively that the postmaster had taken proper and ordinary care. He had had the safe repaired. It did not work very well after it was repaired, probably not as well as it had before, but he had taken every precaution he possibly could, and, notwithstanding his repairing of the safe as it was repaired, it had been opened.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman takes issue with the then Postmaster-General, who stated that the safe had not been repaired, for in his letter to Senator SMOOT, of date January 16, 1907, he makes the explicit statement that the safe had not been repaired——

Mr. MILLER. I call the attention of the gentleman——

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). And afforded no protection whatever to its contents.

Mr. MILLER. I call the attention of the gentleman to the statement of the postmaster himself, which follows that statement, which says that it had been repaired.

Mr. STAFFORD. But not under oath, and a statement which postmasters may be willing to make when there is a money claim involved.

Mr. MILLER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that we took the statement of the postmaster, believing it was true, because he was reported to us as a man of the very highest character, not only by the Senator from his State, who was interested in the matter, but also by the Member of the House from that district, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL]. We took their statements as to his character and his standing.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the Post-Office Department—if Mr. Cortelyou's statement is to count for anything—made an investigation and ascertained that he had not taken reasonable care, but had negligently left the stamps in a safe that had previously been blown open and which had not been repaired, and therefore in an unsafe place.

Mr. WALDO. The rule in regard to these small post-offices is, if they have a safe, it must be locked; if they have not a safe, but only have a drawer without any lock, they may keep the stamps in the drawer without any lock, if that is where their own money is kept. It is merely technical.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to challenge the statement that the regulations will relieve them of the responsibility for the funds of the Post-Office Department if they deposit them in a drawer and leave it unlocked.

Mr. WALDO. It is so; if that is where he keeps his own money.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, no reasonable man does that with his own money.

Mr. WALDO. Yes; they do.

Mr. STAFFORD. They do not leave it unprotected.

Mr. MURDOCK. Do you contend that the average postmaster has a safe?

Mr. STAFFORD. The postmaster, according to the regulations, has to care for the funds, and generally takes the stamps home and keeps them in his personal possession.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, we have already taken enough time to pay this claim.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the claim ought to be paid. I served once under the Post-Office Department myself. I know what the regulations are and know how ridiculous their enforcement often is. When I was postmaster I often had a thousand to two thousand dollars in my possession as a consequence of international business. There was no national depository in my own town. We had a safe connected with my father's office, in which he put papers, and he said that he did not wish to invite burglars into his safe [laughter] and would not permit me to deposit the funds of the post-office there. So I was compelled to take the money to the bank which was next door and had to go there and get it. After a while the regular inspector would come around. The first thing he would do would be to count the cash. So he would go to the cash drawer, and I would walk to the bank and bring the money in. In the course of a few weeks I received notice from the Post-Office Department informing me that I was violating the regulations of the department in not carrying the money around in my jeans, and warning me that a continued violation of the regulations would warrant my dismissal. Nothing more ridiculous has ever occurred to me in my life than the measures which the Government requires a postmaster to take for the protection of the money, and which will require him to keep it in a worse and less safe way possibly.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LAWSON M. FULLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5461), for the relief of Lawson M. Fuller, major, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to reimburse Maj. Lawson M. Fuller, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army, for loss incurred by him of his personal effects during their transportation on board the United States chartered transport Morgan City to the Philippine Islands, whither he had been ordered to join his station, there shall be paid to him, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to the loss so sustained by him: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall require a schedule and affidavit from him, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the relief granted by the provisions of this act shall be in full satisfaction of any and all claims whatever against the United States on account of this loss.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ABRAHAM JONES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8924) for the relief of the heirs of Abraham Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Abraham Jones, deceased, late of Union County, Miss., the sum of $54.54, being the balance due said Abraham Jones for carrying the mails under contract with the United States Government on route No. 7480, between Oxford, Miss., and Rockford, Miss., from January 1, 1861, to March 31, 1861.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, as there are a number of these bills that have been reported in the last few years. How much will the claimant probably get out of it if the claim is allowed, and how much will the Washington attorneys, who worked up the claim, get? Do you suppose the claimant will get any of this $54?

Mr. MILLER. So far as the committee knows, there is no attorney connected with the case whatever. The amount is $54, and I assume it will go to the claimant.

Mr. CANDLER. I can state to the gentleman from Illinois that no attorney represents this claim. My colleague from the second district [Mr. SPIGHT] introduced the bill, presented the affidavits, and is the only representative of the claim.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ALICE M. STAFFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1729) for the relief of Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford, of the Fifteenth Infantry, U. S. Army, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $749.92, the same being the amount of money necessarily advanced and paid by him out of his own personal funds while first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster, Fifteenth Infantry, post quartermaster and commissary at Fort Wingate, N. Mex., in the years 1879 and 1880, in order that the troops in said command might have fresh beef and necessary food during the fourteen months' drought in which no rain fell in the region of said fort, and during which time the beef presented for issue by the beef contractor was of such poor quality as to be unfit for food for said command.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. I desire to make a statement with reference to this case. This is a case that was considered——

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman talking on his motion? The motion is not in order until we dispose of general debate.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement in reference to the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation, and the gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. MILLER. This bill was considered very fully in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union formerly. The bill was reported to the House. It passed the House and the Senate, and then it went to the President and was by the President of the United States vetoed, for the reason that the amount of the bill was larger than the records of the War Department showed that the man was entitled to.

In other words, the records in the department showed that he was entitled to about $749, as I remember it now, while the bill provided for the payment of about $1,100 or $1,200. The President vetoed it distinctly for the reason, as he stated in his veto message, that the amount was larger than the records showed the officer was entitled to. The bill was reintroduced for the purpose of correcting the error, and it is now reported by the committee for the amount which the records of the War Department show he was entitled to. There was no question whatever about the right of the man to recover in the mind of any member of the committee who carefully considered this matter, and I trust that the Committee of the Whole will lay it aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL L. BARNHART.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 17026) for the relief of Samuel L. Barnhart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to refund to Samuel L. Barnhart, of St. Lawrence County, N. Y., the sum of $639.48, and pay said amount to him out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being for duties wrongfully and illegally collected from said Barnhart.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 8 strike out the words "wrongfully and illegally," and at the end of the bill add the words "on account of an error in billing same from Cornwall, Ontario."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Especially in view of the absence of members of the Committee on Ways and Means, there certainly ought to be an explanation of this bill.

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY], who introduced the bill.

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Chairman, this bill is for the return by the Treasury Department to Mr. Barnhart of the sum of about $650 for certain duties which he paid under the following circumstances: Mr. Barnhart was the owner of a cheese factory located at Barnharts Island, in the river St. Lawrence, which is contiguous to Canadian territory, but within the limits of the United States. He shipped the cheese from Barnharts Island via Cornwall, which is the port of entry nearest the island, to consignees in Boston. He made application to the United States consul at Cornwall for an invoice which would carry the goods through in bond to Boston, as provided by our laws, but the consul gave him the wrong invoice, which called for the payment of duties at Boston instead of allowing them to go free from one point in the United States to another point in the United States, as they were entitled to. The cheese having arrived at St. Albans, the first American port of entry on its road to Boston, a demand was made for the payment of the customs duties, which were paid unknown to Mr. Barnhart. Clearly this collection by the Government of the United States was wholly illegal and without warrant of any law. Clearly it should be refunded, because it was a payment made where no law required it. This bill is to reimburse Mr. Barnhart for the amount of duty paid.

Mr. KEIFER. Does not the statute give a person who pays duty under such circumstances the right to go into court and determine the matter?

Mr. MALBY. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that there is no such law. There is a provision that if the shipper makes a claim within ten days after the date of shipment, the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to reimburse him. In this case there was no knowledge on the part of the shipper that anybody had paid the amount until after the ten days expired.

Mr. MILLER. There was no opportunity whatever to give the notice.

Mr. MALBY. There was no opportunity whatever to give the notice, because the duty had been paid more than ten days prior thereto without notice. The consignee paid it at the first American port, St. Albans.

Mr. KEIFER. There certainly is a statute which allows a person who makes an illegal payment of that kind to do it under protest and go into court and have the matter adjusted.

Mr. MALBY. That is just the difficulty. We did not have notice that our cheese was held up for the payment of duties. You have a right to ship goods through in bond from one port in the United States to another port of the United States, even though they go through foreign territory on the way. That is precisely what we undertook to do, but the difficulty was that when we arrived at the first port of entry, owing to the fact that the consul at Cornwall had given a wrong invoice, being a mistake of the government official, the consignee was obliged to pay the duty or our cheese would have been confiscated. No notice was given to us of the payment until after the ten days elapsed. Hence, we are obliged to come here for relief, because the Secretary of the Treasury holds that he has no warrant of law to make the repayment.

Mr. KEIFER. Was an application made to the Treasury Department to adjust it?

Mr. MALBY. There was, and the Secretary affirmed what I have said.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman a little mislead us by saying that "We paid the duties?" Is it not the fact that the consignee paid the duties without the knowledge of the consignor until after the time for making application had passed?

Mr. MALBY. That is true. I did not intend to mislead you; I mean to say that the consignee paid the duties out of the moneys which he owed us.

Mr. MANN. I did not mean to intimate that the gentleman intentionally misled us.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ANNIE WARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 558) to authorize a patent to be issued to Annie Ward, formerly Annie Brown, for certain lands therein described.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the fact that the author of the bill is not present, and ask that it be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOHN WAGNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4119) to pay John Wagner, of Campbell Hall, N. Y., for carrying the mails.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to John Wagner, of Campbell Hall, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $152.53, for carrying the United States mails to the Wallkill Valley Railway and to the post-office at Campbell Hall, N. Y., from November 3, 1897, to January 7, 1901.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HILARY WILLIAMS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10416) to correct the naval record of Lieut. Hilary Williams, U. S. Navy.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the naval record of Lieut. Hilary Williams, U. S. Navy, by placing his name on the official Navy Register of the Navy Department next after that of Lieut. Charles T. Owens, U. S. Navy, and to receive rank of lieutenant, United States Navy, from January 1, 1904.

Mr. MANN. Had not this bill better be passed without prejudice?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, unless gentlemen have some questions to ask, I move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. The bill is recommended by the department, and its purpose is to restore the officer to the place he lost on the Register because, at the time he lost it, the Navy Department did not have the regulation that it now has. The officer was on duty and did not have time or opportunity to prepare for examination, and when the examination time was reached he was unprepared, failed, and lost 47 numbers. The Committee on Naval Affairs at first recommended that he should lose but 10 numbers. The Navy Department sent us the second communication. It desired that he should not be demoted at all, but that he should be restored to the place on the Register to which he originally belonged. He has passed a good examination since. If this examination had occurred a little later he would not have lost a single number. He would have had a chance for a second examination and would undoubtedly have passed. This, according to a naval regulation passed shortly after his failure. In view of the recommendation of the department and the extenuating circumstances, we concluded he should have his original place on the Register, and I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the law in regard to the army and navy officers requires that if they fail in examination they shall have the man promoted over them that passes, and they have a year to come up for another examination for promotion to the grade that is open. If that law means anything, it means that those that give the most attention to their duties, that are best qualified as officers, shall be the ones to receive the promotion.

There is a law passed by Congress this last session that provided in the medical department of the army that a man that failed of examination should never be promoted. In other words, Congress expressed itself that a man to receive promotion must show that he is worthy of it by being able to pass the examination each time. I assume that there are at least 50 men in the army who have been set back by waiting a year for examination. I do not believe they ought to go ahead of the men that passed the examination when they failed, and for that reason I hope that the Committee on Naval Affairs will not set a precedent for Congress to set aside the laws of Congress each time by providing that a man shall lose nothing if he fails to pass an examination. Now, if this bill does not do that, what does it do? If this bill passes, you restore him to what he would have had if he had not failed.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; but this man did not have an opportunity to prepare himself for the examination. When the opportunity was given, he did prepare himself and passed successfully, and it for that reason that the department asks that an exception be made in his case. He is a splendid officer, and the department has no desire that he should be demoted 47 numbers.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to know of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] if this bill, which will be to the benefit of the man named, will be to the detriment of anyone.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, it will. The gentleman will note that the officer fell back under the naval regulations 47 numbers, because of his failure. When he finally passed his examination he was still back 47 numbers. If he had not been unfortunate he would have been ahead the 47 numbers, but his failure to pass, I state to my friend, was not chargeable to any neglect on his part. It was because he did not have the chance to prepare, and it is for that reason the department asks that he should be restored to the place on the register the department thinks he ought to have. We are not in favor of promoting men who fail in their examinations because of neglect on their part.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. How long a time elapsed between his first and second examinations?

Mr. BUTLER. I can not tell exactly, but my recollection is that it was a short time.

Mr. MANN. May I inquire of the gentleman who reported the bill how many reports he has made of this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the first report was made in which we recommended that he should be demoted 10 numbers. The department then sent the second letter to the committee and suggested it was not the intention of the department to recommend that he should be demoted a number under the circumstances, and we then made a second report—two reports, I will state to the gentleman, that I remember of.

Mr. MANN. How many numbers does this demote or promote the man?

Mr. BUTLER. If this bill passes he will not be demoted at all.

Mr. MILLER. It restores him.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the department recommends the passage of the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, in answer to my friend; it does in both letters. It says other officers failing were given a second examination; and by Naval Regulations all failing officers are now given a second examination. But this gentleman, Mr. Hilary Williams, was not given a second examination, because at that time there was no rule of the department which would entitle him to it.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that on the other report which the gentleman made, reporting the same bill, he included a letter from the department which he conveniently leaves out of this report——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I did not leave out any statement or report from the department. Everything the department has sent the committee relating thereto is in this report, and I do not "conveniently" leave anything out, because I am not "conveniently" interested in this bill, except as a Member of this House, and I am not here for the purpose of misleading anybody.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman takes offense at anything I said, I beg his pardon; it was not intended as an offense. I see that he does not leave the letter out, even. The letter upon which was based the first report distinctly recommended that the man should not be put back in his original position, but should lose 10 numbers. The second letter provides the same thing. The gentleman says that the department recommends the passage of this bill. I say the department is not in favor of the passage of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am reading the language right before me. The department recommends favorable action on the bill which will put this man back to where he was before, with the loss of 10 numbers.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, at the conclusion of the letter sent to the Naval Affairs Committee on March 16, 1908, a month and six weeks subsequent to its former letter, this language appears:

The intention of the department was to recommend the bill as originally introduced to the favorable consideration of the committee, but that it considered it very desirable that the law as it now stands be changed so that an officer who failed to pass an examination for promotion would lose 10 numbers rather than a year's suspension. Other officers who failed about the same time Lieutenant Williams did were given a second examination, and thus did not lose numbers, and it is to put Lieutenant Williams on the same footing as these other officers that the department favors this bill.

Mr. MANN. That is all very true; but what is the bill the department is talking about? It is talking about the bill about which the department uses this language:

The bill has been amended, as the department understands, so as to reduce the loss of numbers suffered by Lieutenant Williams from 47 to 10. The original bill restored him to his original place on the list.

And the bill recommended by the department is not the original bill restoring him to his original place on the list, but reducing him 10 numbers. If the gentlemen would only read more carefully their own reports——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I state the facts as distinctly as I know how to state them. Furthermore, from a conversation that I had at the department, it is the desire of the department that this man should be put in his proper place, and at the right time I shall move that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I might not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] as to what is in the report—I am just as qualified to read that as he is, and I am sure he has not read it as recently as I have—when he makes a statement as to the desire of the department from a conversation with them, knowing him as I do I am willing to accept his statement. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Thank you.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WARNER BAILEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17640) to authorize the issuance of a patent to the assignees of Warner Bailey for land located in Choctaw County, State of Alabama.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent to the assignees of Warner Bailey conveying all the right, title, and interest of the Government of the United States in and to the following-described land: West half northeast quarter and east half northwest quarter, section 36, township 12 north, range 3 west, lying and situated in Choctaw County, State of Alabama.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That the said patent shall be in full satisfaction of and shall extinguish military bounty-land warrant No. 75743.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

COLON ELOY ALFARO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 157) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Mr. Colon Eloy Alfaro, of Ecuador.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit Mr. Colon Eloy Alfaro, of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said Colon Eloy Alfaro shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction: And provided further, That in the case of the said Colon Eloy Alfaro the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will say this is simply the ordinary resolution that has always been favorably considered by Congress. When any of our sister republics request this the Secretary of State sends it to the War Department and the War Department transmits it to Congress. I therefore move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

S. R. HURLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17276) for the relief of S. R. Hurley.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, before that other bill is laid aside I would like to ask one question of the chairman. Mr. Chairman, I stated as loudly as I could that I would like some information. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a question.

Mr. MILLER. Suppose you let this bill be first read; it is too late now.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not too late. I will stand here until I get the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will wait until the Clerk reports the bill.

Mr. MILLER. I would ask unanimous consent that the gentleman——

Mr. BUTLER. No; I was on my feet asking for recognition.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $615 to S. R. Hurley, of Grundy, Va., for expenses incident to defending an indictment made in Pike County, Ky., and Covington, Ky., against said S. R. Hurley and others for the murder of A. C. Centers while attempting to make an arrest for violation of the internal-revenue laws of the Government.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "or so much thereof as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury was properly incurred."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, before moving to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation I desire to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in order for him to make an inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman from Kansas for according me what I already had the right to have. I was on my feet demanding recognition from the Chair. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] whether or not we are now admitting at West Point students from other countries to learn our arts of war?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to me to answer?

Mr. MILLER. I do.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will say we are, and that the Congress of the United States has never yet refused, especially to the Latin-American republics, these requests, an act of comity that has always been extended to anyone sent from those republics.

Mr. BUTLER. To Japanese and Chinese also?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and——

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to, and the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MILLER. One moment, please.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Before the bill is passed——

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman from Georgia make an objection?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No; but I want to make some inquiry about the bill before it is passed.

Mr. MILLER. I will be glad to answer any question that the gentleman desires to ask.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will pardon me, we can not sometimes hear what the Chair says when he puts the question.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I was on my feet and coming down the aisle.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that without objection the bill would be laid aside.

Mr. MANN. We could not hear what the Chair said.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas will be understood as withdrawing his motion.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I did not catch the reading of the bill. Is this a bill to pay for physical injuries incurred by some one or for expenses incurred in attending to some case?

I am interested in knowing what sort of precedent we are setting here, for there have been some requests made of me to introduce similar bills, and I want to know what the case is.

Mr. MILLER. The claimant in this case was a member of a posse that went out to arrest some men who were engaged in illicit distilling, and during the time they were attempting to make the arrest, and after the officers had been fired upon by the men engaged in that business and one of the officers, I think, killed and another seriously wounded, this gentleman, through his bravery and his courage, rescued the posse that was there to make the arrest. Notwithstanding this, he was afterwards indicted and taken to another State for the purposes of trial, and when the case was called for trial he appeared and was ready for trial. But nobody representing the prosecution was there to appear. The case was continued, and the second time the case was called to trial he was there again with his witnesses. Then the case was dismissed. He comes in and asks that he be reimbursed for the amount actually expended in preparing for the trial of the case. Everybody who has had anything to do in connection with the case recommends favorable action.

Mr. MURDOCK. How much does the bill carry?

Mr. MILLER. Six hundred and fifteen dollars, or so much thereof as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury was properly incurred. It leaves the matter with the Secretary of the Treasury to determine whether he is entitled to that.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. As I understand it, he was indicted for some offense, possibly murder, in some state court?

Mr. MILLER. He was indicted, charged with murder.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. In a state court?

Mr. MILLER. In the federal court.

Mr. MANN. He was indicted in a state court. He belonged in Virginia. They had a fight right across the state line.

Mr. MILLER. The fight was on the state line between Virginia and Kentucky.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am not opposing the bill. I am simply trying to get some information.

Mr. MANN. He was indicted in Kentucky for murder.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. He was called on by the United States officers to aid them in arresting some one for whom they had a warrant?

Mr. MILLER. That is right. He was summoned by the deputy collector in the matter.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas, and to the author of the bill, my friend from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP], that I did not rise for the purpose of opposing the bill. I got an idea it was something else. I had a case which I recently introduced in a similar bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and very much of the same character, and I wanted to make some inquiry about this.

Mr. MILLER. That will be introduced as soon as possible.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It has been introduced and referred to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. MILLER. I renew my motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM RADCLIFFE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13586) for the relief of William Radcliffe.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay William Radcliffe, a British subject, for damages caused by destruction of his fish hatchery and property in Delta, Colo., by a mob in 1901.

Mr. WALDO. In that case, the Senate bill is also on the calendar—No. 995—it having passed the Senate. I therefore move that the Senate bill be substituted in place of the House bill, that the House bill be laid on the table, and that the Senate bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York give the Chair the number of the Senate bill?

Mr. WALDO. The number of the bill is S. 5207. The calendar number is 995.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO] moves the substitution of the bill S. 5207 for the bill H. R. 13586, and that the pending House bill do lie on the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman kindly explain this bill?

Mr. MANN. What is the bill now before the committee?

Mr. WALDO. For the relief of William Radcliffe, Calendar No. 995.

Mr. MURDOCK. You have substituted the Senate bill for the House bill?

Mr. WALDO. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the Senate bill carry $25,000? Will the gentleman explain what the destruction of this fish hatchery was?

Mr. WALDO. William Radcliffe was an English citizen who made an arrangement with the State of Colorado to establish a fish hatchery in a town, the name of which I have forgotten, and in which enterprise he had invested nearly a hundred thousand dollars, if I recollect.

He made a claim for $65,000 to our State Department through the British minister. It came from the foreign office of Great Britain. An arrangement was made between Secretary Hay and the British minister, that Mr. Radcliffe be paid $25,000 in full settlement of his claim. To this settlement Mr. Radcliffe agreed. That is the amount this bill proposes shall be paid him. It is recommended by Secretary Hay, Secretary Root, and the President that this claim be paid and settled in full at $25,000, and it ought to have been paid before.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE W. FLEMING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6032) to pay to the administratrix of the estate of George W. Fleming for services rendered as letter-box inspector from March 29, 1902, to June 13, 1903.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Zora S. Fleming, or to her successor, administratrix of the estate of George W. Fleming, deceased, the sum of $1,073.35, for services rendered by said George W. Fleming as letter-box inspector at Adrian, Mich., from March 29, 1902, to June 13, 1903.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bills to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SHERMAN having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills, and had directed him to report the same back, some with amendments, some without amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills do pass. The committee had also directed him to report the bills H. R. 7843, H. R. 1199, and H. R. 13586 to the House with the recommendation that they do lie on the table; and also that the bill S. 2210 be referred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. PRINCE. A parliamentary inquiry. I think there is also a House joint resolution that has not been reported, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was given by the gentleman's report in the various bills reported and is enumerated in the memorandum which the Chairman handed to the Clerk.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as having been ordered upon all bills and amendments thereto to their final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on all the bills and joint resolution to their passage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

Bills of the House of the following titles, without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time and passed:

A bill (H. R. 14343) to correct the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell;

A bill (H. R. 10606) for the relief of Robert S. Dame;

A bill (H. R. 16015) for the relief of Lafayette L. McKnight;

A bill (H. R. 4737) to correct the military record of John B. Ford;

A bill (H. R. 7963) for the relief of Patrick Conlin;

A bill (H. R. 7807) to place John Crowley on the retired list of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 16927) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Kenneth McAlpine;

A bill (H. R. 3760) for the relief of the creditors of the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, Ala.;

A bill (H. R. 10987) for the relief of A. A. Lewis;
A bill (H. R. 5826) to pay the Woodward Carriage Company, of San Antonio, Tex., for the loss of a horse while being used by the Department of Agriculture;
A bill (H. R. 5461) for the relief of Lawson M. Fuller, major, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army;
A bill (H. R. 8924) for the relief of the heirs of Abraham Jones;
A bill (H. R. 4119) to pay John Wagner, of Campbell Hall, N. Y., for carrying the mails;
A bill (H. R. 10416) to correct the naval record of Lieut. Hilary Williams, U. S. Navy;
A bill (H. R. 6032) to pay the administratrix of the estate of George W. Fleming for services rendered as letter-box inspector from March 29, 1902, to June 13, 1903:
A bill (H. R. 8733) for the relief of Walter W. Keefe;
A bill (H. R. 10986) for the relief of L. H. Lewis; and
A bill (H. R. 17344) for the relief of Frederick Daubert.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED.

A House joint resolution of the following title, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed:
Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 157) authorizing the Secretary of war to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, Mr. Colon Eloy Alfaro, of Ecuador.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED WITH AMENDMENTS.

On the following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendment, the amendments were agreed to, and the bills as amended severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time and passed:
A bill (H. R. 12760) to correct the military record of Isaac N. Fordyce;
A bill (H. R. 7006) to correct the military record of George W. Hedrick;
A bill (H. R. 11460) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Houck;
A bill (H. R. 7071) for the relief of James McKenzie;
A bill (H. R. 14974) for the relief of Charles A. Bess;
A bill (H. R. 8545) for the relief of Jackson Pryor;
A bill (H. R. 8615) to correct the naval record of Edward T. Lincoln;
A bill (H. R. 4931) to correct the military record of Corwin M. Holt;
A bill (H. R. 1086) to correct military record of Pleasant Thomas, late of Company B, East Tennessee National Guards;
A bill (H. R. 1081) to pay Thomas P. Morgan, jr., amount found due him by Court of Claims;
A bill (H. R. 13319) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas J. Miller;
A bill (H. R. 2952) for the relief of Chaplain Henry Swift, Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. Army;
A bill (H. R. 15681) for the relief of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico;
A bill (H. R. 17026) for the relief of Samuel L. Barnhart;
A bill (H. R. 17640) to authorize the issuance of a patent to the assignees of Warner Bailey for land located in Choctaw County, State of Alabama; and A bill (H. R. 17276) for the relief of S. R. Hurley.

SENATE BILLS PASSED WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

The following Senate bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House, without amendment, were severally considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:
S. 4749. An act for the relief of Dewitt Eastman;
S. 3388. An act to correct the military record of William A. Hinsch;
S. 1162. An act to correct the naval record of Alfred Burgess;
S. 5263. An act for the relief of William Parker Sedgwick;
S. 3125. An act for the relief of Jabez Burchard:
S. 534. An act to reimburse George W. Young, postmaster at Wanship, Utah, for loss of postage stamps;
S. 1729. An act for the relief of Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford; and
S. 5207. An act for the relief of William Radcliffe.

BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

The following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that they lay on the table, were ordered to lie on the table:
A bill (H. R. 1199) for the relief of William Parker Sedgwick;
A bill (H. R. 7843) for the relief of Jabez Burchard; and
A bill (H. R. 13586) for the relief of William Radcliffe.

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit the following privileged report and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, submits the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 208) providing for expenses of the House Office Building.

Resolved, etc., That to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for maintenance, including heating, lighting, and ventilation, miscellaneous items, and for all necessary services for the House of Representatives Office Building for the fiscal year 1909, the sum of $28,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit and have read a letter from the Superintendent of the Capitol, and approved by the commission, which explains the necessity for the appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING—MAINTENANCE.

OFFICE BUILDING HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1908.

The Hons. J. G. CANNON, W. P. HEPBURN, and JOHN J. FITZGERALD, Commission of the House of Representatives to Supervise the Construction of an Office Building Therefor.

GENTLEMEN: An immediate appropriation will be required for the maintenance of the House Office Building for the present session of Congress, at the rate of $3,650 per month, and including the month of December. I would suggest that this appropriation be made to cover the time between December 1, 1908, and June 30, 1909, seven months, amounting to $25,550. The appropriation should be so worded as to enable us to pay for the services of employees from the 1st of December, this being really in the nature of a deficiency.

I will state to the commission that when this question of maintenance came up last year I stated to the Committee on Appropriations that I would not ask for additional money to the appropriation already made, because I believed that the funds would last until the 1st of December, 1909. This has been the case.

I would further request that an additional sum of $2,500 be added to the above for the purchase of general supplies for the building, such as towels, laundry work, soap, and general cleaning materials. This sum is based upon the general average of running costs of last session.

Very respectfully,

ELLIOTT WOODS,
Superintendent United States Capitol Building and Grounds.

Approved:
J. G. CANNON, Chairman.
W. P. HEPBURN.
JOHN J. FITZGERALD.

Estimates for maintenance, House Office Building.

	Per day.	Per month.	Cost per month.
1 custodian	$4.00		$125.00
14 elevator conductors		$100.00	1,400.00
1 housekeeper (30 days)	2.00		60.00
6 laborers	2.00		50.00
1 plumber	3.50		95.00
1 dynamo tender	2.50		75.00
2 office messengers		50.00	100.00
1 carpenter	4.00		104.00
40 charwomen		20.00	800.00
1 laborer in charge of office (30 days)	2.00		60.00
3 firemen (30 days)	2.00		180.00
9 laborers and women for day service	1.50		351.00
Total			3,650.00

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

AFFAIRS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 599), which was read and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The rapid increase of population in the National Capital within recent years has greatly altered social conditions, necessitating changes in the machinery of its administration. Greater efficiency and a better provision for the protection of both the industrial and dependent classes are required.

Recognizing these needs, I have had a special report made to me on the affairs of the District of Columbia which I transmit herewith. I cordially approve the recommendations in the report for: the substitution of a single head or Governor in place of three Commissioners; the establishment of District or Municipal Departments in place of the existing Bureaus; and the creation of a new department to be known as that of Housing and Labor. I ask your careful consideration of the entire report; Mr. Reynolds has rendered a great and disinterested service for which our heartiest thanks are due him.

A single executive head would increase efficiency, determine responsibility and eliminate delays and uncertainties inevitable under the present system; Municipal Departments headed by Commissioners to be appointed by the Governor would yield the same advantage.

In the proposed scheme of reorganization, the Department of Education should be coordinated with other City Departments.

I especially urge that the proposed Department of Housing and Labor be established. Poverty, disease and crime are largely due to defects of social conditions and surroundings. The need of improved sanitary inspection of dwellings, rear alleys and small shacks (such as unhappily still exist in Washington) and of stores, work shops and factories should not be left to subordinate Bureau Chiefs, but should be brought under the direct control of a competent head of the above named Department.

An equally important public responsibility is the protection of the independent industrial class which neither desires nor accepts charity, but whose members have often been led to misfortune and even crime through agencies licensed by the state, but defectively and inadequately supervised. Notable among these are pawn-shops, loan and industrial insurances companies and employment agencies. The supervision of these agencies is at present limited to the police. They should be under the direction of officials qualified to advance their efficiency and economic service to the public.

The above named changes would vastly improve the efficiency of the District Government, and would afford protection to its industrial and dependent classes which is imperatively needed.

I also transmit for the consideration of the Congress reports of the Committee on Building of Model Houses which was appointed in accordance with the recommendation of Mr. Reynolds.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 17, 1908.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution and bill:

H. J. Res. 206. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1908, on the 19th day of said month; and

H. R. 22274. An act to authorize the St. Paul Bridge and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT-ELECT.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a concurrent resolution adopted by the Senate on the 8th day of December, 1908, providing for the appointment of an inauguration committee, and to consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee, consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. MILLER (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of the inside water route between Savannah, Ga., and Fernandina, Fla.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

A letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting, with a copy of a communication from the United States attorney for the middle district of Alabama, certain recommendations relating to the proposed relief of George W. Black, J. R. Wilson, and W. M. Newell—to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to recompense the Indian proprietors for certain lands transferred to the States of North and South Dakota for school purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a list of congressional cases dismissed during the term 1907–8 for lack of proof of loyalty to the United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a notice of the dismissal of the case of David R. Cook against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting an estimate of appropriation for inspectors of child labor—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for new dormitory at Osage Indian School, Oklahoma—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting an estimate of appropriation for house, site, and furniture for engine company—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of deficiency appropriation for printing and binding—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21910) granting an increase of pension to Stephen W. Cummins—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 23986) granting an increase of pension to Alexander M. Rainey—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 24063) granting a pension to Howard Farrell—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. OVERSTREET: A bill (H. R. 24473) to codify, revise, and amend the postal laws of the United States—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 24474) for the enrollment in the Five Civilized Tribes of certain persons inadvertently omitted from the rolls—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 24475) to authorize and require the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company to maintain and operate a track connection with the United States navy-yard in the city of Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PETERS (by request): A bill (H. R. 24476) to establish a gold dollar of the value of 50 pence sterling and to provide interchangeable postage stamps with Great Britain—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. BANNON: A bill (H. R. 24477) authorizing the President to appoint and commission, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, certain brigadier-generals to the grade of major-general—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24478) providing for the improvement of the Missouri River at certain points, and making appropriation therefor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24479) granting pensions to the teamsters who served the Government of the United States in the war with Mexico, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 24480) to define the status of certain distilled spirits commonly known as "soakage"—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 24481) to amend an act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the civil war and the war with Mexico—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 24482) to provide for a system of inspection of naval stores entering into interstate and foreign commerce and within the jurisdiction of the United States, and to prevent and prohibit fraudulent practices in and the adulterations of such naval stores—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MALBY: A bill (H. R. 24483) providing for the construction of a revenue cutter for use on the St. Lawrence River and Lake Ontario—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 24484) prescribing a punishment for conveying tools or appliances into a jail or prison to aid the escape of prisoners, or rescuing prisoners therefrom—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: A bill (H. R. 24485) directing the Secretary of War to ascertain the amount of money expended by the Territory of Utah from 1865 to 1868, inclusive, and report the same to Congress for its consideration—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24486) pensioning the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Utah Volunteers employed in the defense of the frontier settlements of the Territory of Utah against Indian depredations during the years from 1865 to 1868, inclusive, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD: A bill (H. R. 24487) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," approved June 26, 1906 (Public, No. 297), so as to enable local printers to publish return requests, advertising, etc., on stamped envelopes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24488) to consolidate the Bureau of Manufactures and the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor into one bureau, to be called the "bureau of foreign and domestic commerce"—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24489) to authorize the investigation and survey of swamp, wet, and overflowed lands in the valleys of the Red, the Sulphur, and the Cypress rivers of Texas, and to devise plans and systems for the drainage of said lands—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 24490) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of site and erection of a post-office building at Elwood, Ind.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SMITH of California: A bill (H. R. 24491) to reimburse the city of Coronado and the Coronado Beach Company for protecting property from the encroachment of the Pacific Ocean—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRADLEY: A bill (H. R. 24492) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate condemned bronze fieldpiece and cannon balls to the county of Orange, State of New York—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 24627) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two condemned brass or bronze Napoleon guns, carriages, and cannon balls to the Grand Army post at Lewistown, Pa.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 24493) granting a pension to John Rittenhouse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24494) granting a pension to Caleb Trees—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AMES: A bill (H. R. 24495) granting an increase of pension to John D. Pederick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 24496) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan Hull—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BANNON: A bill (H. R. 24497) granting an increase of pension to John Dufour—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUMM: A bill (H. R. 24498) granting an increase of pension to Eliza L. Cake—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 24499) granting a pension to Annie Abney—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24500) granting a pension to Sallie Conn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24501) for the relief of the heirs of Leonard Daniel, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CALDER: A bill (H. R. 24502) granting an increase of pension to Matilda Butt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 24503) for the relief of Charles W. Munn—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24504) granting an increase of pension to George M. Zartman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24505) granting an increase of pension to William H. Losh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24506) granting an increase of pension to Allen M. Coville—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALE: A bill (H. R. 24507) for the relief of Frank W. Swanton—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24508) granting an increase of pension to Orsemus Dill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHANEY: A bill (H. R. 24509) granting an increase of pension to Palmer Atkinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24510) granting an increase of pension to Johnson H. Fitzpatrick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COCKRAN: A bill (H. R. 24511) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Bowe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 24512) granting an increase of pension to William J. Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24513) granting an increase of pension to Henry T. Blair—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 24514) granting a pension to James W. Murphey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24515) granting an increase of pension to Silas Haynes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24516) removing the charge of desertion from the name of Alexander C. Rogers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAWSON: A bill (H. R. 24517) granting an increase of pension to Morques D. Lillie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRAPER: A bill (H. R. 24518) granting a pension to Rhoda A. Rogers—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24519) for the relief of Peter J. Van Zandt—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLIS of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24520) granting an increase of pension to Henry Morris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24521) granting an increase of pension to William Wiedenmann—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24522) granting a pension to Charles Sells—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 24523) to remuster James E. Brown—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24524) granting an increase of pension to Catherine E. Fisk—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24525) to remove charge of desertion from military record of George W. Moore, alias George W. More—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FLOYD: A bill (H. R. 24526) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Mattocks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 24527) granting an increase of pension to Gilbert H. Fellows—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24528) granting an increase of pension to Waldron De Clarenze—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24529) granting an increase of pension to George L. Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24530) granting a pension to John Q. Anderson—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORDON: A bill (H. R. 24531) granting a pension to Fred M. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: A bill (H. R. 24532) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Archer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24533) granting an increase of pension to George W. Light—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 24534) granting an increase of pension to John S. Heald—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEPBURN: A bill (H. R. 24535) to authorize the payment of the claim of Morgan Beldon as adjutant of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24536) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Huston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24537) granting an increase of pension to G. S. Jenkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24538) granting an increase of pension to John J. Heisel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUSTON: A bill (H. R. 24539) granting an increase of pension to Burkett F. Starnes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 24540) granting a pension to Lydia A. Hankins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 24541) granting an increase of pension to George W. Barrickman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 24542) granting a pension to Cora C. Cate—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 24543) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Carbino—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24544) granting an increase of pension to William Logan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24545) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin B. Goodrich—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24546) granting an increase of pension to Henry T. Turner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 24547) granting an increase of pension to William H. Elder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24548) granting an increase of pension to Ideral Van Fleet—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIMBALL: A bill (H. R. 24549) granting a pension to George W. Holman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24550) granting an increase of pension to W. W. Alcoke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 24551) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Flower—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24552) granting an increase of pension to Robert Gallagher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNOWLAND: A bill (H. R. 24553) granting an increase of pension to George W. Seeber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24554) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Wiederker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFEAN: A bill (H. R. 24555) granting an increase of pension to William Jennings—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE: A bill (H. R. 24556) for the relief of the heirs of Alson Jackson, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 24557) for the relief of Mary E. Stelling, sole heir at law of A. S. Frietas, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 24558) granting an increase of pension to Reuben P. Forbes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOVERING: A bill (H. R. 24559) granting a pension to S. Augusta West—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24560) granting a pension to Osmond Ames—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24561) granting a pension to Sarah V. Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24562) granting a pension to George B. Gardner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24563) granting an increase of pension to Luther Stephenson, jr.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 24564) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Goodman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24565) granting an increase of pension to Mary Jane Schreyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINNEY: A bill (H. R. 24566) granting a pension to Charlotte Meyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24567) granting an increase of pension to James R. Criswell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 24568) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Wells—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 24569) for the relief of John H. Jackson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24570) for the relief of James B. Brown—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24571) for the relief of the estate of Washington Pryor, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24572) for the relief of the estate of John A. Heard, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24573) for the relief of the estate of Martin Hartman, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24574) for the relief of the estate of George M. Carroll, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OLCOTT: A bill (H. R. 24575) granting a pension to Charlotte Velie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24576) providing for the restoration and retirement of Frederick W. Olcott as a passed assistant surgeon in the navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: A bill (H. R. 24577) granting an increase of pension to Caroline T. Coburn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNE: A bill (H. R. 24578) granting an increase of pension to Stephen F. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24579) granting an increase of pension to George W. Murray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POLLARD: A bill (H. R. 24580) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Pinney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHINOCK: A bill (H. R. 24581) granting a pension to Anna K. Harris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 24582) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Bliss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 24583) granting an increase of pension to William A. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 24584) granting a pension to Robert McCall—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24585) granting a pension to Nathaniel L. Lawrence—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24586) granting an increase of pension to James E. Cook—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24587) granting an increase of pension to James W. Carter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24588) granting an increase of pension to La Salle Corbell Pickett—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 24589) granting an increase of pension to Edward Thompson—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24590) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Compton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24591) granting an increase of pension to Joseph N. Harned—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24592) granting a pension to William B. Thurman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNAPP: A bill (H. R. 24593) granting an increase of pension to William H. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 24594) to correct the record of William Henry Beehler, commodore, U. S. Navy, and to place him on the retired list, United States Navy, with the rank of rear-admiral—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. STERLING: A bill (H. R. 24595) granting a pension to Mary T. Cossitt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24596) granting a pension to Martha J. Drake—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: A bill (H. R. 24597) granting an increase of pension to James Hamilton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VREELAND: A bill (H. R. 24598) granting an increase of pension to James W. Ashton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS: A bill (H. R. 24599) granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Dennen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24600) granting an increase of pension to Roswell C. Ross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24601) granting a pension to Olive H. Lincoln—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 24602) granting a pension to Hannah L. Carson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24603) granting a pension to Paulina L. Klepper—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24604) granting an increase of pension to Philip Styers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24605) granting an increase of pension to John A. Crissman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 24606) to remove charge of desertion against Thomas G. Welch and grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 24607) for the relief of Belson Wiley Owens—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 24608) granting a pension to William A. Knipshield—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24609) granting an increase of pension to James B. Martin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: A bill (H. R. 24610) granting a pension to Charles Brock—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24611) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 24612) granting an increase of pension to John Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GORDON: A bill (H. R. 24613) for the relief of the legal representatives of William H. Miller, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24614) to correct the military record of William H. Seward—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRAFF: A bill (H. R. 24615) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. McDermott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 24616) granting an increase of pension to John Pulley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24617) granting an increase of pension to F. M. Boso—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIPP: A bill (H. R. 24618) granting an increase of pension to William F. Merrick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24619) granting an increase of pension to William Hill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24620) granting an increase of pension to Lester T. Adams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24621) granting an increase of pension to Eliza A. McKean—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24622) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Babcock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 24623) granting an honorable discharge to Daniel W. Overlander—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NYE: A bill (H. R. 24624) granting a pension to Mary S. Byrnes—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOU VELLE: A bill (H. R. 24625) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas S. Lovett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEEMS: A bill (H. R. 24626) granting an increase of pension to James G. Theaker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of San Francisco (Cal.) Asiatic Exclusion League of North America, praying for the enactment of an exclusion law which will prevent the immigration into the United States of all Asiatics excepting merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Mrs. F. D. Goodspeed, of Colorado Springs, Colo., and 71 others, protesting against the passage of the so-called "Johnston Sunday bill" (S. 3940), entitled "An act for the proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of A. C. Bird, of East Walpole, Mass., and 36 others, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for national cooperation in technical education—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of the Siegel-Cooper Company, of New York City, and various other individuals and firms in the United States, praying for the removal of the duty from raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Amos F. Maker and 36 others, praying for legislation for the establishment of a system of parcels post and for postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: Petition of bar association of Erie County, N. Y., favoring increase of United States judges' salaries—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Gifford H. Ramey—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE: Petition of colored citizens of the United States, favoring legislation to make effective the provisions of the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of Fuller Holway Company, of Augusta, Me., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Dora E. Atkinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of hundreds of citizens of the third district of Kansas, against S. 3940 (religious legislation in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CHANEY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of James B. Freeman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DARRAGH: Petition of William Hursh and 92 other citizens of Gratiot and Montcalm counties, Mich., against enactment of the Johnston Sunday bill (S. 3940)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Silas Haynes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Alexander C. Rogers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAWSON: Petition of citizens of Davenport, Iowa, against the extradition of Christian Rudowitz—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Ferd Haak Company, of Davenport, Iowa, favoring reduction in tobacco schedules—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DWIGHT: Petition of citizens of Binghamton, N. Y., against S. 3940 (religious legislation in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ESCH: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Catherine E. Fisk—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLOYD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Joseph Mattocks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: Petition of Bayer, Beaner & Co., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Joseph W. Shirey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Jacob Erb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Register-Gazette, of Rockford, Ill., favoring H. R. 22237 (placing wood pulp on the free list)—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Washington Playground Association, favoring a children's playground—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Edward P. Thomas, of Rockford, Ill., favoring the Fuller bill (H. R. 19250), creating a volunteer officers' retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GORDON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Fred M. Jones—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bill to correct the military record of William H. Sewood—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of William W. Miller, late assistant surgeon in United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of John F. McCarthey, of New York City, favoring the repeal of tariff on sugar—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GRAFF: Petition of citizens of Bureau, Ill., for legislation to pension members of the Telegraph Corps of the civil war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of River Improvement and Drainage Association of California, for improvement of Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Samuel L. Jennison (previously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions)—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: Petition of Thurston & Kingsbury, of Bangor, Me., favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAYES: Petitions of H. Tomrose and 142 others, J. C. Arthur and 97 others, Charles McLean and 47 others, George Manchen and 48 others, and Thomas Moore and 47 others, all citizens of the State of California, and E. H. Misner, of 228 Oak street, San Francisco, favoring an effective Asiatic exclusion law against all Asiatics save merchants, students, and travelers—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Petition of F. J. Dunn and others, citizens of Sidney, Iowa, against Senate bill 3940 (religious observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: Petition of Bingham (Wash.) Local Union, Smelters and Miners, No. 201, for investigation and regulation of the Treadwell Mining Company, of Douglas Island, Alaska—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. KAHN: Petitions of Frank E. Rose and 47 other residents of Sonoma County, Cal.; Peter J. Smith and 26 others, and M. W. McDonald and 14 others, all residents of Stockton, Cal.; and H. N. Williams and others, favoring exclusion of all nonassimilable Asiatics—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KINKAID: Petition of Omaha Bar Association, favoring increase of salary of federal judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KNAPP: Petition of residents of the Twenty-eighth Congressional District of New York, against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LAFEAN: Petition of W. H. Miller & Co. and Samuel A. Wertz, favoring repeal of duty on raw and refined sugars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of Adam F. Becker (H. R. 24073), Marvin Coshun (H. R. 1603), and Charles Myers (H. R. 15040)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of Alson Jackson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Down Town Taxpayers' Association, against sale of Wallabout lands to National Government—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of citizens of Brooklyn, for legislation to protect and pay underground miners for death and injury—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. LOUD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Reuben Park Forbes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MALBY: Petition against Senate bill 3940, entitled "An act for proper observance of Sunday as day of rest in the District of Columbia"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Thomas Kausinger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bills for relief of estate of Washington Pryor, estate of John A. Heard, estate of Martin Hartman, John H. Jackson, James B. Brown, and George M. Carroll—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Caroline T. Coburn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNE: Petition of business men of Moravia, N. Y., against parcels-post legislation—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PORTER: Petition of citizens of Elba, N. Y., and Elba Grange, No. 783, favoring Senate bills 5122 and 6484, relative to postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Batavia, N. Y., against a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ROTHERMEL: Petition of D. Edw. Prutzman and others, against the Johnston bill (S. 3940) providing for religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William A. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Missouri: Petition of Flat River Local Union, No. 225, for legislation looking to relief against accidents in mines and empowering investigation of the Treadwell Mining Company—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. VREELAND: Petition of ministers of Jamestown, N. Y., for enactment of the Bacon original-package bill, the Tirrell bill, a bill prohibiting sale of opium, the Burkett gambling bill, and the Johnston Sunday bill (S. 3940)—to the Committee on Acoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: Petition of Frank L. Moore and 45 other residents of Potter County, Pa., against S. 3940 (Sunday observance in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of John Lyons, J. W. Kinney, and A. N. Auld, of Arnot, Tioga County, Pa., members of Local Union No. 865, United Mine Workers of America, for bill creating a bureau of mines—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 18, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Harrisburg, December 16, 1908.

Mr. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL,
Clerk of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to send you, for your information, the inclosed copies of self-explanatory communications. Please acknowledge their receipt, and oblige,

Yours, very truly, A. B. MILLAR, Private Secretary.

POTTSVILLE, PA., December 3, 1908.

To His Excellency EDWIN S. STUART,
Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

DEAR SIR: Having been elected on the 3d day of November last as judge of the court of common pleas of Schuylkill County, and as the term for which I was elected as said judge will commence on Monday, the 4th day of January next, when I will be required to take the oath of office, I hereby most respectfully tender my resignation as a Member of the Sixtieth Congress of the United States, to take effect on the 4th day of January, A. D. 1909, and ask that you send acceptance of said resignation to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I have the honor to be,
Your obedient servant, C. N. BRUMM,
M. C., Twelfth District Pennsylvania.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Harrisburg, December 16, 1908.

Hon. C. N. BRUMM,
Pottsville, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3d instant, tendering your resignation as a Member of the Sixtieth Congress of the United States, and to advise you that the same is accepted, to take effect the 4th day of January, 1909.

Very truly, yours,
EDWIN S. STUART.

The SPEAKER. The communications will lie upon the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS CURRENT RIVER, MISSOURI.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23713) authorizing the construction of a bridge across Current River, in Missouri, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Has the bill been reported? It does not seem to be upon the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. The bill has been reported favorably by the committee, unanimously.

The SPEAKER. When?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. This morning.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman a report with him?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I have not the report.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Who made the report?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I think it was reported by the chairman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will request the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and ask him in respect to the bill which has just been read.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will state that that was ordered to be favorably reported by the committee this morning. I suppose the gentleman who has been instructed to make the report has not had time to do so and get it upon the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Was the bill reported with or without amendment?

Mr. HEPBURN. My recollection is without amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. It was reported without amendment. It is very important to get the bill through as soon as possible.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will state that it was ordered to be reported without amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY OF LANDS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15859) providing for the homestead entry of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, and to consider the same in the House at this time, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands in abandoned military reservations Nos. 23 and 24, described as follows: Lots 1 and 2 in section 5 and lot 3 in section 6, of township 20 north, and the southwest quarter, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and lots 3 and 4 of section 21; and the northwest quarter, the west half of the northeast quarter, lots 1, 2, and 3, and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 28, and the south half of lot 3 and all of lots 4 and 5, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 31, the south half of the south half of the northwest quarter, the south half of the south half of the northeast quarter, and lots 1 and 2 and the west half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter and the southwest quarter of section 32, and the south half of lot 2 and all of lot 3 of section 33, in township 21 north, all in range 2 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington, or any part thereof, to be regularly surveyed or subdivided into tracts or lots of 20 acres each, more or less.

SEC. 2. That after said survey and the approval thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register and receiver in the manner provided by law, and thereafter any settler who is in actual occupation of any portion of the lands described in section 1 hereof at the date of the passage of this act who has settled thereon in good faith for the purpose of securing a home, and is by law entitled to make a homestead entry, shall be entitled to enter the land so occupied, not exceeding 20 acres in a body, according to the government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon payment to the Government of the sum of $2.50 per acre for each acre entered by him, and upon showing residence and cultivation of such lands in the manner and for the length of time required by the homestead laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the following described land, being a part of abandoned military reservation No. 24, is hereby granted to school district No. 71 of Pierce County, State of Washington, to wit: The east half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 32 in township 21 of range 2 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington.

SEC. 4. That if any of the lands described in section 1 hereof be not duly entered as a homestead by some settler, as provided in section 1 of this act, within ninety days after the same become subject to entry under the provisions of this act, then, in that event, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of such remaining lands under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 5, 1884, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations."

With the following amendment:

Page 3, line 9, insert "upon payment therefor to the United States of $2.50 per acre."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, in order that the gentleman may make a short explanation.

Mr. CUSHMAN. This bill, H. R. 15859, relates to certain lands belonging to the United States, the lands being located in my State—the State of Washington. This bill has been before the Public Lands Committee of the House, and is recommended by that committee.

Before explaining the effect of the bill, I might remark that I introduced during this Congress two bills relating to these same lands, and the two bills were substantially similar. The first bill I introduced was H. R. 519. It became apparent that several small amendments would be necessary, so I finally drew this new bill, H. R. 15859, to take the place of the other bill, H. R. 519. This bill which we are now considering—H. R. 15859—is favorably reported by the Public Lands Committee of the House.

The bill involves about 1,240 acres of land. These lands comprise two small abandoned military reservations, numbered 23 and 24. These two small abandoned military reservations are situated in Pierce County, State of Washington, being located some 6 miles west of my home city of Tacoma, and about 5 or 6 miles south of a small settlement called "Gig Harbor." Reservation No. 23 contains 637.20 acres, and reservation No. 24 contains 612 acres, making the total area of both reservations 1,249.20 acres. Upon these lands at the present time there are 64 homestead settlers, each occupying just about 20 acres. All of these settlers are upon these lands in good faith and have established homes thereon, but under existing law none of them have the right to make a homestead filing upon these lands. This bill, if enacted into law, will simply confer upon each of these settlers the right to file a homestead entry upon the 20 acres of land now occupied by him, and enables each one of them to prove up and acquire title to his 20 acres at the expiration of five years' residence and cultivation, and further requires the payment by each settler of $2.50 per acre for his 20-acre tract. All of the facts are fully stated in the report (House Rept. No. 639, 60th Cong., 1st sess.), which report accompanies this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN], these settlers went upon these lands while they were military reservations.

Mr. CUSHMAN. No. After these military reservations were abandoned these citizens went upon these lands and made their settlements.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand the rule to be when a military reservation is abandoned that the Secretary of War has to transfer the jurisdiction over that land to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CUSHMAN. The gentleman is correct in his statement of the law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has that been done in this case in relation to these two abandoned military reservations covered by your bill?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes. These two reservations were formerly military reservations, but they were abandoned by order of the Secretary of War on November 20, 1894. None of these settlers made settlements upon these lands until twelve or fifteen years after the War Department abandoned them as military reservations. In explanation of this matter, I will say that when the Secretary of War on November 20, 1894, issued an order abandoning these two military reservations the lands of course still remained government lands, but not under the same law that relates to the public domain generally. If these lands, when abandoned by the War Department, had become again a portion of the general public domain, any settler could have filed a homestead entry upon them, and there would have been no necessity for the passage of this bill which I am now presenting. As a matter of fact, the act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, was an act in relation to all abandoned military reservations; and that act placed lands in abandoned military reservations in a different class from other portions of the public domain.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Did that act deprive these lands of their rights as military reservations and turn them over to the Department of the Interior?

Mr. CUSHMAN. No; not exactly. The act of July 5, 1884, did not apply specifically to these lands. Perhaps I can make this matter more clear by stating matters in their proper order according to dates. Before the year of 1884 all military reservations which the War Department abandoned simply became once more a part of the general public domain of the United States, and the lands contained in them could be filed upon as a homestead the same as any other public lands. Then Congress passed the act of July 5, 1884, which provided, in substance, that military reservations thereafter abandoned should still remain government land and be under the Secretary of the Interior; but certain restrictions were placed upon all such lands by the terms of that act. Now, then, that act of Congress was passed in 1884, and ten years thereafter, to wit, in 1894, the War Department issued an order abandoning these two military reservations. These two reservations, then, depend for their present status on the terms of that act of Congress of July 5, 1884. And by this bill which I am now presenting I am endeavoring to change the act of 1884 in certain particulars in relation to these lands. The facts and circumstances in this particular case I think justify the changes which I ask for, and which are embodied in the bill I am now presenting.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was the question I asked at first, whether these lands had become public lands and now come under the public-land laws.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; they are public lands, but not in the same sense that public land is ordinarily held. When the War Department, in 1894, abandoned these lands they did not then become subject to general homestead entry.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Under what law do these lands become subject to homestead entry?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Under the provisions of the act of July 5, 1884. And this bill which I am now presenting does not seek to change the act of 1884 generally, but only in relation to these two small reservations. To illustrate, the act of July 5, 1884, and subsequent acts amendatory thereof provides that no settler shall be permitted to file a homestead entry upon an abandoned military reservation unless he was residing upon said reservation prior to January 1, 1884. Now, none of these 64 settlers whom I am trying to aid by this bill have resided upon these lands so long as that. That is about twenty-four years ago, and most of these settlers have resided upon these lands from two to six years. My bill simply seeks to waive the necessity for that settlement twenty-four years ago and recognize their more recent settlement as entitling them to file their homestead claims on these lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand you, then, to say that these settlers upon these lands have not entirely complied with the terms of the act of July 5, 1884.

Mr. CUSHMAN. They can not entirely comply under the terms of that act, because they have not resided upon these lands since January 1, 1884. Nothing they can now do will change that fact. This bill simply waives that necessity of long residence. These settlers are all acting in entire good faith. They have built their homes upon these 20-acre tracts and are clearing and cultivating these lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are they actually on the land?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Oh, yes; and many improvements of considerable value have been made by them. I have during the last summer been personally upon every 20-acre tract of land in these two reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What are these settlers required to pay for these lands?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Under the terms of this bill they are required to pay $2.50 per acre. No settler, however, gets more than 20 acres.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was that the price that was put upon the land at the time they first settled or attempted to settle upon it?

Mr. CUSHMAN. No; these lands have never been appraised by the Government, and therefore no price has ever been put upon these lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why do you fix a price in the bill of $2.50 an acre?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Simply because that is the ordinary price asked by the Government. I do not regard the price per acre as the important part of this transaction. The important part of the bill, in my judgment, is the part that gives each of these settlers a right to make his home upon 20 acres of this land, and requires him to reside thereon and cultivate the land for five years. These are all poor men and women. I know many of them personally. They are trying to acquire homes on this vacant land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask this question: In my State there are abandoned reservations in exactly the same shape I understand these reservations to be, but after these reservations in my State were transferred to the Interior Department they did not become part of the public domain of the United States, but they fell under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, just as I understand these lands in the State of Washington are to-day. The situation in my State seems to be on all fours with the situation in the State of Washington. But these abandoned military reservations in my State were put up at auction and sold to the highest bidder in 40-acre tracts, and I can not comprehend why the settlers in my district should have to pay for land by competitive bidding at a public auction and in the State of Washington the settlers should be permitted to pay a stated price of $2.50 per acre.

Mr. CUSHMAN. That, Mr. Speaker, is the very condition which I am trying to change in my State by this bill. And this question was considered by the Committee on the Public Lands of this House when they favorably reported this bill of mine. The law as it now stands is as the gentleman states it. If these lands in my State were to be disposed of under existing law without the passage of this bill, the Secretary of the Interior would simply sell these lands to the highest bidder. But there are 64 settlers upon these two reservations who have been there for a number of years; they settled there in good faith; they have made permanent and costly improvements. If these lands are put up at public auction, the real estate shark and the land speculator will be on hand to try and grab these lands. Every dollar that these settlers had, in most cases, they have expended in improvements on these lands. They are in no financial shape to bid against land speculators, and they ought not to be required to. If I have any conception of the duty of this Government, it is to help the home builder and not to boost the speculator. When this bill was favorably reported by the Public Lands Committee, that committee gave due consideration and attached due weight to the fact that actual settlers and home builders were to get these lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How long have these settlers been on these lands?

Mr. CUSHMAN. From two to six years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the United States Government any barracks or other buildings on these lands?

Mr. CUSHMAN. There are no government buildings whatever on any of these lands and there never have been.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why were these two military reservations established on these lands in the first place?

Mr. CUSHMAN. God only knows. Why, sir, in the early days, when our present State was a Territory—and since, for that matter—there has been created so many government reservations of one kind and another that the map of the State of Washington is as spotted as a blue jay's egg. [Laughter.] On Puget Sound, where these lands lie, there are thousands of miles of shore line, with many islands, promontories, and indentations. In the early days whenever a government official looked at the map of the Territory of Washington and saw an inviting looking peninsula or headland or an island of promising appearance, he could not resist the temptation to make some kind of a reserve out of it. There was one point of land in the outskirts of my city where I stood and in a radius of 3 miles I counted six different government reservations, all within a 3-mile radius. Now, the vast majority of these reservations have never been used, and never will be used. But if a citizen walks outside the city limits of my home city—Tacoma—in any direction, he will stub his toe on a government reserve.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are these lands on Puget Sound?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; these lands lie on the shores of Puget Sound.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will these lands ever be needed for the purpose of a town or a landing place?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I do not think so. Nobody can build a town on the lands while they are reserved. There are thousands of miles of shore line on Puget Sound, and no scarcity of landing places. This is simply vacant land that has never been used. There is not enough timber on the land to make it valuable for timber. The soil is only fairly good, but good fruit can be raised on the land. I will state that most of the men who have settled on these lands are laboring men, many of them working in a large sawmill in the city of Tacoma—men who only get $2.50 per day for their labor, and who are ambitious to acquire homes of their own, and who have taken their families out of the city of Tacoma and built little cottages and settled on these lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What are the lands surrounding these lands worth? What would these surrounding lands sell for?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I presume $10 to $20 per acre.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. At competitive bidding?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I do not think the surrounding lands would sell at public auction for more than $20 per acre. When I inspected these lands this summer, I asked that same question. I was shown other lands near these lands and of the same character that sold for less than $20 per acre recently.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can not see why there should be a difference made in different parts of the United States in disposing of these military reservations.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Well, I am inclined to agree with the conclusions of the gentleman in that respect—if the circumstances are similar. I know the peculiar circumstances in this case, because the land lies near my home. I presented these facts to the Public Lands Committee. They considered the facts and favorably reported my bill. I think that committee was largely moved to this favorable action because my bill seemed to be a fair and reasonable measure and in the interest of the actual settler.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the Fort Endicott Military Reservation brought the Government fifteen or twenty dollars an acre, and the land is not as good as you have covered by this bill and that you propose to dispose of at $2.50 an acre.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I do not think the lands covered by my bill, taken as a whole, would bring to exceed $20 an acre. And if these lands were put up at auction the result would be that the land would be bid in by speculators, who by this means would crowd out the settlers who have built their homes on these lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On account of the actual settlers, I will not object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me three minutes, please? I am on the Public Lands Committee. I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Metcalf, asking him whether he approved the sale of this property that overlooks the splendid harbors out there, and he wrote me that he distinctly disapproved the bill, that the land should not be sold, but that it should be kept for navy purposes and was now needed. That is about the substance of the letter, which I had printed in the RECORD last session. This view I took in the committee, and I am obliged to take the same view here, and must object.

ANNIE WARD.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 558) to authorize a patent to be issued to Annie Ward, formerly Annie Brown, for certain lands therein described.

Be it enacted, etc., That the entry of Annie Ward, formerly Annie Brown, of the southwest quarter of section 20, township 144 north, range 71 west, in the Fargo land district, in the State of North Dakota, held for cancellation by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and ordered canceled by the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause a patent to the land embraced within said entry to be issued to the said Annie Ward, formerly Annie Brown, provided there is no valid adverse claim for such land.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman to explain the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that was called yesterday and passed without prejudice. My distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], who is a member of this committee, will remember that this bill was thoroughly considered, as he was present at our meeting at the time. The bill has passed the Senate. Unanimous report was made in favor of the passage of this bill in the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say there was a unanimous report?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I do not make any objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this case, as I recall it, is a case where a man made entry under the homestead laws and the woman made entry under the homestead laws, and the two joined fortunes, so that they obtained two homesteads in one family?

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman, who desires to get his part of the country settled, think it desirable for one family to have two homesteads?

Mr. GRONNA. The statement is perfectly correct. The application for this homestead was made by this woman before she was married. The application was made under what is known as "the law for a second homestead entry," and there was a lapse of two years before the filing was accepted. In the meantime this woman was married to a man who had a homestead. Now, under our statutes the department can not grant a patent to this land. I realize that. The gentleman from Illinois has read the report from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. GRONNA. The Secretary says that there is a great deal of equity in this case, and that he has no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, while that is true, the Secretary also says, "the purpose of the act was to guard against the maintenance of two homes at the same time by husband and wife." Now, does the gentleman believe we ought to approve a policy which will have a wife maintain a home at one homestead and the husband maintain another home on another homestead?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that, as a rule, I do not; but improvements have been made by this claimant to the extent of $1,290, as has been shown, from the time the application was made in 1902, the time that she applied for entry. They have lived continuously on this particular piece of land, and they are living on it to-day. I believe the relief should be given to this party at this particular time, and I hope the gentleman will not object to this legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It only applies to one homestead, does it?

Mr. GRONNA. That is all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the amount?

Mr. GRONNA. One hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Have they complied with law, with the exception you have stated?

Mr. GRONNA. Absolutely; and with all provisions of the law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRONNA, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COEUR D'ALENE RESERVATION, IDAHO.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 21010 be taken from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, that committee discharged from further consideration of the bill, and that further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of a bill, the title of which the Clerk will report, and that the consideration of the same be indefinitely postponed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21010) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant easements on certain lands in the Coeur d'Alene Reservation in Idaho.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman to explain his request.

Mr. FRENCH. In just one word I can explain why I make this request——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is your request; to have it indefinitely postponed?

Mr. FRENCH. That is my request.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request to indefinitely postpone the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INAUGURATION COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following committee on the inauguration of the President on the part of the House: Mr. BURKE, Mr. YOUNG, and Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

PERSONAL REQUESTS.

Mr. SULZER, by unanimous consent, obtained an order for a reprint of H. R. 22071, to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights.

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of J. P. Fox (H. R. 13424) Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. BARCLAY, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of illness in his family.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON VENTILATION AND ACOUSTICS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for the services of a clerk to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, at the rate of $6 per day from the beginning of the present session of Congress until the adjournment thereof.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, what is this thing?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. It is a resolution providing for a clerk for the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object to that.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. It is a privileged report, Mr. Speaker, and I am not asking unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I am dead against it; I want that understood. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If we give the committee that clerk, will that committee give us more ventilation in this House instead of the impure air we have been having?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. The chairman of the committee says that he has that in view, and that is the reason why he needs this clerk.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER. What will be the duties of this clerk?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. The duties of this clerk will be to attend to the business of the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], is not present this morning, but was unexpectedly called away; and I am sorry that he is not here so that he could defend this proposition. But I want to say for the information of the House that he appeared before the Committee on Accounts and claimed that he wanted to make some reports from the committee to this House. He called attention to the fact that the House needed, as the gentleman from Tennessee has stated, ventilation; that there were other matters in connection with the work of this committee that needed attention; that his committee would have still other work; and, therefore, that it was necessary for them to have this clerk.

Mr. CANDLER. Did this committee ever have a meeting?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes; this committee has had several meetings, so the chairman stated, and has several matters now pending before it.

Mr. CANDLER. How many reports have they ever made to the House?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. They have not made any reports to the House. They need the services of this clerk so that they can make the reports. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the last session of Congress the House authorized the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds to make an investigation as to the improvement of this Chamber, and if I recollect correctly, placed $5,000 at his disposal. Now does the gentleman from West Virginia seriously believe that this Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics will perform any duties whatever of any value to the House?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I certainly do. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] is a truthful man. He came before the committee and made this statement and showed to the satisfaction of the committee that his committee does have duties, and that they intended to perform these duties and to make a report to this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], who is a member of the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say to the Members of the House that I am a member of this distinguished Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics. I have never yet had the privilege of forming the acquaintance of the chairman. [Laughter.] I have never received any notice of any meeting of the committee, and am not aware that there is any bill pending before that committee. If there is any necessity for a clerk, I do not know it. It does seem to me this is a waste of public money to make this appropriation.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. If the gentleman will permit me to reply to him, as soon as the House gives this committee this clerk, then the gentleman will have some one to give him notice of their meetings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. ALEXANDER of Missouri. I do not see why the chairman can not give the notice himself.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I hope that motion will not prevail.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I do not.

The SPEAKER. Until the gentleman from West Virginia yields the floor, the motion of the gentleman from New York would not be in order. It would be in order when the gentleman yields the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The motion is in order, unless the gentleman makes a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. Well, but the gentleman has the floor. The moment the gentleman gets off his feet, the Chair is inclined to believe the motion of the gentleman from New York will be in order.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I move the adoption of the resolution, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to lay the motion on the table. The gentleman has indicated that he has done with the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution. That motion, the Chair is of opinion, would take precedence of the motion to lay on the table under the circumstances, as the gentleman has the floor, and having the floor he moves the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the gentleman has made that motion, even at the suggestion of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes, he has.

The SPEAKER. He made the motion to adopt the resolution, and he said "Upon that motion I move the previous question."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, the gentleman from West Virginia had yielded the floor and was gathering up his papers, and started to sit down.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yielded to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] for a question only.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And furthermore the gentleman from West Virginia recognized the fact that the gentleman from New York had made this motion, because he said he hoped it would not be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must take the statement of the gentleman. In fact, the gentleman did make the motion that the House agree to the report; and upon that he demanded the previous question. Whether he demanded the previous question immediately before or immediately after the gentleman from New York moved to lay on the table, the Chair can not say, but the gentleman had the floor and was entitled to make the motion for the previous question, and did make it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, we can accomplish the same result by having a vote on the motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes; it can be disposed of as well one way as another.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Division!

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution lie on the table. I believe I am now entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from West Virginia demand a division?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes.

The House divided; and there were 60 ayes and 95 noes.

So the motion for the previous question was lost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken, and there were 95 ayes and 31 noes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia demands the yeas and nays.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that 20 Members had arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays were refused.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the rule.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, with Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bills on the Private Calendar under the rule.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 12484) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana $215,820.89 for a claim found due said bank by the Court of Claims; and the money to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that Senate bill 1559, for the same purpose, Calendar No. 893, be substituted for the House bill and be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the identical Senate bill be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to pay the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana $215,820.89. The bill has been before both Houses of Congress for many years, has been often favorably reported as set out in the report, and never has been adversely reported. That the bill is a just one, and that the amount should be paid has been reported on favorably by Senator Howell Jackson, who was afterwards a member of the Supreme Court of the United States; Senator White, at present a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; and found to be a just liability against the Government of the United States; also by William H. Moody, then the Attorney-General, and now a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The facts in this case briefly are these: This bank was incorporated in 1833. It continued to do business in the city of New Orleans, La., and in 1862, Gen. Benjamin F. Butler took possession of the city of New Orleans and issued various orders set out in the report. In the bank at that time was deposited to the credit of the Confederate government $219,039.94; special account, Confederate court, $12,465; also deposits by Confederate receivers in the sum of $215,820.89, the amount for the payment of which this bill has been introduced.

This bank gave notice, prior to the occupation and prior to the orders of General Butler, that all accounts of depositors made prior to the date mentioned in the report would be paid in gold, silver, or notes of the bank; that all deposits received after that time, September, 1861, would be payable in the funds deposited. These deposits by the Confederate receivers were made in Confederate money, but General Butler, when he took charge of these funds deposited by the Confederate receivers, required them, instead of being paid in the funds deposited, in Confederate money, to be paid in gold or silver or the Treasury notes of the United States. The bank protested, but the General was inexorable and the amount was paid by the bank in a draft on a bank in New York, and was covered into the Treasury of the United States by authority of Congress, and is there yet.

In other words, no part of it has ever been paid to the bank or to anyone else. Now, without going into the facts further, I want to read, because it is the expression of a high official of the Government, a high legal authority, Mr. Justice Moody of the Supreme Court of the United States. And first, I want to state the reason why Mr. Justice Moody made the statement. There was a petition filed asking the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the United States Army, to order the fund paid over to the bank, and Justice Moody, after reviewing the facts and setting them out, says this:

In my opinion, after consideration of the foregoing facts, the act of General Butler in compelling payment to him by the claimant of this sum of $215,820.89 in current funds of the United States instead of payment in kind—that is, in Confederate currency, which constituted the deposits of said sum—was entirely unwarranted and unauthorized, and through said act the United States obtained no title thereto. As confirming this opinion that the United States never obtained title to this money, I refer to a letter written by General Butler on April 24, 1884, to one of the members of the Senate committee, to whom this claim had been referred, in which he sets forth that as regards the amount of the receivers' accounts comprising a greater portion of this sum, he had compelled payment of the same, as he did by the claimant, because this amount had been confiscated by the Confederate government as the property of northern creditors owing to them from southern debtors, and that his intention was that the amount so confiscated should be restored to said creditors by the United States Government, adding: "I agree that the United States has no right to it and ought to pay it over to somebody, and these somebodies are the northern creditors who lost it." But, however well meaning General Butler may have been toward these northern creditors, in my opinion he had no authority to compel the claimant to pay in currency of the United States deposits made with it in Confederate funds, but should have accepted the offer of the claimant to deliver up those deposits in kind.

As to the value of these Confederate funds in the hands of the claimant at the time of this payment to General Butler, as found by the Court of Claims, I do not think that it constitutes a proper offset to this claim. This finding is based solely upon the fact that at about the same time the United States military authorities had sold certain Confederate currency seized by them for one-third the nominal value thereof in current funds of the United States, but it does not appear that the claimant had any opportunity to make like disposition of the Confederate funds held by it. On the contrary, it would appear that it was precluded from so doing, for on May 19 of the same year General Butler had issued the following order:

"That the several incorporated banks pay out no more Confederate notes to their depositors or creditors, but that all deposits be paid in the bills of the bank, United States Treasury notes, gold, or silver."

Moreover, in my opinion, it was the legal duty of the claimant to hold these deposits subject to the demand therefor of the depositors or until such time as it would appear with certainty that such demand could never be made by reason of the complete overthrow of the Confederate government.

Now, I ask especial attention to the next statement by Mr. Justice Moody:

Respecting the finding of disloyalty of the claimant made by the Court of Claims, the facts show that this disloyalty consisted in certain dealings in Confederate funds, including a subscription to the amount of $300,000 to a fund for the defense of the city of New Orleans against the United States; but it appears that these acts were in the line of business, and were, furthermore, practically forced upon the claimant to maintain its existence while the Confederate government was in power at New Orleans. Furthermore, there is no proof that these acts were ratified by the stockholders of the bank. Indeed, I am informed that at that time some of said stockholders were loyal northern citizens of the United States. Hence it would seem that these acts of disloyalty are properly imputable to the officers only and that the bank as a corporation ought not to be held accountable therefor. The cases of Commonwealth v. Proprietors of New Bedford Bridge (2 Gray, Mass., 339) and Planters' Bank v. Union Bank (16 Wall., 496) support the view that disloyalty can not be imputed to a corporation, and the same view is taken in Clark on Corporations, page 200.

As for the relief prayed for in the petition, while I am of the opinion that the United States never obtained title to the money of the claimant here under consideration, and that there was no warrant for covering the same into the Treasury, nevertheless the fact remains that this money was covered into the Treasury and that it has ever since constituted, prima facie, a part of the funds of the United States for which the Treasury Department has been held to account. I do not doubt the power of the President, as Commander in Chief of the military forces of the United States, to have directed the return of this money to the claimant before it was thus covered into the Treasury, but I can not perceive that that power continued after it had thus passed under the control of the Treasury Department. Furthermore, as above stated, the claimant has already had this claim passed upon through its own voluntary action by the Court of Claims, and the report of that court upon the claim is still before Congress subject to its action, so that it does not seem to me fitting, even if the power to do so were plain, for the President to forestall such action of Congress.

The reason why Justice Moody did not recommend that the President order it paid back by executive order was because it had been covered into the United States Treasury by act of Congress.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman explain who lost the money?

Mr. SIMS. The bank.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman spoke of northern creditors.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Justice Moody referred to the northern creditors.

Mr. MURDOCK. What does that mean?

Mr. SIMS. General Butler gave that as a reason for requiring the money of the Confederate receivers to be paid in United States money, that they had sequestered debts due northern creditors. That was General Butler's reason for saying what he did.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did not stockholders of the bank make this loss good?

Mr. SIMS. It was paid in gold, in United States money.

Mr. PRINCE. As I understand the gentleman, this amount of money, $215,820.89, was collected by General Butler and deposited in the United States Treasury—that is, under military order.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; it was paid over by his order.

Mr. PRINCE. It was paid over to him?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. That amount of money has been in the Treasury of the United States from that time up to this time?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. The bank made good to the depositors this sum of money?

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. PRINCE. Did this bank ever pay this money to the depositors or to the receivers or to the persons who were entitled to receive it?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman will understand that the deposits were in Confederate money, by receivers, and the deposits were retained there and sold after the civil war as junk, and the deposits were received to be paid in like money, in kind—that is, to be paid back in the kind of money received. It was deposited in Confederate money, and therefore General Butler was entitled to only the property that the receivers were entitled to, which was Confederate money, but he would not accept it, and forced the bank to pay it in United States money.

Mr. PRINCE. In gold or silver?

Mr. SIMS. Well, in money of the United States.

Mr. PRINCE. And the purpose of the gentleman is to have this amount of money returned to the bank?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; without interest, simply the sum itself. That is the object of the bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the House understands it, I ask for a vote on the bill, that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

Mr. SIMS. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a very old claim against the Government; and if it is a just claim, it ought to be paid; and to the extent that it is just, it ought to be paid. It is true that the payment of this claim has been recommended by many committees, by some very distinguished gentlemen. The claim went through the unusual and most extraordinary process of being submitted to the President of the United States, and by him submitted to the Attorney-General. Why this claim should have had such extraordinary care taken of it, over and above all of the other claims that are constantly being presented to Congress, I do not know; though I suspect that the same social influences which have been urged in its behalf for many years in some way affected not the President himself, not the Attorney-General himself, but some of the people through whom that claim happened to be presented to the President, and by him referred to the Attorney-General. But perhaps that makes no difference. When the claim was referred to the Attorney-General all he had before him were the papers in the case, the same as are here before us.

Now, what are the facts in the case? I think the report is in error in several places where the report says that this was money belonging to the Confederate States. According to the report of this bank, made to General Butler when he entered New Orleans, the bank had on deposit some two hundred and nineteen thousand and odd dollars to the credit of the Confederate States. It had on deposit a special fund of something over $12,000 to the credit of the State. It had on deposit various sums of money not to the credit of the Confederate States, but to the credit of receivers——

Mr SIMS. The report so states.

Mr. MANN. Which it listed in one place as Confederate receivers; but their own report shows that it was not money belonging to the Confederate States at all. The bank stated:

As the deposits by receivers were made in this bank by virtue of an order of the Confederate court, in accordance with the act of Congress, they were to that extent compulsory on the receivers as well as on the bank. To have refused to comply with the mandate of the court might have brought both parties in conflict with the constituted authorities for the time being.

To whom this money belonged is not shown by the court, and never has appeared in any of the papers in the case. I take it that there was a distinction between money being deposited there for the account of the Confederate States and money deposited there by the receivers of the court under the order of the court.

That distinction was made by General Butler. When General Butler requested the banks to furnish him this statement of these funds the bank said to him: "Confederate money for all of these accounts." General Butler returned to the bank the accounts which were not for the Confederate States and stated that so far as the accounts of the Confederate States were concerned he believed that he and the Government of the United States stood in the same place to the Confederate States, hence he would accept the same kind of money which could be turned over to the Confederate States, to wit, Confederate money; but he insisted that these other accounts deposited in this bank in current funds should be paid by the bank in current funds, and he declined to accept the Confederate money. As to the Confederate account, he acknowledged that that might properly be paid in Confederate funds, and although the report would indicate that the controversy here is over money belonging to the Confederate States, that is entirely eliminated from the controversy. There never was any question about that. That money was accepted by General Butler in Confederate money and is out of this case. Now, what he did was to return to the bank the $215,000 of these special accounts to receivers, including one special account, I believe, belonging to the Confederate States, which possibly might be a claim justly entitled to be paid. What did the bank do? The bank, not General Butler, took the responsibility of setting aside this money in Confederate money as against these deposits to be paid in current funds. It was not General Butler who ordered this special deposit to be made of these accounts, as stated in the report, at all. The special deposit made by the bank was not the money due to the Confederate States. That had been accepted by General Butler in Confederate funds—the money that he returned—but the bank took, not by direction of General Butler, and made a special deposit, and upon any theory of law it was the duty of the bank, even if it intended to make a claim against the Government, to make use of the funds which were returned to it as Confederate funds. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but when this matter was submitted to the Court of Claims, the Court of Claims made a specific finding that the funds at that time—the $215,000 of special deposits, which were permitted by the bank to lie in the vaults of the bank until they were worthless—were worth some $71,000 of United States money. Now, if this bank chose to take these Confederate funds returned to it by General Butler and put them in a special deposit—pile them up in their vaults—that was the risk which the bank took. It was not by direction of General Butler that it was done at all. He did not ask that this particular money should be sequestrated or that it should be put in a special deposit, or that it should be put in a box in the vault of the bank. The bank had accepted this money from the receivers under order of court. General Butler required these funds to be turned over to him. There was a controversy as to how the funds should be paid, and General Butler insisted they should be paid in United States currency. The bank insisted that it should have the authority to pay in Confederate funds. It was not the right of the bank, as a matter of any law which has ever been administered in any other case, to say that these funds should be laid aside until they became worthless. It was the duty of the bank to realize the best it could upon these funds, as it did upon the other funds it had in its possession.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman kindly yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. As a member of the committee which considered this matter, I would like to ask the gentleman how he obtained the information that this $215,000 in Confederate money was worth $70,000 in good money at that time? I do not think that was known to the committee.

Mr. MANN. The Court of Claims, which passed upon this case made that finding; but this, however, is not set forth in the report of the committee.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I never heard of it.

Mr. MANN. No; but that was one of the findings made by the Court of Claims when this case was submitted to the Court of Claims. It is undoubtedly true that it is not the duty of attorneys prosecuting claims of this sort to present evidence which is against them, and for that reason I called attention to the decision of the court.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. And will the gentleman permit me again? Does the gentleman regard it as the duty of the bank to force a sale of this Confederate money, or simply hold it? They were not there for the purpose of selling it or for the purpose of exchanging it, but simply it was made a depository. Had they any right to go into the open market and sell it for what they could get for it in good money, in gold and silver, under the terms of a trust that had been deposited with them as a trust fund?

Mr. MANN. It was not deposited with them to be held in coin. It was deposited with them as other deposits are made with banks.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. In Confederate money?

Mr. MANN. In Confederate money. This is not the only Confederate money this bank had on deposit. My information is that the bank disposed of its Confederate funds. At that time they had considerable value. Perhaps it is true that General Butler had issued an order that in the city of New Orleans the banks and other concerns should not pass Confederate money as current, but Confederate money at that time had a considerable value. The bank held this on its own responsibility as a special deposit in Confederate funds. They should have realized on this sum as they realized upon other Confederate money which they held.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman again yield? I want to get information on the subject. The gentleman will observe that the court says, as to the value of these Confederate funds:

As to the value of these Confederate funds in the hands of the claimant at the time of this payment to General Butler, as found by the Court of Claims, I do not think that it constitutes a proper offset to this claim.

I understand the gentleman thinks it does constitute a proper offset, and the court found otherwise.

Mr. MANN. What part of the report is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I am reading from the case itself, on page 8 of the report.

Mr. MANN. That is the opinion of the Attorney-General overruling the Court of Claims on an ex parte hearing, without any presentation of the Government's side of the case.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. But the point I make is that the Court of Claims did not find this was a proper offset to any claim that the bank held. I have not read the finding, but my understanding of the finding is that they came to no conclusion in regard to that and expressed no opinion in regard to it. The Attorney-General says it was not a proper offset.

Mr. MANN. This point the Court of Claims found. The Court of Claims, as the gentleman understands, as a rule, does not make recommendations. All it finds is facts in these cases. The Court of Claims, and I am reading merely from the opinion of the Attorney-General, because the finding in the Court of Claims, that part of it in favor of this payment, is set forth quite fully in the report; the rest is not, and I suppose was not called to the attention of the committee. I make no reflection on the committee.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I hope the gentleman will not consider that the committee purposely omitted anything.

Mr. MANN. I do not reflect upon the committee, and much less on the gentleman who presented the report. It was a long opinion, and I presume was not called to the attention of the committee, so as to have it in convenient shape for printing. The Attorney-General said:

The Court of Claims also found that at the time of this payment, as above recited by the claimant, the Confederate notes in the nominal sum of a like amount, which then remained in the bank of the claimant, were worth one-third of their face value, or $71,940.29, and, further, that it does not appear what became of this sum of Confederate currency so held and maintained by the claimant to the credit of the depositors of the same, "nor does it appear that said claimant ever paid said sums, or any part thereof, to said depositors or other persons."

No part of that finding, by the way, except as in the letter, is set forth. Now, here was the finding of the Court of Claims as to the facts. The Court of Claims found, in addition, that the claimant was not loyal to the Government of the United States during the war. So the committee sets aside practically two findings of the Court of Claims—first, disloyalty, and, second, as to the amount which is due under the best of circumstances.

I do not wish to be understood in this matter as criticising the committee, because I appreciate the work that that committee does, the labor that is involved in all of these cases, and the fact that very likely the committee acted largely upon the letter of the Attorney-General.

Mr. HASKINS. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois if he does not understand that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that there is no such thing as disloyalty on the part of a corporation?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not understand that the Supreme Court has held that.

Mr. HASKINS. I have it right here.

Mr. MANN. I know the decision. I do not understand that the Supreme Court has held at all that there is no such thing as disloyalty on the part of a banking corporation which is the fiscal agent of a party with which we are at war. Here was a bank, the fiscal agent, as far as it could be, of the Confederate States, the funds belonging to the Confederate States not being in dispute in this case. And yet it is claimed that the Supreme Court has decided that this bank could not be disloyal, while the Court of Claims, which considered this particular case and heard the evidence, decided that it was disloyal.

Mr. HASKINS. Why, Mr. Chairman, a large number of the stockholders of this bank at the time this money was taken were northern men residing in Northern States.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that that helped them. I have a great deal more respect for some of the southern men who were not loyal than for these men. They claim that some of the stockholders were northern men. Stockholders of this bank, when? While it was acting as the fiscal agent of the Confederate States. I do not take stock in their loyalty at all. I might have some sympathy for the men in the South who were so-called "disloyal," because loyal to their own community, but I have no sympathy for the northener who was operating with his funds to injure the Government and staying at home claiming to be loyal.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Who were these receivers that deposited the money?

Mr. MANN. I have been unable to ascertain, except that they were receivers of money deposited by order of the courts as stated in the report. I have been unable to find anything in the record of the case which shows who these receivers were.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am unable to get a copy of the report in the document room, and therefore I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Is there any way provided in the event that this bill passes and becomes law that this money will go back to the people for whom these gentlemen were receivers?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; that is never expected. Of course they have no recourse. But after all I am free to admit that it is not very important, perhaps. While it is true it is not intended to pay any of this money to the depositors, I am desirous of being perfectly fair with the committee on matters of this kind. The claim is made that these funds could have been paid to the depositors in Confederate notes, and that is undoubtedly true. That money became worthless, and hence anything due the depositors was worthless; but that the bank was compelled to pay to the Government of the United States good money, which was paid by draft by the correspondent bank in New York. Whether the depositors will come up again with another claim no one can tell. I can see no justice in it, but I have seen no justice in many claims presented, argued, allowed, and paid.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman will answer another question, which I ask purely for information. My information was that these were moneys due by southern gentlemen to northern merchants that were sequestrated on the orders of the southern courts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The gentleman has something else in his mind.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am asking the gentleman, because he is a source of a great deal of information.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing of the sort. General Butler, in a letter written long after this took place—and everyone knows General Butler's memory was sometimes very convenient for certain purposes—stated that his justification for taking the money was the fact that the Confederate States had confiscated money due from southern merchants to northern merchants, and that turn about was fair play. Of course that has nothing to do with the equities of this case, because the Government does not take that position. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is pretty good at special pleading, but he is altogether wrong in his conclusions.

In the first place, General Butler had no more authority to levy a contribution upon the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana than would the gentleman from Illinois have to go out in the streets of Washington and levy a contribution upon any bank in the city of Washington. When General Butler arrived at New Orleans he issued a long proclamation on the 1st of May, 1862, and among other things he stated "that all rights of property of whatever kind will be held inviolate, subject only to laws of the United States."

Now, he levied this contribution upon the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana. It was an amount of money that they held in Confederate notes, that had been deposited there by the receivers of certain institutions, amounting to $215,820.89. The bank protested against paying the money to him unless it could be paid in Confederate money, such as they had in their bank. He was not satisfied with that. He insisted that the bank should give him a draft or order upon their correspondent bank in New York, and they delivered to him an order for the amount of this money upon their correspondent bank in the city of New York.

That money was sent to the Treasury of the United States, where it has lain from that time up to the present, and held there without any authority of law whatever; and if the Government to-day were to pay the legal rate of interest upon the money that it received, the claim against this Government would amount to more than $800,000.

A similar case, involving a similar principle, was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States upon a transaction of General Banks. It was the case of the Planters' Bank, of Tennessee, against the Union Bank, of Louisiana. The court say:

> Did the order of General Banks justify any payment of the balance to the military authorities? If it did not, it is immaterial in what currency the payment was made. Payment in any currency was no protection to the debtors. The validity of the order is, therefore, the first thing to be considered.

That is, the validity of the order of General Butler is the first thing for this House to consider.

> Still, as the war had not ceased, though it was not flagrant in the district, and as General Banks was in command of the district, it must be conceded that he had power to do all that the laws of war permitted, except so far as he was restrained by the pledged faith of the Government, or by the effect of congressional legislation.

So, too, General Butler had authority to do just what was required of him or permitted of him to do under the laws of the United States, and no more. The court say:

> A pledge, however, had been given that rights of property should be respected. When the city was surrendered to the army under General Butler, a proclamation was issued, dated May 1, 1862, one clause of which was as follows:
>
> "All the rights of property of whatever kind will be held inviolate, subject only to the laws of the United States."
>
> This, as was remarked in the case of The Venice, "only reiterated the rule established by the legislative and executive action of the National Government in respect to the portions of the States in insurrection, occupied and controlled by the troops of the Union." That action, it was said, indicated the policy of the Government to be not to regard districts occupied and controlled by national troops as in actual insurrection, or their inhabitants, as subject, in most respects, to treatment as enemies.
>
> We do not assert that anything in General Butler's proclamation exempted property within the occupied districts from liability to confiscation as enemy's property, if in truth it was such. All that is now said is that after that proclamation private property in the district was not subject to military seizure as booty of war. But admitting, as we do, that private property remained subject to confiscation, and also that the proclamation applied exclusively to the inhabitants of the district, it is undeniable that confiscation was possible only to the extent and in the manner provided by the acts of Congress. Those acts were passed on the 6th of August, 1861, and on the 17th of July, 1862. No others authorized the confiscation of private property, and they prescribed the manner in which alone confiscation could be made. They designated government agents—

That is, the act itself designated government agents—

> For seizing enemies' property, and they directed the mode of procedure for its condemnation in the courts. The system devised was necessarily exclusive. No authority was given to a military commandant, as such, to effect any confiscation. And under neither of the acts was the property of a banking institution made confiscable.

So I say, without reading any further of this case, that General Butler's seizure of that property was a high-handed, unjustifiable, and unlawful demand for contribution upon the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, without any authority of law whatever, because the acts of Congress prescribed just how and in what manner, and in no other manner, confiscation could be accomplished.

This money, under the order which he compelled the cashier and the president of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana to deliver to him, was sent to their correspondent in the city of New York, who paid over under that order $215,820.89 in the legal currency of the United States of America. Now, to whom does it belong? It belongs to the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, the stockholders that then were, or their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives.

There is no defense whatever to this claim, and I want to say in this connection——

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman does not want to say—I want to be perfectly fair with him—that this money should go to the legal heirs of the stockholders at that time, because this bill is to pay it to the Citizens' Bank.

Mr. HASKINS. It is incorporated.

Mr. MANN. It should go to the bank and not to the heirs of the stockholders.

Mr. HASKINS. The Citizens' Bank will distribute it as it ought to be distributed.

Mr. MANN. I think the bank will use it as it would use any other funds.

Mr. HASKINS. I do not think I violate any man's confidence when I say to you that one of the most promient Members of this House for many years, a Republican, too, told me this morning that on one occasion he helped defeat this very bill, and he said that he never had been so ashamed of any act before in Congress in his life, because he knew that it was a just and legal claim. Now, this is an honest claim, and there is no defense to it whatever.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

A similar House bill, H. R. 12484, was ordered to lie on the table.

JOHN D. M'LAIN.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 3622) for the relief of John D. McLain.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay John D. McLain, of Johnson County, Ind., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $100, being for one horse taken by or furnished to the military authorities of the United States for their use during the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY].

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should apologize to the committee, but this claim was referred to me for consideration, and I went over the evidence, and at that time made up my mind that it was a meritorious claim and that it ought to be paid. But the report was made a good many months ago and I have not refreshed my memory in regard to it since, but I may say that on examination made at that time I found the facts before me to be as I reported, and I considered it a proper bill to be paid.

Mr. HASKINS. This was a horse taken by the military forces of the United States under General Judah as he was passing through Kentucky during the war of the suppression of the rebellion in pursuit of Gen. John Morgan's command. The horse was appraised at $100. The evidence submitted was perfectly satisfactory, and was overwhelming that Mr. McLain was absolutely a loyal man to the Government and would have given more horses if he had had them. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

C. L. HUEY.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 7029) for the relief of C. L. Huey.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to C. L. Huey, of Bloomingdale, Ind., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $96.40, being for loss of private property at Cavite Naval Station, P. I., as found due him by a board of survey at Manila, P. I., by Special Orders, No. 272, paragraph 2, dated headquarters First Brigade and post of Manila, November 17, 1903.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, this bill has once passed the House and been reported two or three times favorably. The facts in the case are brief. The man was a civil employee in the service of the Government, and while his trunk was in the custody of the Government it was broken into and robbed. A board of survey found that the articles of value amounting to the amount stated in the bill were taken and that he ought to be paid for them. It amounted to $96.40, and it has been recommended by the department and board of survey and everybody else who has had anything to say about it.

Mr. MANN. I understand this bill is practically to reimburse an employee of the Government for the loss of a trunk, which trunk, if it had been carried by a common carrier——

Mr. HOLLIDAY. It was on a government transport,

Mr. MANN. Which trunk, if being carried by a common carrier, the common carrier would be liable for the loss.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. That is right.

Mr. MANN. In fact, it was carried on a government vessel?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES R. WYRICK.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 8050) for the relief of James R. Wyrick.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150, in full liquidation of the amount due James R. Wyrick, being the value of a mule furnished the army of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by Mr. DAWSON.

Mr. MANN. This bill is similar to the one we just passed a moment ago, is it not?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SEWELL COULSON.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 1072) for the relief of Mary A. Coulson, executrix of Sewell Coulson, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary A. Coulson, executrix and sole legatee of Sewell Coulson, deceased, late of Sullivan, Ind., the sum of $3,950, being the amount due to him for professional services rendered as an attorney at law, the said services being the defense of sundry actions instituted and prosecuted against a military officer and men of his command in the Indiana state courts and the United States circuit court within and for the district of Indiana for acts done by them while in the discharge of their duty and in obedience to orders emanating from the authority of the United States Government during the late war.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "Mary A. Coulson, executrix," and substitute therefor the words "the legal representatives."

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Sewell Coulson, deceased."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman in charge of the bill would make some explanation of this bill.

Mr. MANN. He ought to make a very full explanation.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY].

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, as the bill recites, this is to pay for the legal services of Sewell Coulson, deceased, who immediately after the war was engaged to defend certain persons who were sued in civil damages by persons arrested by military authorities under General Hovey, in the district of Indiana. There were a number of persons claimed to have been arrested without authority of law and without the warrant of law under the military laws of the country, and after the war ended and they were released from custody they sued the officers who, under the directions of the military authorities of the United States, had arrested them—sued the officers for false imprisonment and claimed they were entitled to damages. Suits were prosecuted against these persons, and they were defended by Mr. Coulson and by Porter, Harrison & Fishback, not only in the state court of Indiana, but also in the United States district court—that is, in those cases that got into the federal court by transfer under the rules and regulations for transfer for causes. Mr. Coulson's claim is embraced in this bill. The services were certified as being worth $4,500.

The legislature of Indiana made an appropriation to satisfy the portions of the services which were regarded as expenses incurred by these gentlemen in pursuance of the duties devolving upon them as attorneys representing the defendants in those suits. The amount of money appropriated by the legislature was paid to Porter, Harrison & Fishback, and Mr. Coulson. The amount paid to Mr. Coulson was $550. It did not meet the expenses which these gentlemen had incurred in the course of defending these suits. At the time these suits were begun and at the time Coulson and Porter, Harrison & Fishback were selected to defend these men, Mr. Coulson wrote a letter to the Adjutant-General of the War Department putting in a claim for services rendered up to a certain time, expecting there would be some recognition of the services thus far rendered upon the part of the United States, and also that he should be authorized to continue his employment. The Adjutant-General, as shown by the reports made by the Adjutant-General, said that he would not want to consider services rendered in part; but after the services were concluded, then the accounts of these gentlemen should be submitted, and he would then take up the question of compensation.

Eventually the cases, after dragging along for several years, were concluded, and he put in his application for pay to the War Department, and the War Department of course turned the matter over to The Adjutant-General, who reported there were no funds within his control with which he could then pay for the services rendered. The Auditor for the Treasury Department made also a similar statement when the claim was presented to that bureau for audit. Afterwards the question of services and compensation was taken up by the War Department, and these were the conclusions that were reached, namely, that there were no available funds in the War Department to satisfy these services and that therefore it should be referred——

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHANEY. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Who were these men that were prosecuted?

Mr. CHANEY. They were persons that had been arrested by the military authorities on account of treasonable performances in the State of Indiana.

Mr. PERKINS. And this lawyer appeared for the military authorities?

Mr. CHANEY. He appeared for the men who were sued in civil damages for the false imprisonment of the plaintiffs who sued.

Mr. PERKINS. Who were the men that were sued? I do not care for their names, but what was their office?

Mr. CHANEY. They were captains and lieutenants in command of the companies that were sent there by General Hovey to arrest these men.

Mr. PERKINS. That is, they were captains and lieutenants of companies in the United States service?

Mr. CHANEY. They were under the control and direction and subject to the orders of the United States Army, and General Hovey commanded them.

Mr. PERKINS. Were they United States officers?

Mr. CHANEY. They were originally enlisted as Indiana Militia.

Mr. PERKINS. Were they United States officers or state officers, because it makes a great difference whether the Government should pay this claim, as the gentleman will see, as to whether these men were United States officers or were not.

Mr. CHANEY. These men that were sued were in the service of the United States in fact. They commanded Indiana Militia, however, but the men actually sued were detailed by General Hovey from the service in his command, and they commanded Indiana Militia in the work they did.

Mr. PERKINS. Were they officers being paid by the United States Government?

Mr. CHANEY. They received their compensation as United States officers.

Mr. PERKINS. When they got through this arresting business, what did they do? Did they go back to fight, or stay in the State of Indiana?

Mr. CHANEY. They stayed in the United States service until their enlistment expired, and then they quit with others, when the time of service expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Were these lawyers ever paid their bill?

Mr. CHANEY. No.

Mr. PERKINS. Why did not the officers pay them?

Mr. CHANEY. Well, it was considered by General Hovey and these men that it was the duty of the United States to pay them. They were in the service of the United States and acted under United States orders.

Mr. PERKINS. Why did not the officers have the United States attorney for them, if it was government work?

Mr. CHANEY. That I do not know; I could not answer that question.

Mr. PERKINS. There are United States attorneys whose business it is to defend any proper act by a government employee; that is what they are for.

Mr. MANN. But they were not government employees.

Mr. PERKINS. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. CHANEY. One of the officers who arrested these Knights of the Golden Circle, and who was sued for civil damages, was a lieutenant in a company of General Hovey's regiment. He was one of the officers who was sued, and they got judgment against him in one case in the sum of $25,000, but through the efforts of these lawyers they succeeded in having the judgment reopened, and the case was eventually compromised and dismissed.

Mr. PERKINS. Then was it found that these arrests were really illegal arrests?

Mr. CHANEY. The gentleman understands the history of the Millikan arrests, which was exactly like this.

Mr. PERKINS. No; I do not understand it at all.

Mr. CHANEY. These arrests were regarded as sufficiently illegal to allow the governor of Indiana to recommend they be dropped, and the men arrested were allowed to go free, although Mr. Millikan was prosecuted and condemned and ordered to be shot. He was afterwards pardoned.

Mr. PERKINS. Then, as I understand, these officers did make some illegal arrests?

Mr. CHANEY. They made the arrests they did make under orders of General Hovey, who was regularly employed in the United States service as a brigadier-general.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, when the lawyers relieved them from these claims why were not they under some obligation to pay the lawyers out of their own pockets?

Mr. CHANEY. I suspect that might have been done——

Mr. PERKINS. I approve of the sentiment.

Mr. CHANEY (continuing). But they were under military orders; and in so acting, they acted under the direction of the United States, and why should not the United States pay for the defense of their own men? The only question, Mr. Chairman, there was about this matter of attorneys' fees in the first place was whether there was a legal obligation resting upon the United States to pay, and this is a conclusion of the committee upon the case:

That while there is a lack of evidence showing an original employment by the Secretary of War, the evidence is conclusive that on a presentation of these claims to him, with full explanations of all the circumstances, they were by him accepted, recognized, and approved as just and legal claims against the United States, based upon and due and owing on account of valuable professional services rendered in the interest and for the benefit of the General Government at a critical period in its history. Such recognition and approval is yet more fully shown than appears by the House report by two communications from the office of the Judge-Advocate-General to J. W. Smith, esq., of Washington, D. C., the attorney for claimants, and dated, respectively, June 11 and June 15, 1875, as follows:

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. CHANEY. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. If these claims were claims that possess any validity against the Government, how did it happen that they were not recognized at the time? How is it that it has taken forty years to establish their validity?

Mr. CHANEY. They have been here for forty years trying to establish them.

Mr. PERKINS. Why were they not allowed at the time?

Mr. CHANEY. The reason they were not allowed at the time is the Adjutant-General did not find within his appropriations any money out which he could pay the claims.

Mr. PERKINS. Why have they been forty years establishing them?

Mr. CHANEY. Because Congress would not listen to the claims and would not pay them.

Mr. PERKINS. Has there been any adverse report?

Mr. CHANEY. There has been no adverse report. This case was passed on by one or the other House every time Congress has met in forty years. Why, the War Department on the 15th of June, 1875, approved the claim and sent it over to the Treasury Department for audit and allowance, and if Congress had then acted and appropriated the money the matter would have been settled at that time. The report of the committee is favorable to the payment of this claim, and I also want to call attention to the fact that since the report of the committee there has been printed in connection with that report a letter of the Attorney-General of the United States, dated March 20, 1906, which is here, in which he says:

It seems to me the claim is meritorious and should receive the favorable consideration of Congress. Doubtless, had the funds been available—

I would like for the gentleman from New York to listen to this; this is a statement of the Attorney-General about this case——

Mr. PERKINS. I will be very glad to hear it.

Mr. CHANEY (reading):

Doubtless, had the funds been available, this claim would have been paid, as shown by the correspondence above referred to between the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General in 1875. Why the claim was not settled by the Third Auditor of the Treasury when referred to him on November 24, 1875, is not apparent. Presumably there were no funds out of which the claim could be paid. It would seem, therefore, that justice in this case has been long delayed and that Congress should grant the relief sought.

That is in a letter dated March 20, 1906, and has been printed since the committee made its report and the bill went on the calendar of the House for consideration. In all respects, Mr. Chairman, this is a most worthy claim, and the fact that it has not been paid in these forty years is no discredit to the claim. It is rather a discredit to Congress for not recognizing the justice and equity of the claim and paying it long ago.

Mr. Coulson spent more money in trying to have his claim recognized and paid before the War Department and Treasury Department and before Congress than half of the fund, if now appropriated, would amount to. And his estate, since his death, have endeavored to have the claim paid and have been industrious about it. They have not neglected it in any respect, and there has not been a Congress in forty years, I am sure, but that has had this case under consideration. And now that the estate of Mr. Coulson turned out to be very small and his family were left without any means scarcely, it ought not to be further delayed, but ought to be paid to his heirs. I submit it ought to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the first place I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] to the amendment proposed by the committee. The original bill provided for the payment of this claim to "Mary A. Coulson, executrix and sole legatee of Sewell Coulson." I suppose the committee did not wish to take the responsibility of stating that she was the person to receive the money, and thereupon they struck out the words "Mary A. Coulson, executrix," and inserted "legal representative."

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Chairman, with the gentleman's permission, the committee made the changes spoken of there at my suggestion, because Mrs. Coulson died the day I went down there to speak to them about it.

Mr. MANN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it did not strike out quite enough. I should also have stricken out the words "and sole legatee."

Mr. CHANEY. I suspect that is right. That ought to be stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Now, on the merits of the bill, clearly, unless it goes to Mary A. Coulson, you would leave it in the end, if you passed the bill, so that you would have to pass another bill to decide who got the money. While I do not believe the claim ought to be paid, I believe that if Congress goes to the trouble of passing it, it ought not to have to pass another bill to get the money paid.

Mr. HASKINS. That matter is settled in the Treasury Department. They do not pay any money on appropriation until they know who shall receive it.

Mr. MANN. We should have to pass another bill to determine whether the relatives or the sole legatee should get the money.

Mr. CHANEY. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, for my part, and will add that to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY] has made quite a full explanation of this bill and, I think, a very fair explanation, with naturally the bias which attaches to the bill from his championship of it. The facts are that Samuel McCormick was the captain of a company of state militia in Indiana in 1864, which was organized and mustered in in his county under and in accordance with an act of the state legislature of Indiana. He had various persons in his company. He was in no sense in the employ or service of the United States. It is stated that by direction of Brigadier-General Hovey this captain of the company and his company made several arrests. Upon these five civil suits were commenced. One of these suits was instituted by Andrew Humphreys, who had been apprehended and brought to trial by military commission with Milligan, of some notoriety, and others for treasonable conspiracy. This man claimed $50,000 for false arrest. Various other claims are made. One suit was for assault and battery. The legislature of Indiana had provided for the organization of this company and had provided for the payment of legal services whenever their companies or the officials or members of their companies were sued in civil suit. The State of Indiana had undertaken to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees and other expenses in connection with the defense of these suits.

The attorney in this case, who now has a bill against the Government remaining in the sum of $953, was only one of the attorneys in these cases. He was paid a portion of his fee by the State of Indiana. Either Mr. Coulson was employed and entitled to be paid by the State of Indiana or possibly by the United States. Certainly he was not employed both by the State of Indiana and the Government of the United States. The Attorney-General, whose letter has just recently been printed, a copy of which I do not have on my desk, as somebody borrowed it a moment ago——

Mr. CHANEY. I will furnish the gentleman a copy.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman gave me a copy of it. The Attorney-General himself in his letter does not say that this man was employed or had any right to consider that he was employed by the United States. On the contrary, as I understand it, the Attorney-General says that he has no authority to consider that he was employed by the United States.

Now, does the State of Indiana owe nothing to the Government? If there be any claim remaining for attorney's fees in this case, why does not the claimant go to the legislature of Indiana? There was considerable unrest in Indiana. Indiana did have trouble during the war. It had its great war governor, who was making efforts to stamp out sedition and rebellion in that State. But does the State of Indiana expect the United States to pay all the expenses, and for everything that in any way related to the civil war? These attorneys were not employed by the United States. The officials of the United States had no authority to employ them. We had our district attorneys, we had our regular officials in the locality of the War Department, who were entitled to defend these men if an action had been brought against an officer of the United States Army. These people were not in the employ of the army; they might just as well now propose to go out and propose to pay an attorney for a man who had been insulted because he stated to another man that he was a "Copperhead." There is absolutely very little difference in the case. The matter was passed upon long ago, with all the facts fresh and green in the memory of those who were interested; with the papers fresh upon the desks of the officers of the United States; and in 1881 the Auditor for the War Department decided:

> The parties to whom these professional services were rendered were not in the service of the United States, but were officers and soldiers of the State of Indiana. It does not appear by whom these claimants were retained, but it does appear that part payments on account of these services were made and received from a fund provided by the State of Indiana.

Now, there is no more occasion for paying this claim than there is for paying a claim incurred by any member of the National Guard in any of the States of the Union to-day. These people were officers and soldiers solely of the State of Indiana. They were not subject to the control of the United States. They had refused to enlist in the service of the United States at a time when the United States were in need of every soldier they could obtain.

These men served in the State of Indiana. They were home-stayers, doing good service undoubtedly, and probably had good reasons for staying at home. They incurred this trouble and the State of Indiana undertook to protect them. There never was any trial that did not result in a decision in their favor. It is probable that these services were well rendered. Mr. Coulson was the original attorney of record, and when the case went into the Supreme Court the firm with which ex-President Harrison, I think, was connected became attorneys with him. I do not doubt myself that additional compensation of some kind should have been paid to Coulson. I do not propose to pass in any way my own judgment as to the amount of professional fees, but I think that these people ought to have gone to the State of Indiana, by whom they were employed, who undertook to pay them, instead of considering that every mendicant can come before the Congress of the United States and obtain money on the plea of charity instead of being taken care of by the States who have involved the expense and who ought to pay the bill.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Coulson was paid by the State of Indiana, as appears from the letters of the Assistant Attorney-General, $550, and in the letter of the Auditor of the Treasury Department the paragraph following that which was read by the gentleman from Illinois reads thus:

> If, as appears very probable, the matters in respect to which the services were rendered were of importance to the United States, it may be highly proper for the General Government to assume the burden of compensating these claimants; but only Congress can assume for the United States an equitable duty not based upon a legal obligation.

No one pretends that this is a legal obligation of the United States, but it is fair and equitable that Mrs. Coulson, or the legal representatives of Mrs. Coulson, should be compensated.

Mr. CHANEY. I suggest that those additional words suggested by the gentleman from Illinois shall be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend by striking out the words "and sole legatee."

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF SARAH J. MONTGOMERY, DECEASED.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 13712) for the relief of the legal representatives of Sarah J. Montgomery, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

